(2) Subparagraph (A) of section 216(c)(2) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by striking out "be equal to" and all that follows down through the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "be equal to the greater of the statutory reserve for such contract (adjusted as provided in subparagraph (B)) or the net surrender value of such contract (as defined in section 807(e)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954)."

(3) Subparagraph (B) of section 216(c)(2) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended—

(A) by striking out "statutory reserves" and inserting in lieu thereof "opening and closing statutory reserves", and

(B) by striking out "under section 805(c)(1) of such Code" and inserting in lieu thereof "under the principles of section 805(c)(1) of such Code".

(d) SPECIAL RULE WHERE REINSURER NOT USING CALENDAR YEAR AS TAXABLE YEAR.—Subparagraph (A) of section 216(b)(3) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "For purposes of this subparagraph, if the reinsurer's taxable year is not a calendar year, the first day of the reinsurer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1983, shall be substituted for 'January 1, 1984' each place it appears."

(e) CLARIFICATION OF EFFECT OF FRESH START ON EARNINGS AND PROFITS.—Paragraph (1) of section 216(b) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "The preceding sentence shall apply for purposes of computing the earnings and profits of any insurance company for its 1st taxable year beginning in 1984. The preceding sentence shall be applied by substituting '1985' for '1984' in the case of an insurance company which is a member of a controlled group (as defined in section 806(d)(3)), the common parent of which is a company having its principal place of business in Alabama and incorporated in Delaware on November 29, 1979."

(f) TREATMENT OF SECTION 818(c) ELECTIONS MADE BY CERTAIN ACQUIRED COMPANIES.—Paragraph (4) of section 216(b) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) SECTION 818(C) ELECTIONS MADE BY CERTAIN ACQUIRED COMPANIES.—If the case of any corporation—

"(i) which made an election under such section 818(c) before September 28, 1983, and

"(ii) which was acquired in a qualified stock purchase (as defined in section 338(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) before December 31, 1983, the fact that such corporation is treated as a new corporation under section 338 of such Code shall not result in the election described in clause (i) not applying to such new corporation."

SEC. 1823. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 217 OF THE ACT.

(a) SPECIAL RULE FOR COMPANIES USING NET LEVEL RESERVE METHOD ON CERTAIN CONTRACTS.—Subsection (n) of section 217 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (relating to special rule for companies using net level reserve method for noncancellable accident and health insurance contracts) is amended to read as follows:

"(n) SPECIAL RULE FOR COMPANIES USING NET LEVEL RESERVE METHOD FOR NONCANCELLABLE ACCIDENT AND HEALTH INSURANCE CONTRACTS.—A company shall be treated as meeting the requirements of section 807(d)(3)(A)(iii) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by this Act, with respect to any directly-written noncancellable accident and health insurance contract (whether under existing or new plans of insurance) for any taxable year if—

"(1) such company—

"(A) was using the net level reserve method to compute at least 99 percent of its statutory reserves on such contracts as of December 31, 1982, and

"(B) received more than half its total direct premiums in 1982 from directly-written noncancellable accident and health insurance,

"(2) after December 31, 1983, and through such taxable year, such company has continuously used the net level reserve method for computing at least 99 percent of its tax and statutory reserves on such contracts, and

"(3) for any such contract for which the company does not use the net level reserve method, such company uses the same method for computing tax reserves as such company uses for computing its statutory reserves."

(b) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN COMPANIES ISSUING MORTGAGE INSURANCE.—Section 217 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(o) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN COMPANIES ISSUING MORTGAGE INSURANCE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraphs (1) and (2)(B) of section 809(h) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall not apply to a qualified stock life insurance company.

"(2) QUALIFIED STOCK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified stock life insurance company' means any stock life insurance company—

"(A) at least 90 percent of the stock of which is owned by a qualified mutual life insurance company, and

"(B) whose insurance business consists substantially of the direct writing of mortgage insurance or the reinsurance of mortgage insurance.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'mortgage insurance' means insurance issued in whole or in part for the purposes of extinguishing outstanding indebtedness owed by the individuals insured.

"(3) QUALIFIED MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified mutual life insurance company' means a company originally incorporated as an assessment company in 1880 and reincorporated in Minnesota in 1901 as a mutual insurance company.

"(4) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(A) QUALIFIED STOCK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY NOT TREATED AS AMONG 50 LARGEST.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall exclude any qualified stock life insurance company from the group determined under section 809(d)(4)(C) of such Code.

"(B) NO DEDUCTION FOR POLICYHOLDER DIVIDENDS.—No deduction shall be allowed under section 805(a)(3) to any qualified stock life insurance company.

"(5) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This subsection shall be effective as of January 1, 1984, and, in determining the tax on the equity base of a qualified mutual life insurance company for 1984, 1985, and 1986, the equity base of such company (as determined under section 809(b) of such Code) shall be reduced as of the close of taxable years 1983, 1984, and 1985, by the amount of capital and surplus of its qualified stock insurance company as of December 31, 1986."

SEC. 1824. AMENDMENT RELATED TO SECTION 218 OF THE ACT.

Section 218 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is hereby repealed.

SEC. 1825. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 221 OF THE ACT.

(a) COMPUTATIONAL RULES.—

(1) Paragraph (1) of section 7702(e) (relating to computational rules) is amended—

(A) by striking out "shall be no earlier than" in subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof "shall be deemed to be no earlier than",

(B) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (B),

(C) by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (D) and inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) the death benefits shall be deemed to be provided until the maturity date determined by taking into account subparagraph (B), and", and

(D) by striking out "the maturity date described in subparagraph (B)" in subparagraph (D) (as so redesignated) and inserting in lieu thereof "the maturity date determined by taking into account subparagraph (B)".

(2) Subparagraph (C) of section 7702(b)(2) is amended by striking out "subparagraphs (A) and (C)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subparagraphs (A) and (D)".

(3) Section 7702(e)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than subsection (d))" after "section".

(4) Section 7702(e)(2) is amended—

(A) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (A),

(B) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (B), and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and "and", and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) for purposes of the cash value accumulation test, the death benefit increases may be taken into account if the contract—

"(i) has an initial death benefit of $5,000 or less,

"(ii) provides for a fixed predetermined annual increase not to exceed 10 percent of the initial death benefit or 8 percent of the death benefit at the end of the preceding year, and

"(iii) was purchased to cover payment of burial expenses or in connection with prearranged funeral expenses.

For purposes of subparagraph (C), the initial death benefit of a contract shall be determined by treating all contracts issued to the same contract owner as 1 contract."

(b) CLARIFICATION OF SECTION 7702(f)(7).—

(1) Paragraph (7) of section 7702(f) (relating to adjustments) is amended to read as follows:

"(7) ADJUSTMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If there is a change in the benefits under (or in other terms of) the contract which was not reflected in any previous determination or adjustment made under this section, there shall be proper adjustments in future determinations made under this section.

"(B) RULE FOR CERTAIN CHANGES DURING FIRST 15 YEARS.—If—

"(i) a change described in subparagraph (A) reduces benefits under the contract,

"(ii) the change occurs during the 15-year period beginning on the issue date of the contract, and

"(iii) a cash distribution is made to the policyholder as a result of such change, section 72 (other than subsection (e)(5) thereof) shall apply to such cash distribution to the extent it does not exceed the recapture ceiling determined under subparagraph (C) or (D) (whichever applies).

"(C) RECAPTURE CEILING WHERE CHANGE OCCURS DURING FIRST 5 YEARS.—If the change referred to in subparagraph (B)(ii) occurs during the 5-year period beginning on the issue date of the contract, the recapture ceiling is—

"(i) in the case of a contract to which subsection (a)(1) applies, the excess of—

"(I) the cash surrender value of the contract, immediately before the reduction, over

"(II) the net single premium (determined under subsection (b)), immediately after the reduction, or

"(ii) in the case of a contract to which subsection (a)(2) applies, the greater of—

"(I) the excess of the aggregate premiums paid under the contract, immediately before the reduction, over the guideline premium limitation for the contract (determined under subsection (c)(2), taking into account the adjustment described in subparagraph (A)), or

"(II) the excess of the cash surrender value of the contract, immediately before the reduction, over the cash value corridor of subsection (d) (determined immediately after the reduction).

"(D) RECAPTURE CEILING WHERE CHANGE OCCURS AFTER 5TH YEAR AND BEFORE 16TH YEAR.—If the change referred to in subparagraph (B) occurs after the 5-year period referred to under subparagraph (C), the recapture ceiling is the excess of the cash surrender value of the contract, immediately before the reduction, over the cash value corridor of subsection (d) (determined immediately after the reduction and whether or not subsection (d) applies to the contract).

"(E) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN DISTRIBUTIONS MADE IN ANTICIPATION OF BENEFIT REDUCTIONS.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, subparagraph (B) shall apply also to any distribution made in anticipation of a reduction in benefits under the contract. For purposes of the preceding sentence, appropriate adjustments shall be made in the provisions of subparagraphs (C) and (D); and any distribution which reduces the cash surrender value of a contract and which is made within 2 years before a reduction in benefits under the contract shall be treated as made in anticipation of such reduction."

(2) Subparagraph (A) of section 7702(f)(1) (defining premiums paid) is amended by striking out "less any other amounts received" and inserting in lieu thereof "less any excess premiums with respect to which there is a distribution described in subparagraph (B) or (E) of paragraph (7) and any other amounts received".

(c) CLARIFICATION OF TREATMENT OF CONTRACTS WHICH DO NOT MEET TEST.—Clause (ii) of section 7702(g)(1)(B) (defining income on the contract) is amended to read as follows:

"(ii) the premiums paid (as defined in subsection (f)(1)) under the contract during the taxable year."

(d) TREATMENT OF FLEXIBLE PREMIUM CONTRACTS ISSUED DURING 1984 WHICH MEET NEW REQUIREMENTS.—Subsection (b) of section 221 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (relating to 1-year extension of flexible premium contract provisions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) TRANSITIONAL RULE.—Any flexible premium contract issued during 1984 which meets the requirements of section 7702 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (as added by this section) shall be treated as meeting the requirements of section 101(f) of such Code."

(e) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN CONTRACTS ISSUED BEFORE OCTOBER 1, 1984.—Clause (i) of section 221(d)(2)(C) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (relating to certain contracts issued before October 1, 1984) is amended—

(1) by striking out "in clause (i) thereof" in the material preceding subclause (I), and

(2) by striking out "any mortality charges" in subclause (I) and inserting in lieu thereof "any mortality charges and any initial excess interest guarantees".

(f) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN CONTRACTS AS LIFE INSURANCE CONTRACTS UNDER APPLICABLE LAW.—For purposes of section 7702(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, a contract shall not fail to be treated as a life insurance contract under the applicable law merely because the contract is provided under a church plan defined in section 414(e).

SEC. 1826. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 222 OF THE ACT.

(a) EXCEPTION FOR ANNUITY CONTRACTS WHICH ARE PART OF QUALIFIED PLANS.—Subsection (s) of section 72 (relating to required distributions where holder dies before entire interest is distributed) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) EXCEPTION FOR ANNUITY CONTRACTS WHICH ARE PART OF QUALIFIED PLANS.—This subsection shall not apply to any annuity contract—

"(A) which is provided—

"(i) under a plan described in section 401(a) which includes a trust exempt from tax under section 501, or

"(ii) under a plan described in section 403(a),

"(B) which is described in section 403(b), or

"(C) which is an individual retirement annuity or provided under an individual retirement account or annuity."

(b) SPECIAL RULES WHERE HOLDER IS NOT INDIVIDUAL, ETC.—

(1) Subsection (s) of section 72 (relating to required distributions where holder dies before entire interest is distributed) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(6) SPECIAL RULE WHERE HOLDER IS CORPORATION OR OTHER NON-INDIVIDUAL.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this subsection, if the holder of the contract is not an individual, the primary annuitant shall be treated as the holder of the contract.

"(B) PRIMARY ANNUITANT.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'primary annuitant' means the individual, the events in the life of whom are of primary importance in affecting the timing or amount of the payout under the contract.

"(7) TREATMENT OF CHANGES IN PRIMARY ANNUITANT WHERE HOLDER OF CONTRACT IS NOT AN INDIVIDUAL.—For purposes of this subsection, in the case of a holder of an annuity contract which is not an individual, if there is a change in a primary annuity (as defined in paragraph (6)(B)), such change shall be treated as the death of the holder."

(2) Paragraph (1) of section 72(s) is amended by striking out "the holder of such contract" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "any holder of such contract".

(3) Paragraph (4) of section 72(e) (relating to amounts not received as annuities) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) TREATMENT OF TRANSFERS WITHOUT ADEQUATE CONSIDERATION.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—If an individual who holds an annuity contract transfers it without full and adequate consideration, such individual shall be treated as receiving an amount equal to the excess of—

"(I) the cash surrender value of such contract at the time of transfer, over

"(II) the investment in such contract at such time, under the contract as an amount not received as an annuity.

"(ii) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN TRANSFERS BETWEEN SPOUSES OR FORMER SPOUSES.—Clause (i) shall not apply to any transfer to which section 1041(a) (relating to transfers of property between spouses or incident to divorce) applies.

"(iii) ADJUSTMENT TO INVESTMENT IN CONTRACT OF TRANSFEREE.—If under clause (i) an amount is included in the gross income of the transferor of an annuity contract, the investment in the contract of the transferee in such contract shall be increased by the amount so included."

(4) The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to contracts issued after the date which is 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act in taxable years ending after such date.

(c) CLARIFICATION OF EXCEPTION FOR DISTRIBUTION AFTER DEATH.—Effective with respect to distributions made after November 7, 1986, subparagraph (B) of section 72(q)(2) (relating to 5-percent penalty for premature distributions from annuity contracts) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) made on or after the death of the holder (or, where the holder is not an individual, the death of the primary annuitant (as defined in subsection (s)(6)(B))),".

(d) EXCEPTION FOR ANNUITIES WHICH ARE QUALIFIED FUNDING ASSETS.—Paragraph (2) of section 72(q) (relating to 5-percent penalty for premature distributions from annuity contracts) is amended by striking out "or" at the end of subparagraph (E), by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (F) and inserting in lieu thereof ", or", and by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(G) any annuity contract which is a qualified funding asset (as defined in section 130(d))."

CHAPTER 5—AMENDMENTS RELATED TO TITLE V OF THE ACT

SEC. 1851. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO WELFARE BENEFIT PLAN PROVISIONS.

(a) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 511 OF THE ACT.—

(1) TREATMENT OF PLANS FOR INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.—Paragraph (1) of section 419(g) (relating to extension to plans for independent contractors) is amended by striking out "such a plan" and inserting in lieu thereof "such a relationship".

(2) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 419A(d).—

(A) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 415.—Paragraph (2) of section 419A(d) (relating to coordination with section 415) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Subparagraph (B) of section 415(c)(1) shall not apply to any amount treated as an annual addition under the preceding sentence."

(B) SEPARATE ACCOUNT REQUIREMENTS APPLY ONLY WHERE THERE IS PRE-FUNDING.—Paragraph (1) of section 419A(d) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"The requirements of this paragraph shall apply to the first taxable year for which a reserve is taken into account under subsection (c)(2) and to all subsequent taxable years."

(3) CLARIFICATION OF SECTION 419A(e).—

(A) Subsection (e) of section 419A is amended to read as follows:

"(e) SPECIAL LIMITATIONS ON RESERVES FOR MEDICAL BENEFITS OR LIFE INSURANCE BENEFITS PROVIDED TO RETIRED EMPLOYEES.—

"(1) RESERVE MUST BE NONDISCRIMINATORY.—No reserve may be taken into account under subsection (c)(2) for post-retirement medical benefits or life insurance benefits to be provided to covered employees unless the plan meets the requirements of section 505(b) with respect to such benefits (whether or not such requirements apply to such plan). The preceding sentence shall not apply to any plan maintained pursuant to an agreement between employee representatives and 1 or more employers if the Secretary finds that such agreement is a collective bargaining agreement and that post-retirement medical benefits or life insurance benefits were the subject of good faith bargaining between such employee representatives and such employer or employers.

"(2) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF LIFE INSURANCE BENEFITS.—Life insurance benefits shall not be taken into account under subsection (c)(2) to the extent the aggregate amount of such benefits to be provided with respect to the employee exceeds $50,000."

(B) Subsection (e) of section 419A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (as amended by subparagraph (A)) shall not apply to any group-term life insurance to the extent that the amendments made by section 223(a) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 do not apply to such insurance by reason of paragraph (2) of section 223(d) of such Act.

(4) TREATMENT OF COLLECTIVELY BARGAINED PLANS.—Paragraph (5) of section 419A(f) (relating to higher limit in case of collectively bargained plans) is amended by striking out "welfare benefit fund established under" and inserting in lieu thereof "welfare benefit fund maintained pursuant to".

(5) CLARIFICATION OF ACTUARIAL CERTIFICATION REQUIREMENT.—Subparagraph (A) of section 419A(c)(5) (relating to special limitation where no actuarial certification) is amended by striking out "under paragraph (1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "under this subsection".

(6) AGGREGATION RULES.—Paragraph (1) of section 419A(h) (relating to aggregation rules) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) AGGREGATION OF FUNDS.—

"(A) MANDATORY AGGREGATION.—For purposes of subsections (c)(4), (d)(2), and (e)(2), all welfare benefit funds of an employer shall be treated as 1 fund.

"(B) PERMISSIVE AGGREGATION FOR PURPOSES NOT SPECIFIED IN SUBPARAGRAPH (A).—For purposes of this section (other than the provisions specified in subparagraph (A)), at the election of the employer, 2 or more welfare benefit funds of such employer may be treated as 1 fund."

(7) CLARIFICATION OF ADJUSTMENTS FOR EXISTING RESERVES.—Paragraph (7) of section 419A(f) (relating to adjustments for existing excess reserves) is amended by striking out subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(C) EXISTING EXCESS RESERVE.—For purposes of computing the increase under subparagraph (A) for any taxable year, the term 'existing excess reserve' means the excess (if any) of—

"(i) the amount of assets set aside at the close of the first taxable year ending after July 18, 1984, for purposes described in subsection (a), over

"(ii) the account limit determined under this section (without regard to this paragraph) for the taxable year for which such increase is being computed.

"(D) FUNDS TO WHICH PARAGRAPH APPLIES.—This paragraph shall apply only to a welfare benefit fund which, as of July 18, 1984, had assets set aside for purposes described in subsection (a)."

(8)(A) CLARIFICATION OF FUND.—Subsection (e) of section 419 (defining welfare benefit funds) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) TREATMENT OF AMOUNTS HELD PURSUANT TO CERTAIN INSURANCE CONTRACTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding paragraph (3)(C), the term 'fund' shall not include amounts held by an insurance company pursuant to an insurance contract if—

"(i) such contract is a life insurance contract described in section 264(a)(1), or

"(ii) such contract is a qualified nonguaranteed contract.

"(B) QUALIFIED NONGUARANTEED CONTRACT.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified nonguaranteed contract' means any insurance contract (including a reasonable premium stabilization reserve held thereunder) to the extent that—

"(I) there is no guarantee of a renewal of such contract at guaranteed premium rates, and

"(II) the only amounts to which the employer or employees are entitled (directly or indirectly) at the time the premiums are paid as experience rated refunds or policy dividends are not guaranteed and are substantially unrelated (directly or indirectly) to the amount of welfare benefits paid to (or on behalf of) the employees of the employer and their beneficiaries, the administrative expenses incurred by (or on behalf of the insurance company in providing welfare benefits to (or on behalf of) the employees of the employer and their beneficiaries, and to the investment experience of the insurance company with respect to amounts contributed by or held for the employer.

"(ii) LIMITATION.—In the case of any qualified nonguaranteed contract, subparagraph (A) shall not apply unless the amount of any experience rated refund or policy dividend payable to an employer with respect to a policy year is treated by the employer as received or accrued in the taxable year for which the contributions to which such refund or dividend relates were deductible."

(B) EFFECTIVE DATE OF REGULATIONS.—Except in the case of a reserve for post-retirement medical or life insurance benefits and any other arrangement between an insurance company and an employer under which the employer has a contractual right to a refund or dividend based solely on the experience of such employer, any account held for an employer by any person and defined as a fund in regulations issued pursuant to section 419(e)(3)(C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall be considered a "fund" no earlier than 6 months following the date such regulations are published in final form.

(9) CLARIFICATION OF TAXES PAID BY EMPLOYER ON INCOME OF CERTAIN WELFARE BENEFIT FUNDS.—Subsection (g) of section 419A (relating to employer taxed on income of welfare benefit funds in certain cases) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 419.—If any amount is included in the gross income of an employer for any taxable year under paragraph (1) with respect to any welfare benefit fund—

"(A) the amount of the tax imposed by this chapter which is attributable to the amount so included shall be treated as a contribution paid to such welfare benefit fund on the last day of such taxable year, and

"(B) the tax so attributable shall be treated as imposed on the fund for purposes of section 419(c)(4)(A)."

(10) AMENDMENTS TO TAX ON UNRELATED BUSINESS INCOME.—

(A) Clause (i) of section 512(a)(3)(E) is amended by striking out "determined under section 419A(c)" and inserting in lieu thereof "determined under section 419A (without regard to subsection (f)(6) thereof)".

(B) Subparagraph (E) of section 512(a)(3) is amended by striking out clause (ii) and by redesignating clauses (iii) and (iv) as clauses (ii) and (iii), respectively.

(C) Clause (ii) of section 512(a)(3)(E) (as redesignated by subparagraph (B)) is amended—

(i) by striking out "a existing reserve" in subclause (I) and inserting in lieu thereof "an existing reserve", and

(ii) by striking out subclause (II) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(II) For purposes of subclause (II), the term 'reserve for post-retirement medical or life insurance benefits' means the greater of the amount of assets set aside for purposes of post-retirement medical or life insurance benefits to be provided to covered employees as of the close of the last plan year ending before the date of the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 or on July 18, 1984,".

(D) Clause (iii) of section 512(a)(3)(E) (as redesignated by subparagraph (B)) is amended by striking out "paragraph shall not" and inserting in lieu thereof "subparagraph shall not".

(11) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO TAX ON CERTAIN FUNDED WELFARE BENEFIT PLANS.—Subsection (b) of section 4976 (defining disqualified benefit) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) DISQUALIFIED BENEFIT.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'disqualified benefit' means—

"(A) any post-retirement medical benefit or life insurance benefit provided with respect to a key employee if a separate account is required to be established for such employee under section 419A(d) and such payment is not from such account,

"(B) any post-retirement medical benefit or life insurance benefit provided with respect to an individual in whose favor discrimination is prohibited unless the plan meets the requirements of section 505(b) with respect to such benefit (whether or not such requirements apply to such plan), and

"(C) any portion of a welfare benefit fund reverting to the benefit of the employer.

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR COLLECTIVE BARGAINING PLANS.—Paragraph (1)(B) shall not apply to any plan maintained pursuant to an agreement between employee representatives and 1 or more employers if the Secretary finds that such agreement is a collective bargaining agreement and that the benefits referred to in paragraph (1)(B) were the subject of good faith bargaining between such employee representatives and such employer or employers.

"(3) EXCEPTION FOR NONDEDUCTIBLE CONTRIBUTIONS.—Paragraph (1)(C) shall not apply to any amount attributable to a contribution to the fund which is not allowable as a deduction under section 419 for the taxable year or any prior taxable year (and such contribution shall not be included in any carryover under section 419(d)).

"(4) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN AMOUNTS CHARGED AGAINST EXISTING RESERVE.—Subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) shall not apply to post-retirement benefits charged against an existing reserve for post-retirement medical or life insurance benefits (as defined in section 512(a)(3)(E)) or charged against the income on such reserve."

(12) CLARIFICATION OF EFFECTIVE DATE.—Subsection (e) of section 511 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(6) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO TAX ON UNRELATED BUSINESS INCOME.—The amendments made by subsection (b) shall apply with respect to taxable years ending after December 31, 1985. For purposes of section 15 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, such amendments shall be treated as a change in the rate of a tax imposed by chapter 1 of such Code.

"(7) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO EXCISE TAXES ON CERTAIN WELFARE BENEFIT PLANS.—The amendments made by subsection (c) shall apply to benefits provided after December 31, 1985."

(13) Section 419A(f)(5) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) SPECIAL RULE FOR COLLECTIVE BARGAINED AND EMPLOYEE PAY-ALL PLANS.—No special accounts limits shall apply in the case of any qualified asset account under a separate welfare benefit fund—

"(A) under a collective bargaining agreement, or

"(B) an employee pay-all plan under section 501(c)(9) if—

"(i) such plan has at least 50 employees (determined without regard to subsection (h)(1)), and

"(ii) no employee is entitled to a refund with respect to amounts in the fund, other than a refund based on the experience of the entire fund."

(14) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (2) of section 511(e) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by striking out "and section 514".

(b) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 512 OF THE ACT.—

(1) TRANSITIONAL RULE FOR CERTAIN TAXPAYERS WITH FULLY VESTED VACATION PAY PLANS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any taxpayer—

(i) who maintained a fully vested vacation pay plan where payments are required (or are in fact paid) within 1 year after the accrual of the vacation pay, and in lieu of establishing a suspense account under such section 463, such election shall be treated as a change in the taxpayer's method of accounting and the adjustments required as a result of such change shall be taken into account under section 481 of such Code.

(B) EXTENSION OF TIME FOR MAKING ELECTION.—In the case of any taxpayer who meets the requirements of subparagraph (A)(i), the time for making an election under section 463 of such Code for such taxpayer's 1st taxable year ending after the date of the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 shall not expire before the date 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Clause (ii) of section 404(b)(2)(B) (relating to exceptions for certain benefits) is amended by striking out "to any benefit" and inserting in lieu thereof "any benefit".

(B) Subsection (b) of section 404 is amended—

(i) by striking out "UNFUNDED" in the subsection heading and inserting in lieu thereof "CERTAIN", and

(ii) by striking out "UNFUNDED" in the heading of paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "CERTAIN".

(C) Section 404(a) is amended by striking out "section 162 (relating to trade or business expenses) or section 212 (relating to expenses for the production of income); but, if they satisfy the conditions of either of such sections," and inserting in lieu thereof "this chapter; but, if they would otherwise be deductible,".

(c) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 513 OF THE ACT.—

(1) Paragraph (1) of section 505(a) (relating to certain requirements must be met in case of organizations described in paragraph (9) or (20) of section 501(c)) is amended by striking out "of an employer".

(2) Paragraph (1) of section 505(b) (relating to nondiscrimination requirements) is amended by striking out "as provided in paragraph (2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "as otherwise provided in this subsection".

(3) Subparagraph (B) of section 505(b)(1) is amended by striking out "highly compensated employees" and inserting in lieu thereof "highly compensated individuals".

(4) Paragraph (2) of section 505(a) (relating to exception for collective bargaining agreements) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any organization which is part of a plan maintained pursuant to an agreement between employee representatives and 1 or more employers if the Secretary finds that such agreement is a collective bargaining agreement and that such plan was the subject of good faith bargaining between such employee representatives and such employer or employers."

SEC. 1852. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO PENSION PLAN PROVISIONS.

(a) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 521 OF THE ACT.—

(1) CLARIFICATION THAT DISTRIBUTION FROM INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS OR ANNUITIES MUST BEGIN AT 70½.—

(A) Paragraph (6) of section 408(a) (defining individual retirement account) is amended by striking out "(relating to required distributions)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(without regard to subparagraph (C)(ii) thereof) and the incidental death benefit requirements of section 401(a)".

(B) Paragraph (3) of section 408(b) (defining individual retirement annuity) is amended by striking out "(relating to required distributions)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(without regard to subparagraph (C)(ii) thereof) and the incidental death benefit requirements of section 401(a)".

(2) EXEMPTION OF PRE-1985 ACCUMULATIONS FROM PENALTY ON PREMATURE DISTRIBUTIONS.—

(A) Subparagraph (A) of section 72(m)(5) (relating to penalties applicable to certain amounts received by 5-percent owners) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) This subparagraph shall apply—

"(i) to amounts which—

"(I) are received from a qualified trust described in section 401(a) or under a plan described in section 403(a), and

"(II) are received by a 5-percent owner before such owner attains the age of 59½ years, for any reason other than such owner becoming disabled (within the meaning of paragraph (7) of this section), and

"(ii) to amounts which are received from a qualified trust described in section 401(a) or under a plan described in section 403(a) at any time by a 5-percent owner, or by the successor of such owner, but only to the extent that such amounts are determined (under regulations prescribed by the Secretary) to exceed the benefits provided for such individual under the plan formula.

Clause (i) shall not apply to any amount received by an individual in his capacity as a policyholder of an annuity, endowment, or life insurance contract which is in the nature of a dividend or similar distribution and clause (i) shall not apply to amounts attributable to benefits accrued before January 1, 1985."

(B) Subparagraph (C) of section 72(m)(5) is amended to read as follows:

"(C) For purposes of this paragraph, the term '5-percent owner' means any individual who, at any time during the 5 plan years preceding the plan year ending in the taxable year in which the amount is received, is a 5-percent owner (as defined in section 416(i)(1)(B))."

(C) Paragraph (5) of section 72(m) is amended by striking out "OWNER-EMPLOYEES" in the paragraph heading and inserting in lieu thereof "5-PERCENT OWNERS".

(3) CLARIFICATION OF REQUIRED BEGINNING DATE.—

(A) Subparagraph (C) of section 401(a)(9) (defining required beginning date) is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Clause (ii) shall not apply in the case of an employee who is a 5-percent owner (as defined in section 416(i)(1)(B)) at any time during the 5-plan-year period ending in the calendar year in which the employee attains age 70½. If the employee becomes a 5-percent owner during any subsequent plan year, the required beginning date shall be April 1 of the calendar year following the calendar year in which such subsequent plan year ends."

(B) Subsection (d) of section 409 (relating to employer securities must stay in the plan) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"This subsection shall not apply to any distribution required under section 401(a)(9)."

"(E) BENEFITS NOT TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT IF EMPLOYEE NOT EMPLOYED FOR LAST 5 YEARS.—If any individual has not performed services for the employer maintaining the plan at any time during the 5-year period ending on the determination date, any accrued benefit for such individual (and the account of such individual) shall not be taken into account."

(e) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 525 OF THE ACT.—

(1)(A) Subsection (c) of section 2039 (relating to exception of certain annuity interests created by community property laws) is hereby repealed.

(B) The amendment made by subparagraph (A) shall apply to estates of decedents dying after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2)(A) Section 2517 (relating to certain annuities under qualified plans) is hereby repealed.

(B) The table of sections for subchapter B of chapter 12 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 2517.

(C) Subsection (e) of section 406 is amended by striking out paragraph (5).

(D) Subsection (e) of section 407 is amended by striking out paragraph (5).

(E) The amendments made by this paragraph shall apply to transfers after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) Section 525(b) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) IRREVOCABLE ELECTION.—For purposes of paragraph (2) and section 245(c) of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, an individual who—

"(A) separated from service before January 1, 1982, and

"(B) meets the requirements of such paragraph or such section other than the requirement that there be an irrevocable election, shall be treated as having made an irrevocable election within the time prescribed with respect to a form of benefit if such individual does not change such form of benefit before death."

(f) AMENDMENT RELATED TO SECTION 526 OF THE ACT.—Paragraph (2) of section 526(d) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by striking out "paragraph (6)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraph (7)".

(g) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 527 OF THE ACT.—

(1) Paragraph (3) of section 401(k) (relating to application of participation and discrimination standards) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) A cash or deferred arrangement shall be treated as meeting the requirements of subsection (a)(4) with respect to contributions if the requirements of subparagraph (A)(ii) are met."

(2) Subparagraph (A) of section 401(k)(3) is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "If an employee is a participant under 2 or more cash or deferred arrangements of the employer, for purposes of determining the deferral percentage with respect to such employee, all such cash or deferred arrangements shall be treated as 1 cash or deferred arrangement."

(3) Subparagraph (C) of section 401(k)(2) is amended by striking out "are nonforfeitable" and inserting in lieu thereof "is nonforfeitable".

(h) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 528 OF THE ACT.—

(1) Subsection (h) of section 401 (relating to medical, etc., benefits for retired employees and their spouses and dependents) is amended—

(A) by striking out "5-percent owner" each place it appears in paragraph (6) and inserting in lieu thereof "key employee", and

(B) by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"For purposes of paragraph (6), the term 'key employee' means any employee, who at any time during the plan year or any preceding plan year during which contributions were made on behalf of such employee, is or was a key employee as defined in section 416(i)."

(2) Paragraph (1) of section 416(l) (relating to treatment of certain medical benefits) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Subparagraph (B) of subsection (c)(1) shall not apply to any amount treated as an annual addition under the preceding sentence."

(3) Subsection (l) of section 415 is amended by striking out "a defined benefit plan" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "a pension or annuity plan".

(i) AMENDMENT RELATED TO SECTION 558 OF THE ACT.—Section 558 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(1) In the case of an employer who entered into a collective bargaining agreement—

"(A) which was effective on January 12, 1979, and which remained in effect through May 15, 1982, and

"(B) under which contributions to the multiemployer plan were to cease on January 12, 1982, subsection (a)(1) shall be applied by substituting 'January 12, 1982' for 'September 26, 1980'.

"(2) In the case of an employer engaged in the grocery wholesaling business which—

"(A) had ceased all covered operations under the plan before June 30, 1981, and had relocated its operations to a new facility in another State,

"(B) had notified a local union representative on May 16, 1980, that the employer had tentatively decided to discontinue operations and relocate to a new facility in another State, and

"(C) all State and local approvals with respect to construction of and commencement of operations at the new facility had been obtained, a contract for construction had been entered into, and construction of the new facility had begun before September 26, 1980, then subsection (a)(1) shall be applied by substituting 'June 30, 1981' for 'September 26, 1980'."

SEC. 1853. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO FRINGE BENEFIT PROVISIONS.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 132.—

(1) Clause (ii) of section 132(f)(2)(B) (defining dependent children) is amended by striking out "are deceased" and inserting in lieu thereof "are deceased and who has not attained age 25".

(2) Subparagraph (A) of section 132(c)(3) (defining employee discount) is amended by striking out "are provided to the employee by the employer" and inserting in lieu thereof "are provided by the employer to an employee for use by such employee".

(3) Subsection (i) of section 132 (relating to customers not to include employees) is amended by striking out "subsection (c)(2)(B)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (c)(2)".

(b) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 125.—

(1) CLARIFICATION OF BENEFITS WHICH MAY BE PROVIDED UNDER CAFETERIA PLANS.—

(A) Subsections (c) and (d)(1)(B) of section 125 are each amended by striking out "statutory nontaxable benefits" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "qualified benefits".

(B) Subsection (f) of section 125 is amended to read as follows:

"(f) QUALIFIED BENEFITS DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified benefit' means any benefit which, with the application of subsection (a), is not includible in the gross income of the employee by reason of an express provision of this chapter (other than section 117, 124, 127, or 132). Such term includes any group term life insurance which is includible in gross income only because it exceeds the dollar limitation of section 79 and such term includes any other benefit permitted under regulations."

(2) TRANSITIONAL RULE.—Paragraph (5) of section 531(b) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (relating to exception for certain cafeteria plans and benefits) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(D) COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS.—In the case of any cafeteria plan in existence on February 10, 1984, and maintained pursuant to 1 or more collective bargaining agreements between employee representatives and 1 or more employers, the date on which the last of such collective bargaining agreements terminates (determined without regard to any extension thereof agreed to after July 18, 1984) shall be substituted for 'January 1, 1985' in subparagraph (A) and for 'July 1, 1985' in subparagraph (B). For purposes of the preceding sentence, any plan amendment made pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement relating to the plan which amends the plan solely to conform to any requirement added by this section (or any requirement in the regulations under section 125 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 proposed on May 6, 1984) shall not be treated as a termination of such collective bargaining agreement."

(3) SPECIAL RULE WHERE CONTRIBUTIONS OR REIMBURSEMENTS SUSPENDED.—Paragraph (5) of section 531(b) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) SPECIAL RULE WHERE CONTRIBUTIONS OR REIMBURSEMENTS SUSPENDED.—For purposes of subparagraphs (A) and (B), a plan shall not be treated as not continuing to fail to satisfy the rules referred to in such subparagraphs with respect to any benefit provided in the form of a flexible spending arrangement merely because contributions or reimbursements (or both) with respect to such plan were suspended before January 1, 1985."

(c) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 4977.—

(1) Paragraph (2) of section 4977(c) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) at all times on or after January 1, 1984, and before the close of the calendar year involved, substantially all of the employees of the employer were entitled to employee discounts on goods or services provided by the employer in 1 line of business,".

(2) Section 4977 (relating to tax on certain fringe benefits provided by an employer) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) SECTION TO APPLY ONLY TO EMPLOYMENT WITHIN THE UNITED STATES.—Except as otherwise provided in regulations, this section shall apply only with respect to employment within the United States."

(3) For purposes of determining whether the requirements of section 4977(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 are met in the case of an agricultural cooperative incorporated in 1964, there shall not be taken into account employees of a member of the same controlled group as such cooperative which became a member during July 1980.

(d) TREATMENT OF TELEPHONE CONCESSION SERVICE FOR CERTAIN RETIREES.—Section 559 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(e) TELEPHONE SERVICE FOR PRE-DIVESTITURE RETIREES.—In the case of an employee who, by reason of retirement or disability, separated before January 1, 1984, from the service of an entity subject to the modified final judgment—

"(1) all entities subject to the modified final judgment shall be treated as a single employer in the same line of business for purposes of determining whether telephone service provided to the employee is a no-additional-cost service as defined in section 132 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954; and

"(2) payment by an entity subject to the modified final judgment of all or part of the cost of local telephone service provided to the employee by a person other than an entity subject to the modified final judgment (including rebate of the amount paid by the employee for the service and payment to the person providing the service) shall be treated as telephone service provided to the employee by such single employer for purposes of determining whether the telephone service is a no-additional-cost service as defined in section 132 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

For purposes of this subsection, the term 'employee' has the meaning given to such term by section 132(f) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954."

(e) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN LEASED OPERATIONS OF DEPARTMENT STORES.—For purposes of section 132(h)(2)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, a leased section of a department store which, in connection with the offering of beautician services, customarily makes sales of beauty aids in the ordinary course of business shall be treated as engaged in over-the-counter sales of property.

(f) TRANSITIONAL RULES FOR TREATMENT OF CERTAIN REDUCTIONS IN TUITION.—

(1) A tuition reduction plan shall be treated as meeting the requirements of section 117(d)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 if—

(A) such plan would have met the requirements of such section (as amended by this section but without regard to the lack of evidence that benefits under such plan were the subject of good faith bargaining) on the day on which eligibility to participate in the plan was closed,

(B) at all times thereafter, the tuition reductions available under such plan are available on substantially the same terms to all employees eligible to participate in such plan, and

(C) the eligibility to participate in such plan closed on June 30, 1972, June 30, 1974, or December 31, 1975.

(2) For purposes of applying section 117(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to all tuition reduction plans of an employer with at least 1 such plan described in paragraph (1) of this subsection, employees not included in the plan who are included in a unit of employees covered by an agreement that the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate finds to be a collective bargaining agreement between employee representatives and 1 or more employers, if, other than plans described in paragraph (1), there is evidence that such benefits were the subject of good faith bargaining, are excluded from consideration.

SEC. 1854. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS.

(a) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 541.—

(1) Section 1042(a) (relating to nonrecognition of gain) is amended—

(A) by striking out "gain (if any) on such sale" and inserting in lieu thereof "gain (if any) on such sale which would be recognized as long-term capital gain", and

(B) by striking out "the taxpayer elects" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "the taxpayer or executor elects in such form as the Secretary may prescribe".

(2)(A) Section 1042(b)(2) (relating to requirement that employees must own 30 percent of stock) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) PLAN MUST HOLD 30 PERCENT OF STOCK AFTER SALE.—The plan or cooperative referred to in paragraph (1) owns (after application of section 318(a)(4)), immediately after the sale, at least 30 percent of—

"(A) each class of outstanding stock of the corporation (other than stock described in section 1504(a)(4)) which issued the qualified securities, or

"(B) the total value of all outstanding stock of the corporation (other than stock described in section 1504(a)(4)).

(B) The requirement that section 1042(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall be applied with regard to section 318(a)(4) of such Code shall apply to sales after May 6, 1986. The provision that the plan or cooperative may hold 30 percent of each class (or 30 percent of the total value of) of outstanding stock of a corporation shall apply with respect to sales after July 18, 1984.

(3)(A) Section 409 is amended by redesignating subsection (n) as subsection (o) and by inserting after subsection (m) the following new subsection:

"(n) SECURITIES RECEIVED IN CERTAIN TRANSACTIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A plan to which this section applies and an eligible worker-owned cooperative (within the meaning of section 1042(c)) shall provide that no portion of the assets of the plan or cooperative attributable to (or allocable in lieu of) employer securities (within the meaning of section 409(l)) acquired by the plan or cooperative in a sale to which section 1042 applies may accrue (or be allocated directly or indirectly under any plan of the employer meeting the requirements of section 401(a))—

"(A) during the nonallocation period for the benefit of—

"(i) any taxpayer who makes an election under section 1042(a) with respect to employer securities,

"(ii) any individual who is related to the taxpayer (within the meaning of section 267(b)), or

"(B) for the benefit of any other person who owns (after application of section 318(a)) more than 25 percent—

"(i) any class of outstanding stock of the corporation which issued such employer securities, or

"(ii) the total value of any class of outstanding stock of such corporation.

For purposes of subparagraph (B), section 318(a) shall be applied without regard to the employee trust exception in paragraph (2)(B)(i) and the term 'corporation' has the meaning given such term by section 409(l)(4).

"(2) FAILURE TO MEET REQUIREMENTS.—If a plan fails to meet the requirements of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the plan shall be treated as having distributed to the person described in paragraph (1) the amount allocated to the account of such person in violation of paragraph (1) at the time of such allocation,

"(B) the provisions of section 4979A shall apply, and

"(C) the statutory period for the assessment of any tax imposed by section 4979A shall not expire before the later of 3 years from the date—

"(i) of the 1st allocation of employer securities (as defined in section 409(l)) in connection with a sale to the plan to which this subsection applies, or

"(ii) the Secretary is notified of such failure.

"(3) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) LINEAL DESCENDANTS.—Paragraph (1)(A)(ii) shall not apply to any individual if—

"(i) such individual is a lineal descendant of the taxpayer, and

"(ii) all such lineal descendants do not have allocated for their benefit under the plan at any time during the nonallocation period more than 5 percent of the employer securities (or amounts allocated in lieu thereof) held by the plan attributable to an acquisition of such securities in connection with a sale to which this subsection applies by any person related to such descendants (within the meaning of section 267(c)(4)).

"(B) 25-PERCENT SHAREHOLDERS.—A person shall be treated as failing to meet the stock ownership limitation under paragraph (1)(B) if such person fails such limitation—

"(i) at any time during the 1-year period ending on the date of sale of qualified securities to the plan or cooperative, or

"(ii) on the date on which qualified securities are allocated to participants in the plan or cooperative.

"(C) NONALLOCATION PERIOD.—The term 'nonallocation period' means the later of—

"(i) the 10-year period beginning with the date of the sale of the qualified securities, or

"(ii) the 10-year period beginning with the date of the plan allocation attributable to the final payment of acquisition indebtedness incurred in connection with such sale."

(B) Section 1042(b)(3) is amended by striking out paragraph (3) and redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (3).

(C) The amendments made by this paragraph apply to sales of securities after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(4) Section 1042(c)(1) (defining qualified securities) is amended—

(A) by striking out "securities outstanding that are" in subparagraph (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "stock outstanding that is",

(B) by inserting "and" at the end of subparagraph (A), and

(C) by striking out subparagraph (B) and redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (B).

(5)(A) Paragraph (4) of section 1042(c) (defining qualified replacement property) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) QUALIFIED REPLACEMENT PROPERTY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified replacement property' means any security issued by a domestic operating corporation which—

"(i) did not, for the taxable year preceding the taxable year in which such security was purchased, have passive investment income (as defined in section 1362(d)(3)(D)) in excess of 25 percent of the gross receipts of such corporation for such preceding taxable year, and

"(ii) is not the corporation (within the meaning of section 1563(a)(1)) which issued the qualified securities which such security is replacing.

"(B) OPERATING CORPORATION.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'operating corporation' means a corporation more than 50 percent of the assets of which were, at the time the security was purchased or before the close of the replacement period, used in the active conduct of a trade or business. A financial institution described in section 581 or 593 shall be treated as an operating corporation.

"(C) CONTROLLING AND CONTROLLED CORPORATIONS TREATED AS 1 CORPORATION.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of applying this paragraph, if—

"(I) the corporation issuing the security owns stock representing control of 1 or more other corporations,

"(II) 1 or more other corporations own stock representing control of the corporation issuing the security, or

"(III) both,

then all such corporations shall be treated as 1 corporation.

"(ii) CONTROL.—For purposes of clause (i), the term 'control' has the meaning given such term by section 304(c). In determining control, there shall be disregarded any qualified replacement property of the taxpayer with respect to the section 1042 sale being tested.

"(D) SECURITY DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'security' has the meaning given such term by section 165(g)(2), except that such term shall not include any security issued by a government or political subdivision thereof."

(B) If—

(i) before January 1, 1987, the taxpayer acquired any security (as defined in section 165(g)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) issued by a domestic corporation or by any State or political subdivision thereof,

(ii) the taxpayer treated such security as qualified replacement property for purposes of section 1042 of such Code, and

(iii) such property does not meet the requirements of section 1042(c)(4) of such Code (as amended by subparagraph (A)),

then, with respect to so much of any gain which the taxpayer treated as not recognized under section 1042(a) by reason of the acquisition of such property, the replacement period for purposes of such section shall not expire before January 1, 1987.

(6)(A) Section 1042(c) (relating to definitions and special rules) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) SECTION NOT TO APPLY TO GAIN OF C CORPORATION.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to any gain on the sale of any qualified securities which is includible in the gross income of any C corporation."

(B) The amendment made by subparagraph (A) shall apply to sales after March 28, 1985, except that such amendment shall not apply to sales made before July 1, 1985, if made pursuant to a binding contract in effect on March 28, 1985, and at all times thereafter.

(C) The amendment made by subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any sale occurring on December 20, 1985, with respect to which—

(i) a commitment letter was issued by a bank on October 31, 1984, and

(ii) a final purchase agreement was entered into on November 5, 1985.

(D) In the case of a sale on September 27, 1985, with respect to which a preliminary commitment letter was issued by a bank on April 10, 1985, and with respect to which a commitment letter was issued by a bank on June 28, 1985, the amendment made by subparagraph (A) shall apply but such sale shall be treated as having occurred on September 27, 1986.

(7) Section 1042(d) (relating to basis of qualified replacement property) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new flush sentence:

"Any reduction in basis under this subsection shall not be taken into account for purposes of section 1278(a)(2)(A)(ii) (relating to definition of market discount)."

(8)(A) Section 1042 is amended by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (f) and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) RECAPTURE OF GAIN ON DISPOSITION OF QUALIFIED REPLACEMENT PROPERTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If a taxpayer disposes of any qualified replacement property, then, notwithstanding any other provision of this title, gain (if any) shall be recognized to the extent of the gain which was not recognized under subsection (a) by reason of the acquisition by such taxpayer of such qualified replacement property.

"(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR CORPORATIONS CONTROLLED BY THE TAXPAYER.—If—

"(A) a corporation issuing qualified replacement property disposes of a substantial portion of its assets other than in the ordinary course of its trade or business, and

"(B) any taxpayer owning stock representing control (within the meaning of section 304(c)) of such corporation at the time of such disposition holds any qualified replacement property of such corporation at such time, then the taxpayer shall be treated as having disposed of such qualified replacement property at such time.

"(3) RECAPTURE NOT TO APPLY IN CERTAIN CASES.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any transfer of qualified replacement property—

"(A) in any reorganization (within the meaning of section 368) unless the person making the election under subsection (a)(1) owns stock representing control in the acquiring or acquired corporation and such property is substituted basis property in the hands of the transferee,

"(B) by reason of the death of the person making such election,

"(C) by gift, or

"(D) in any transaction to which section 1042(a) applies."

(B) The amendment made by subparagraph (A) shall apply to dispositions after the date of the enactment of this Act, in taxable years ending after such date.

(9)(A) Chapter 43 (relating to qualified pension, etc. plans) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 4979A. TAX ON CERTAIN PROHIBITED ALLOCATIONS OF QUALIFIED SECURITIES.

"(a) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—If there is a prohibited allocation of qualified securities by any employee stock ownership plan or eligible worker-owned cooperative, there is hereby imposed a tax on such allocation equal to 50 percent of the amount involved.

"(b) PROHIBITED ALLOCATION.—For purposes of this section, the term 'prohibited allocation' means—

"(1) any allocation of qualified securities acquired in a sale to which section 1042 applies which violates the provisions of section 409(n), and

"(2) any benefit which accrues to any person in violation of the provisions of such section.

"(c) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—The tax imposed by this section shall be paid by—

"(1) the employer sponsoring such plan, or

"(2) the eligible worker-owned cooperative, which made the written statement described in section 1042(b)(3)(B).

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—Terms used in this section have the same respective meaning as when used in section 4978."

(B) Subparagraph (B) of section 1042(b)(3) is amended by striking out "section 4978(a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 4978 and 4979A".

(C) The table of sections for chapter 43 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 4979A. Tax on certain prohibited allocations of qualified securities."

(D) The amendments made by this paragraph shall apply to sales of securities after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(10) Paragraph (5) of section 1042(c) (relating to securities acquired by underwriter) is amended—

(A) by striking out "acquisition" and inserting in lieu thereof "sale",

(B) by inserting "to an employee stock ownership plan or eligible worker-owned cooperative" before "in", and

(C) by striking out "ACQUIRED" in the heading thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "SOLD".

(11) The heading for section 1042 is amended by inserting "EMPLOYEE" before "STOCK".

(12) The table of sections for part III of subchapter O of chapter 1 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 1042 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 1042. Sales of stock to employee stock ownership plans or certain cooperatives."

(b) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 542.—(1) Paragraph (5) of section 72(e) is amended by adding at the end of subparagraph (D) the following new flush sentence:

"Any dividend described in section 404(k) which is received by a participant or beneficiary shall, for purposes of this subparagraph, be treated as paid under a separate contract to which clause (ii)(I) applies."

(2) Section 404(k) is amended—

(A) by adding at the end thereof the following new flush sentence:

"Any deduction under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be allowed in the taxable year of the corporation in which the dividend is paid or distributed to the participant under paragraph (2).", and

(B) by striking out "during the taxable year" in the matter preceding paragraph (1).

(3) Section 404(k), as amended by paragraph (2), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "A plan to which this subsection applies shall not be treated as violating the requirements of section 401, 409, or 4975(e)(7) merely by reason of any distribution described in paragraph (2)."

(4) Subsection (k) of section 404 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"The Secretary may disallow the deduction under this subsection for any dividend if the Secretary determines that such dividend constitutes, in substance, an avoidance of taxation."

(5) Paragraph (2) of section 404(k) is amended by striking out "participants in the plan" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "participants in the plan or their beneficiaries".

(6) The amendments made by paragraphs (1) and (2) shall not apply to dividends paid before January 1, 1986, if the taxpayer treated such dividends in a manner inconsistent with such amendments on a return filed with the Secretary before the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 543.—(1) Subparagraph (B) of section 291(e)(1) (defining financial institution preference item) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(iv) SPECIAL RULES FOR OBLIGATIONS TO WHICH SECTION 133 APPLIES.—In the case of an obligation to which section 133 applies, interest on such obligation shall not be treated as exempt from taxes for purposes of this subparagraph."

(2)(A) Section 133 (relating to exemption for interest on certain loans used to acquire employer securities) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) APPLICATION WITH SECTION 483 AND ORIGINAL ISSUE DISCOUNT RULES.—In applying section 483 and subpart A of part V of subchapter P to any obligation to which this section applies, appropriate adjustments shall be made to the applicable Federal rate to take into account the exclusion under subsection (a)."

(B) Section 7872(f) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(11) SPECIAL RULE FOR CERTAIN EMPLOYER SECURITY LOANS.—This section shall not apply to any loan between a corporation (or any member of the controlled group of corporations that includes such corporation) and an employee stock ownership plan described in section 4975(e)(7) to the extent that the interest rate on such loan is equal to the interest rate paid on a related securities acquisition loan (as described in section 133(b)) to such corporation."

(C) Section 133 (b)(2) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new flush sentence:

"For purposes of this paragraph, subparagraphs (A) and (B) shall not apply to any loan which, but for such subparagraphs, would be a securities acquisition loan if such loan is not originated by the employer of any employees who are covered by the plan or by any member of the controlled group of corporations which includes such employer, except that this section shall not apply to any interest received on such loan during such time as such loan is held by such employer (or any member of such controlled group)."

(D) Section 133(b) is amended by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (4) and by adding after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) TERMS APPLICABLE TO CERTAIN SECURITIES ACQUISITION LOANS.—A loan to a corporation shall not fail to be treated as a securities acquisition loan merely because the proceeds of such loan are lent to an employee stock ownership plan sponsored by such corporation (or by any member of the controlled group of corporations which includes such corporation) if such loan includes—

"(A) repayment terms which are substantially similar to the terms of the loan of such corporation from a lender described in subsection (a), or

"(B) repayment terms providing for more rapid repayment of principal or interest on such loan but only if—

"(i) allocations under the plan attributable to such repayment do not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees (within the meaning of section 414(q)), and

"(ii) the original commitment period of such loan to the corporation does not exceed 7 years."

(d) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 544.—(1)(A) Section 2210(a) (relating to liability for payment of estate tax in case of transfer of employer securities to an ESOP or worker cooperative) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (1), by redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (3), and by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) the executor of the estate of the decedent may (without regard to this section) make an election under section 6166 with respect to that portion of the tax imposed by section 2001 which is attributable to employer securities, and".

(B) The amendment made by subparagraph (A) shall apply to the estates of decedents dying after September 27, 1985.

(2) Section 2210(c) (relating to installment payments) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) SPECIAL RULES FOR APPLICATION OF SECTION 6166(g).—In the case of any transfer of employer securities to an employee stock ownership plan or eligible worker-owned cooperative to which this section applies—

"(A) TRANSFER DOES NOT TRIGGER ACCELERATION.—Such transfer shall not be treated as a disposition or withdrawal to which section 6166(g) applies.

"(B) SEPARATE APPLICATION TO ESTATE AND PLAN INTERESTS.—Section 6166(g) shall be applied separately to the interests held after such transfer by the estate and such plan or cooperative.

"(C) REQUIRED DISTRIBUTION NOT TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—In the case of any distribution of such securities by such plan which is described in section 4978(d)(1)—

"(i) such distribution shall not be treated as a disposition or withdrawal for purposes of section 6166(g), and

"(ii) such securities shall not be taken into account in applying section 6166(g) to any subsequent disposition or withdrawal."

(3) Section 2210(g) (relating to definitions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) TAX IMPOSED BY SECTION 2001.—The term 'tax imposed by section 2001' includes any interest, penalty, addition to tax, or additional amount relating to any tax imposed by section 2001."

(4) Section 2210(c)(1) is amended by inserting "any authorized officer of" before "the cooperative" in the matter following subparagraph (B).

(5) Section 2210(d) (relating to guarantee of payments) is amended—

(A) by inserting "and any eligible worker-owned cooperative" before "shall guarantee" in the matter following paragraph (2),

(B) by striking out "such plan" and inserting in lieu thereof "such plan or cooperative, respectively,", and

(C) by striking out ", including any interest payable under section 6601 which is attributable to such amount".

(6) Section 2210(g)(3) is amended by striking out "section 1041(b)(2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 1042(c)(2)".

(e) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 545.—(1) Section 4978(a)(1) (relating to tax on disposition of securities to which section 1042 applies before close of minimum holding period) is amended by striking out "then" and inserting in lieu thereof "than".

(2) Section 4978(b)(1) is amended by striking out "paragraph (1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (a)".

(3) Section 4978(c) is amended by striking out "section 1042(a)(2)(B)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 1042(b)(3)".

(4) Section 4978(d)(1)(C) is amended by striking out "section 72(m)(5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 72(m)(7)".

(5) Section 4978(e)(2) is amended by striking out "section 1042(b)(1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 1042(c)(1)".

(6) Section 4978(e)(3) is amended by striking out "section 1042(b)(1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 1042(c)(2)".

(7) Section 4978(d) (relating to dispositions to which section does not apply) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) LIQUIDATION OF CORPORATION INTO COOPERATIVE.—In the case of any exchange of qualified securities pursuant to the liquidation of the corporation issuing qualified securities into the eligible worker-owned cooperative in a transaction which meets the requirements of section 332 (determined by substituting '100 percent' for '80 percent' each place it appears in section 332(b)(1)), such exchange shall not be treated as a disposition for purposes of this section."

(f) OTHER AMENDMENTS.—(1)(A) Section 409(e) (relating to voting rights) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) 1 VOTE PER PARTICIPANT.—A plan meets the requirements of paragraph (2) or (3) if—

"(A) the plan permits each participant 1 vote with respect to any issue, and

"(B) the trustee votes the shares held by the plan in the proportion determined after application of subparagraph (A)."

(B) Paragraph (3) of section 409(e) (relating to requirement for other employers) is amended by striking out all that follows "with respect to" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "any corporate matter which involves the voting of such shares and which relates to any corporate merger or consolidation, recapitalization, reclassification, liquidation, dissolution, sale of substantially all assets of a trade or business, or such similar transaction as the Secretary may prescribe in regulations."

(C) Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 409(e) are amended by striking out "employer securities" and inserting in lieu thereof "securities of the employer".

(D) Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 409(e) are amended by inserting "or beneficiary" after "participant" each place it appears.

(2) Section 402 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"(g) EFFECT OF DISPOSITION OF STOCK BY PLAN ON NET UNREALIZED APPRECIATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a)(1) or (e)(4)(J), in the case of any transaction to which this subsection applies, the determination of net unrealized appreciation shall be made without regard to such transaction.

"(2) TRANSACTION TO WHICH SUBSECTION APPLIES.—This subsection shall apply to any transaction in which—

"(A) the plan trustee exchanges the plan's securities of the employer corporation for other such securities, or

"(B) the plan trustee disposes of securities of the employer corporation and uses the proceeds of such disposition to acquire securities of the employer corporation within 90 days (or such longer period as the Secretary may prescribe), except that this subparagraph shall not apply to any employee with respect to whom a distribution of money was made during the period after such disposition and before such acquisition."

(B) Section 1042(b)(3)(B) is amended by inserting "and 4979A" after "section 4978(a)".

(C) Section 409(h)(2) is amended by striking out "in cash" and inserting in lieu thereof "in cash, except that such plan may distribute employer securities subject to a requirement that such securities be resold to the employer."

(4)(A) The amendments made by paragraph (1)(A) and (3) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(B) The amendments made by subparagraphs (B), (C), and (D) of paragraph (1) shall apply after December 31, 1986, to stock acquired after December 31, 1979.

(C) The amendments made by paragraph (2) shall apply to any transaction occurring after December 31, 1984, except that in the case of any transaction occurring before the date of the enactment of this Act, the period under which proceeds are required to be invested under section 402(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (as added by paragraph (2)) shall not end before the earlier of 1 year after the date of such transaction or 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 1855. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO MISCELLANEOUS EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PROVISIONS.

(a) SECTION 555 OF THE ACT.—Subsection (c) of section 555 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (relating to technical amendments to the incentive stock option provisions) is amended—

(1) by striking out "subsection (a)" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (a)(1)",

(2) by striking out "subsection (b)" in paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (a)(2)",

(3) by striking out "after March 20, 1984," in paragraph (2), and

(4) by striking out "subsection (c)" in paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (b)".

(b) SECTION 252 OF THE ECONOMIC RECOVERY ACT OF 1981.—

(1) Notwithstanding subsection (c) of section 252 of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, the amendment made by subsection (a) of such section 252 (and the provisions of subsection (b) of such section 252) shall apply to any transfer of stock to any person if—

(A) such transfer occurred in November or December of 1973 and was pursuant to the exercise of an option granted in November or December of 1971,

(B) in December 1973 the corporation granting the option was acquired by another corporation in a transaction qualifying as a reorganization under section 368 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954,

(C) the fair market value (as of July 1, 1974) of the stock received by such person in the reorganization in exchange for the stock transferred to him pursuant to the exercise of such option was less than 50 percent of the fair market value of the stock so received (as of December 4, 1973),

(D) in 1975 or 1976 such person sold substantially all of the stock received in such reorganization, and

(E) such person makes an election under this section at such time and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall prescribe.

(2) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF BENEFIT.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to transfers with respect to any employee to the extent that the application of subsection (a) with respect to such employee would (but for this subsection) result in a reduction in liability for income tax with respect to such employee for all taxable years in excess of $100,000 (determined without regard to any interest).

(3) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—

(A) OVERPAYMENTS.—If refund or credit of any overpayment of tax resulting from the application of subsection (a) is prevented on the date of the enactment of this Act (or at any time within 6 months after such date of enactment) by the operation of any law or rule of law, refund or credit of such overpayment (to the extent attributable to the application of subsection (a)) may, nevertheless, be made or allowed if claim therefor is filed before the close of such 6-month period.

(B) DEFICIENCIES.—If the assessment of any deficiency of tax resulting from the application of subsection (a) is prevented on the date of the enactment of this Act (or at any time within 6 months after such date of enactment) by the operation of any law or rule of law, assessment of such deficiency (to the extent attributable to the application of subsection (a)) may, nevertheless, be made within such 6-month period.

CHAPTER 6—AMENDMENTS RELATED TO TITLE VI OF THE ACT

SEC. 1861. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 611 OF THE ACT.

(a) EXTENSION OF TIME FOR SUBMITTING POLICY STATEMENT.—Paragraph (5) of section 103A(j) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) EXTENSION OF TIME.—The Secretary may grant an extension of time for the publishing of a report described in subparagraph (B) or the submittal of such report to the Secretary if there is reasonable cause for the failure to publish or submit such report in a timely fashion."

(b) DEFINITION OF QUALIFIED VETERAN.—Subparagraph (B) of section 103A(o)(4) (defining qualified veteran) is amended by striking out "January 1, 1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 31, 1985".

(c) CLARIFICATION OF GOOD FAITH EFFORT PROVISIONS.—

(1) Subparagraph (B) of section 103A(c)(2) (defining qualified mortgage issue) is amended by striking out "and (j)" and inserting in lieu thereof "and (j)(1) and (2)".

(2) Subparagraph (C) of section 103A(c)(2) is amended by striking out "and (i)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(i), and (j) (3), (4), and (5)".

SEC. 1862. AMENDMENT RELATED TO SECTION 612 OF THE ACT.

(a) REQUIREMENTS FOR QUALIFIED MORTGAGE CREDIT CERTIFICATE PROGRAM.—Subclause (V) of section 25(c)(2)(A)(iii) (defining qualified mortgage credit certificate program) is amended by striking out "paragraph (1) of subsection (j)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (j), other than paragraph (2) thereof".

(b) GOOD FAITH EFFORT RULES MADE APPLICABLE.—Subparagraph (A) of section 25(c)(2) (defining qualified mortgage credit certificate program) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"Under regulations, rules similar to the rules of subparagraphs (B) and (C) of section 103A(c)(2) shall apply to the requirements of this subparagraph."

(c) CARRYFORWARD OF EXCESS CREDIT.—Subparagraph (B) of section 25(e)(1) (relating to carryforward of unused credit) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) LIMITATION.—The amount of the unused credit which may be taken into account under subparagraph (A) for any taxable year shall not exceed the amount (if any) by which the applicable tax limit for such taxable year exceeds the sum of—

"(i) the credit allowable under subsection (a) for such taxable year determined without regard to this paragraph, and

"(ii) the amounts which, by reason of this paragraph, are carried to such taxable year and are attributable to taxable years before the unused credit year."

(d) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subparagraph (B) of section 25(a)(1) is amended by striking out "paid or incurred" and inserting in lieu thereof "paid or accrued".

(2) Subchapter B of chapter 68 is amended by redesignating the section 6708 which relates to penalties with respect to mortgage credit certificates as section 6709.

(3) The table of sections for subchapter B of chapter 68 is amended by striking out the item relating to the section 6708 which relates to penalties with respect to mortgage credit certificates and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 6709. Penalties with respect to mortgage credit certificates."

SEC. 1863. AMENDMENT RELATED TO SECTION 613 OF THE ACT.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Section 613 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (relating to authority to borrow from Federal Financing Bank) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 613. ADVANCE REFUNDING OF CERTAIN VETERANS' MORTGAGE BONDS PERMITTED.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 103A(n) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, an issuer of applicable mortgage bonds may issue advance refunding bonds with respect to such applicable mortgage bonds.

"(b) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF ADVANCED REFUNDING.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of advanced refunding bonds which may be issued under subsection (a) shall not exceed the lesser of—

"(A) $300,000,000, or

"(B) the excess of—

"(i) the projected aggregate payments of principal on the applicable mortgage bonds during the 15-fiscal year period beginning with fiscal year 1984, over

"(ii) the projected aggregate payments during such period of principal on mortgages financed by the applicable mortgage bonds.

"(2) ASSUMPTIONS USED IN MAKING PROJECTION.—The computation under paragraph (1)(B) shall be made by using the following percentages of the prepayment experience of the Federal Housing Administration in the State or region in which the issuer of the advance refunding bonds is located:

"Fiscal Year:	Percentage:
1986	25
1987 and thereafter	30.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section.—

"(1) APPLICABLE MORTGAGE BONDS.—The term 'applicable mortgage bonds' means any qualified veterans' mortgage bonds issued as part of an issue—

"(A) which was outstanding on December 31, 1981,

"(B) with respect to which the excess determined under subsection (b)(1)(B) exceeds 12 percent of the aggregate principal amount of such bonds outstanding on July 1, 1983,

"(C) with respect to which the amount of the average annual prepayments during fiscal years 1981, 1982, and 1983 was less than 2 percent of the average of the loan balances as of the beginning of each of such fiscal years, and

"(D) which, for fiscal year 1983, had a prepayment experience rate that did not exceed 20 percent of the prepayment experience rate of the Federal Housing Administration in the State or region in which the issuer is located.

"(2) QUALIFIED VETERANS' MORTGAGE BONDS.—The term 'qualified veterans' mortgage bonds' has the meaning given to such term by section 103A(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(3) FISCAL YEAR.—The term 'fiscal year' means the fiscal year of the State."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act; except that such amendment shall not apply with respect to any loan made by the Federal Financing Bank to the State of Oregon pursuant to a credit agreement entered into on April 16, 1985 (as such agreement was in effect on such date). The Secretary of the Treasury shall guarantee any loan made by the Federal Financing Bank to the State of Oregon pursuant to such agreement.

SEC. 1864. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 621 OF THE ACT.

(a) SPECIAL RULE FOR FACILITIES LOCATED OUTSIDE THE STATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (n) of section 103 (relating to limitation on aggregate amount of private activity bonds issued during any calendar year) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(13) FACILITY MUST BE LOCATED WITHIN STATE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), no portion of the State ceiling applicable to any State for any calendar year may be used with respect to financing for a facility located outside such State.

"(B) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN FACILITIES WHERE STATE WILL GET PROPORTIONATE SHARE OF BENEFITS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any issue described in subparagraph (E), (G), or (H) of subsection (b)(4) if the issuer establishes that the State's share of the use of the facility (or its output) will equal or exceed the State's share of the private activity bonds issued to finance the facility."

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the amendment made by paragraph (1) shall apply to obligations issued after the date of the enactment of this Act in taxable years ending after such date.

(B) At the election of the issuer (made at such time and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall prescribe), the amendment made by paragraph (1) shall apply to any obligation issued on or before the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) CLARIFICATION OF AUTHORITY FOR DIFFERENT ALLOCATION.—Subparagraphs (A) and (B)(i) of section 103(n)(6) (relating to State may provide for different allocation) are each amended by striking out "governmental units" and inserting in lieu thereof "governmental units or other authorities".

(c) CLARIFICATION OF EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN FACILITIES.—Clause (i) of section 103(n)(7)(C) (relating to exception for certain facilities described in section 103(b)(4)(C) or (D)) is amended by striking out "the property described in such subparagraph" and inserting in lieu thereof "all of the property to be financed by the obligation".

(d) INFORMATION REPORTING ON ALLOCATION OF PRIVATE ACTIVITY BOND LIMIT.—Paragraph (2) of section 103(l) (relating to information reporting requirements for certain bonds) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (D), by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (E) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and", and by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(F) if such obligation is a private activity bond (as defined in subsection (n)(7)), such information as the Secretary may require for purposes of determining whether the requirements of subsection (n) are met with respect to such obligation."

SEC. 1865. AMENDMENT RELATED TO SECTION 622 OF THE ACT.

(a) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (A) of section 103(h)(5) (relating to certain obligations subsidized under energy program) is amended by striking out "the United States,".

(b) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN GUARANTEES BY FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION.—An obligation shall not be treated as federally guaranteed for purposes of section 103(h) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by reason of a guarantee by the Farmers Home Administration if—

(1) such guarantee is pursuant to a commitment made by the Farmers Home Administration before July 1, 1984, and

(2) such obligation is issued to finance a convention center project in Carbondale, Illinois.

(c) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN OBLIGATIONS USED TO FINANCE SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL FACILITY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any obligation which is part of an issue a substantial portion of the proceeds of which is to be used to finance a solid waste disposal facility described in paragraph (2) shall not, for purposes of section 103(h) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, be treated as an obligation which is federally guaranteed by reason of the sale of fuel, steam, electricity, or other forms of usable energy to the Federal Government or any agency or instrumentality thereof.

(2) SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL FACILITY.—A solid waste disposal facility is described in this paragraph if such facility is described in section 103(b)(4)(E) of such Code and—

(A) if—

(i) a public State authority created pursuant to State legislation which took effect on July 1, 1980, took formal action before October 19, 1983, to commit development funds for such facility,

(ii) such authority issues obligations for such facility before January 1, 1988, and

(iii) expenditures have been made for the development of such facility before October 19, 1983,

(B) if—

(i) such facility is operated by the South Eastern Public Service Authority of Virginia, and

(ii) on December 20, 1984, the Internal Revenue Service issued a ruling concluding that a portion of the obligations with respect to such facility would not be treated as federally guaranteed under section 103(h) of such Code by reason of the transitional rule contained in section 631(c)(3)(A)(i) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984,

(C) if—

(i) a political subdivision of a State took formal action on April 1, 1980, to commit development funds for such facility,

(ii) such facility has a contract to sell steam to a naval base,

(iii) such political subdivision issues obligations for such facility before January 1, 1988, and

(iv) expenditures have been made for the development of such facility before October 19, 1983, or

(D) if—

(i) such facility is a thermal transfer facility,

(ii) is to be built and operated by the Elk Regional Resource Authority, and

(iii) is to be on land leased from the United States Air Force at Arnold Engineering Development Center near Tullahoma, Tennessee.

(3) LIMITATIONS.—

(A) In the case of a solid waste disposal facility described in paragraph (2)(A), the aggregate face amount of obligations to which paragraph (1) applies shall not exceed $65,000,000.

(B) In the case of a solid waste disposal facility described in paragraph (2)(B), the aggregate face amount of obligations to which paragraph (1) applies shall not exceed $20,000,000. Such amount shall be in addition to the amount permitted under the Internal Revenue Service ruling referred to in paragraph (2)(B)(ii).

(C) In the case of a solid waste disposal facility described in paragraph (2)(C), the aggregate face amount of obligations to which paragraph (1) applies shall not exceed $75,000,000.

(D) In the case of a solid waste disposal facility described in paragraph (2)(D), the aggregate face amount of obligations to which paragraph (1) applies shall not exceed $25,000,000.

SEC. 1866. TRANSITIONAL RULE FOR LIMIT ON SMALL ISSUE EXCEPTION.

The amendment made by section 623 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 shall not apply to any obligation issued to refund another tax-exempt IDB to which the amendment made by such section 623 did not apply if—

(1) the refunding obligation has a maturity date not later than the maturity date of the refunded obligation,

(2) the amount of the refunding obligation does not exceed the amount of the refunded obligation,

(3) the interest rate on the refunding obligation is lower than the interest rate on the refunded issue, and

(4) the proceeds of the refunding obligation are used to redeem the refunded obligation not later than 30 days after the date of the issuance of the refunding obligation.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term "tax-exempt IDB" means any industrial development bond (as defined in section 103(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) the interest on which is exempt from tax under section 103(a) of such Code.

SEC. 1867. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 624 OF THE ACT.

(a) Paragraph (2) of section 624(c) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (relating to effective date for limitations on arbitrage on nonpurpose obligations) is amended by striking out "by the Essex County Port Authority of New York and New Jersey as part of an issue approved" and inserting in lieu thereof "for the Essex County New Jersey Resource Recovery Project authorized by the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey on November 10, 1983, as part of an agreement approved".

(b) The amendment made by section 624 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 shall not apply to obligations issued with respect to the Downtown Muskogee Revitalization Project for which a UDAG grant was preliminarily approved on May 5, 1981, if—

(1) such obligation is issued before January 1, 1986, or

(2) such obligation is issued after such date to provide additional financing for such project except that the aggregate amount of obligations to which this subsection applies shall not exceed $10,000,000.

SEC. 1868. AMENDMENT RELATED TO SECTION 625 OF THE ACT.

Subparagraph (C) of section 625(a)(3) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (relating to arbitrage regulations) is amended by striking out "obligation issued exclusively" and inserting in lieu thereof "obligation (or series of refunding obligations) issued exclusively".

SEC. 1869. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 626 OF THE ACT.

(a) CHANGE IN DEFINED TERM.—Subsection (o) of section 103 (relating to denial of tax exemption for consumer loan bonds) is amended—

(1) by striking out "consumer loan bond" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "private loan bond",

(2) by striking out "CONSUMER LOAN BONDS" in the subsection heading and inserting in lieu thereof "PRIVATE LOAN BONDS", and

(3) by striking out "CONSUMER LOAN BONDS" in the heading for paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "PRIVATE LOAN BONDS".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Clause (ii) of section 103(o)(2)(C) (relating to excluded loans) is amended by striking out "subsection (c)(6)(G)(i)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (c)(6)(H)(i)".

(2) Section 103 is amended by redesignating the subsection (o) (relating to cross references) as subsection (p).

(c) TRANSITIONAL RULES.—

(1) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN OBLIGATIONS ISSUED BY THE CITY OF BALTIMORE.—Obligations issued by the city of Baltimore, Maryland, after June 30, 1985, shall not be treated as private loan bonds for purposes of section 103(o) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by reason of the use of a portion of the proceeds of such obligations to finance or refinance temporary advances made by the city of Baltimore in connection with loans to persons who are not exempt persons (within the meaning of section 103(b)(3) of such Code) if—

(A) such obligations are not industrial development bonds (within the meaning of section 103(b)(2) of such Code),

(B) the portion of the proceeds of such obligations so used is attributable to debt approved by voter referendum on or before November 2, 1982,

(C) the loans to such nonexempt persons were approved by the Board of Estimates of the city of Baltimore on or before October 19, 1983, and

(D) the aggregate amount of such temporary advances financed or refinanced by such obligations does not exceed $27,000,000.

(2) WHITE PINE POWER PROJECT.—The amendment made by section 626(a) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 shall not apply to any obligation issued during 1984 to provide financing for the White Pine Power Project in Nevada.

(3) TAX INCREMENT BONDS.—The amendment made by section 626(a) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 shall not apply to any tax increment financing obligation issued before the date of the enactment of this Act, if—

(A) substantially all of the proceeds of the issue are to be used to finance—

(i) sewer, street, lighting, or other governmental improvements to real property,

(ii) the acquisition of any interest in real property pursuant to the exercise of eminent domain, the preparation of such property for new use, or the transfer of such interest to a private developer, or

(iii) payments of reasonable relocation costs of prior users of such real property,

(B) all of the activities described in subparagraph (A) are pursuant to a redevelopment plan adopted by the issuing authority before the issuance of such issue,

(C) repayment of such issue is secured exclusively by pledges of that portion of any increase in real property tax revenues (or their equivalent) attributable to the redevelopment resulting from the issue, and

(D) none of the property described in subparagraph (A) is subject to a real property or other tax based on a rate or valuation method which differs from the rate and valuation method applicable to any other similar property located within the jurisdiction of the issuing authority.

(4) EASTERN MAINE ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE.—The amendment made by section 626(a) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 shall not apply to obligations issued by Massachusetts Municipal Wholesale Electric Company Project No. 6 if—

(A) such obligation is issued before January 1, 1986,

(B) such obligation is issued after such date to refund a prior obligation for such project, except that the aggregate amount of obligations to which this subparagraph applies shall not exceed $100,000,000, or

(C) such obligation is issued after such date to provide additional financing for such project except that the aggregate amount of obligations to which this subparagraph applies shall not exceed $45,000,000.

Subparagraph (B) shall not apply to any obligation issued for the advance refunding of any obligation.

SEC. 1870. AMENDMENT RELATED TO SECTION 627 OF THE ACT.

Subparagraph (A) of section 103(b)(16) (relating to limitation on use for land acquisition) is amended by striking out "clause (i)" in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "clause (ii)".

SEC. 1871. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 628 OF THE ACT.

(a) CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS APPLY TO EXEMPTIONS NOT CONTAINED IN INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 103(m) (relating to obligations exempt other than under this title) is amended by striking out "(k), (l), and (n)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(j), (k), (l), (n), and (o)".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall apply to obligations issued after March 28, 1985, in taxable years ending after such date.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO REPEAL OF ADVANCE REFUNDING OF QUALIFIED PUBLIC FACILITIES.—Paragraphs (13), (14)(A), and (17)(A) of section 103(b) are each amended by striking out "(6), and (7)" and inserting in lieu thereof "and (6)".

SEC. 1872. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 631 OF THE ACT.

(a) CLARIFICATION OF GENERAL EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) Paragraph (1) of section 631(c) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (relating to effective date for other provisions relating to tax-exempt bonds) is amended by striking out "made by this subtitle" and inserting in lieu thereof "made by sections 622, 623, 627, and 628 (c), (d), and (e) (and the provisions of sections 625(c), 628(f), and 629(b))".

(2)(A) Subparagraph (A) of section 631(c)(3) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by striking out "amendments made by this subtitle (other than section 621)" and inserting in lieu thereof "amendments (and provisions) referred to in paragraph (1)".

(B) Effective with respect to obligations issued after March 28, 1985, subparagraph (A) of section 631(c)(3) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by striking out clauses (i) and (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(i) the original use of which commences with the taxpayer and the construction, reconstruction, or rehabilitation of which began before October 19, 1983, and was completed on or after such date,

"(ii) the original use of which commenses with the taxpayer and with respect to which a binding contract to incur significant expenditures for construction, reconstruction, or rehabilitation was entered into before October 19, 1983, and some of such expenditures are incurred on or after such date, or

"(iii) acquired after October 19, 1983, pursuant to a binding contract entered into on or before such date."

(3) Paragraph (3) of section 631(c) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) EXCEPTION.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply with respect to the amendment made by section 628(e) and the provisions of sections 628(f) and 629(b)."

(4) Subparagraph (B) of section 631(c)(3) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by striking out "subsection (b)(2)(A)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (b)(2)".

(b) SPECIAL RULE FOR HEALTH CLUB FACILITIES.—Subsection (c) of section 631 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) SPECIAL RULE FOR HEALTH CLUB FACILITIES.—In the case of any health club facility, with respect to the amendment made by section 627(c)—

"(A) paragraph (1) shall be applied by substituting 'April 12, 1984' for 'December 31, 1983', and

"(B) paragraph (3) shall be applied by substituting 'April 13, 1984' for 'October 19, 1983' each place it appears."

(c) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL FACILITIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (d) of section 631 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (relating to provisions of subtitle not to apply to certain property) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(5) Any solid waste disposal facility described in section 103(b)(4)(E) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 if—

"(A) a city government, by resolutions adopted on April 10, 1980, and December 27, 1982, took formal action to authorize the submission of a proposal for a feasibility study for such facility and to authorize the presentation to the Department of the Army (U.S. Army Missile Command) of a proposed agreement to jointly pursue construction and operation of such facility,

"(B) such city government (or a public authority on its behalf) issues obligations for such facility before January 1, 1987, and

"(C) expenditures have been made for the development of such facility before October 19, 1983. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this subsection, the amendments made by section 624 (relating to arbitrage) shall apply to obligations issued to finance property described in paragraph (5)."

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (1) of section 632(a) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is hereby repealed.

SEC. 1873. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 632 OF THE ACT.

(a) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—Subsection (a) of section 632 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by striking out "section 623" in the matter preceding paragraph (1) thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "section 624".

(b) CERTAIN OBLIGATIONS NOT TREATED AS PRIVATE LOAN BONDS.—Subsection (d) of section 632 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"The amendment made by section 626 shall not apply to any obligations described in the preceding sentence."

(c) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN OBLIGATIONS TO FINANCE HYDROELECTRIC GENERATING FACILITY.—If—

(1) obligations are to be issued in an amount not to exceed $9,500,000 to finance the construction of an approximately 4 megawatt hydroelectric generating facility owned and operated by the city of Hastings, Minnesota, and located on United States Army Corps of Engineers lock and dam No. 2 or are issued to refund any of such obligations,

(2) substantially all of the electrical power generated by such facility is to be sold to a nongovernmental person pursuant to a long-term power sales agreement in accordance with the Public Utilities Regulatory Policies Act of 1978, and then the person referred to in paragraph (2) shall not be treated as the principal user of such facilities by reason of such sales for purposes of subparagraphs (D) and (E) of section 103(b)(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(3) the initially issued obligations are issued on or before December 31, 1986, and any of such refunding obligations are issued on or before December 31, 1996,

(d) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN OBLIGATIONS TO FINANCE HYDROELECTRIC GENERATING FACILITY.—If—

(1) obligations are to be issued in an amount not to exceed $6,500,000 to finance the construction of an approximately 2.6 megawatt hydroelectric generating facility located on the Schroon River in Warren County, New York, near Warrensburg, New York,

(2) such facility has a Federal Energy Regulatory Commission project number 8719-0000 under a preliminary permit issued on November 8, 1985, and then the person referred to in paragraph (3) shall not be treated as the principal user of such facilities by reason of such sales for purposes of subparagraphs (D) and (E) of section 103(b)(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(e) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN OBLIGATIONS TO FINANCE HYDROELECTRIC GENERATING FACILITIES.—If—

(1) obligations in the amount of $6,000,000 issued on November 30, 1984, to finance the construction of an approximately 1.0 megawatt hydroelectric generating facility and an approximately .6 megawatt hydroelectric generating facility, both of which are located near Los Banos, California,

(2) such facilities have Federal Energy Regulatory Commission project numbers 5129-001 and 5128-001, respectively, under license exemptions issued on December 6, 1983, and then the person referred to in paragraph (3) shall not be treated as the principal user of such facilities by reason of such sales for purposes of subparagraphs (D) and (E) of section 103(b)(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

SEC. 1876. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO TITLE VIII OF THE ACT.

(a) TREATMENT OF SECTION 923(a)(2) NON-EXEMPT INCOME.—

(1) Paragraph (6) of section 927(d) (defining section 923(a)(2) non-exempt income) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Such term shall not include any income which is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States (determined without regard to this subpart)."

(2) Paragraph (6) of section 1248(d) (relating to foreign trade income) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) FOREIGN TRADE INCOME.—Earnings and profits of the foreign corporation attributable to foreign trade income of a FSC other than foreign trade income which—

"(A) is section 923(a)(2) non-exempt income (within the meaning of section 927(d)(6)), or

"(B) would not (but for section 923(a)(4)) be treated as exempt foreign trade income.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, the terms 'foreign trade income' and 'exempt foreign trade income' have the respective meanings given such terms by section 923."

(b) CLARIFICATION OF PREFERENCE CUTBACKS.—

(1) Paragraph (4) of section 291(a) (relating to 20-percent reduction in certain preference items, etc.) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) CERTAIN FSC INCOME.—In the case of taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984, section 923(a) shall be applied with respect to any FSC by substituting—

"(A) '30 percent' for '32 percent' in paragraph (2), and

"(B) '$^{9}/_{23}$' for '$^{9}/_{32}$' in paragraph (3).

If all of the stock in the FSC is not held by 1 or more C corporations throughout the taxable year, under regulations, proper adjustments shall be made in the application of the preceding sentence to take into account stock held by persons other than C corporations."

(2) Subparagraph (F) of section 995(b)(1) (relating to deemed distributions from a DISC) is amended—

(A) by inserting "in the case of a shareholder which is a C corporation," before "one-seventeenth" in clause (i), and

(B) by striking out "the amount determined under clause (i)" in clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "$^{9}/_{17}$ of the excess referred to in clause (i),".

(3) Subsection (a) of section 923 (defining exempt foreign trade income) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) CROSS REFERENCE.—

"For reduction in amount of exempt foreign trade income, see section 291(a)(4)."

(c) TREATMENT OF FOREIGN TRADE INCOME UNDER SUBPART F.—

(1) Subsection (b) of section 952 (relating to exclusion of United States income) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of the preceding sentence, income described in paragraph (2) or (3) of section 921(d) shall be treated as derived from sources within the United States."

(2) Paragraph (1) of section 951(e) is amended by striking out the last sentence.

(d) DIVIDENDS RECEIVED DEDUCTION FOR CERTAIN DISTRIBUTIONS FROM A FSC.—

(1) DEDUCTION FOR CERTAIN DIVIDENDS.—

(A) Paragraph (1) of section 245(c) (relating to certain dividends received from FSC) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a domestic corporation, there shall be allowed as a deduction an amount equal to—

"(A) 100 percent of any dividend received by such corporation from another corporation which is distributed out of earnings and profits attributable to foreign trade income for a period during which such other corporation was a FSC, and

"(B) 85 percent of any dividend received by such corporation from another corporation which is distributed out of earnings and profits attributable to qualified interest and carrying charges received or accrued by such other corporation while such other corporation was a FSC.

The deduction allowable under the preceding sentence with respect to any dividend shall be in lieu of any deduction allowable under subsection (a) or (b) with respect to such dividend."

(B) Paragraph (3) of section 245(c) (relating to definitions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified interest and carrying charges' means any interest or carrying charges (as defined in section 927(d)(1)) derived from a transaction which results in foreign trade income."

(2) SEPARATE APPLICATION OF SECTION 904.—Subparagraph (D) of section 904(d)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(D) distributions from a FSC (or a former FSC) out of earnings and profits attributable to foreign trade income (within the meaning of section 923(b)) or qualified interest and carrying charges (as defined in section 245(c)), and".

(3) COORDINATION OF SECTIONS 906 AND 902.—Subsection (b) of section 906 (relating to nonresident alien individuals and foreign corporations) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) For purposes of section 902, any income, war profits, and excess profits taxes paid or accrued (or deemed paid or accrued) to any foreign country or possession of the United States with respect to income effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States shall not be taken into account, and any accumulated profits attributable to such income shall not be taken into account."

(e) EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (3) of section 927(e) (relating to exchange of information requirements) is amended—

(A) by striking out "unless, at the same time such corporation was created or organized, there was" and inserting in lieu thereof "unless there is",

(B) by striking out "section 274(h)(6)(C)" in subparagraph (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "section 274(h)(6)(C) (determined by treating any reference to a beneficiary country as being a reference to any foreign country and by applying such section without regard to clause (ii) thereof)", and

(C) by amending subparagraph (B) to read as follows:

"(B) an income tax treaty which contains an exchange of information program—

"(i) which the Secretary certifies (and has not revoked such certification) is satisfactory in practice for purposes of this title, and

"(ii) to which the FSC is subject."

(2) Effective for periods after March 28, 1985, paragraph (2) of section 924(c) (relating to requirement that FSC be managed outside the United States) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) the principal bank account of the corporation is maintained in a foreign country which meets the requirements of section 927(e)(3) or in a possession of the United States at all times during the taxable year, and".

(f) COORDINATION WITH POSSESSIONS TAXATION.—

(1) Paragraph (5) of section 927(e) (relating to exemption from certain other taxes) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) COORDINATION WITH POSSESSIONS TAXATION.—

"(A) EXEMPTION.—No tax shall be imposed by any possession of the United States on any foreign trade income derived before January 1, 1987. The preceding sentence shall not apply to any income attributable to the sale of property or the performance of services for ultimate use, consumption, or disposition within the possession.

"(B) CLARIFICATION THAT POSSESSION MAY EXEMPT CERTAIN INCOME FROM TAX.—Nothing in any provision of law shall be construed as prohibiting any possession of the United States from exempting from tax any foreign trade income of a FSC or any other income of a FSC described in paragraph (2) or (3) of section 921(d).

"(C) NO COVER OVER OF TAXES IMPOSED ON FSC.—Nothing in any provision of law shall be construed as requiring any tax imposed by this title on a FSC to be covered over (or otherwise transferred) to any possession of the United States."

(2) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 934 is amended by striking out the subsection (f) added by section 801(d)(7) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984.

(g) CLARIFICATION OF INTEREST ON DISC-RELATED DEFERRED TAX LIABILITY.—Subsection (f) of section 995 (relating to interest on DISC-related deferred tax liability) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) DISC INCLUDES FORMER DISC.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'DISC' includes a former DISC."

(h) CLARIFICATION OF EXEMPTION OF ACCUMULATED DISC INCOME.—Subparagraph (A) of section 805(b)(2) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (relating to exemption of accumulated DISC income from tax) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'actual distribution' includes a distribution in liquidation, and the earnings and profits of any corporation receiving a distribution not included in gross income by reason of the preceding sentence shall be increased by the amount of such distribution."

(i) CLARIFICATION OF EFFECTIVE DATE FOR REQUIREMENT THAT TAXABLE YEAR OF DISC AND FSC CONFORM TO TAXABLE YEAR OF MAJORITY SHAREHOLDER.—Paragraph (4) of section 805(a) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended to read as follows:

"(4) SECTION 803.—The amendments made by section 803 shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984."

(j) APPLICATION OF DIVIDENDS RECEIVED DEDUCTION WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN DIVIDENDS.—Subsection (c) of section 245 (relating to dividends received from certain foreign corporations) is amended by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (4) and by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) COORDINATION WITH SUBSECTIONS (a) AND (b).—The gross income giving rise to the earnings and profits described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1) (and not described in paragraph (2)) shall not be taken into account under subsections (a) and (b)."

(k) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN QUALIFYING DISTRIBUTIONS FROM DISC.—Paragraph (2) of section 996(a) (relating to qualifying distributions) is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "In the case of any amount of any actual distribution to a C corporation made pursuant to section 992(c) which is required to satisfy the condition of section 992(a)(1)(A), the preceding sentence shall apply to 16/17ths of such amount and paragraph (1) shall apply to the remaining 1/17th of such amount."

(l) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN RECEIPTS FROM OTHER FSC.—Paragraph (1) of section 924(f) (relating to certain receipts not included in foreign trade gross receipts) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"In the case of gross receipts of a FSC from a transaction involving any property, subparagraph (C) shall not apply if such FSC (and all other FSC's which are members of the same controlled group and which receive gross receipts from a transaction involving such property) do not use the pricing rules under paragraph (1) of section 925(a) (or the corresponding provisions of the regulations prescribed under section 925(b)) with respect to any transaction involving such property."

(m) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN FORMER EXPORT TRADE CORPORATIONS.—If—

(1) a corporation which is not an export trading corporation for its most recent taxable year ending before the date of the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 but was an export trading corporation for any prior taxable year, and

(2)(A) such corporation may not qualify as an export trade corporation for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1984, by reason of section 971(a)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or (B) such corporation makes an election, before the date 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, not to be treated as an export trade corporation with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984, rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (2) and (4) of section 805(b) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 shall apply to such corporation. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term "export trade corporation" has the meaning given such term by section 971 of such Code.

(n) TREATMENT OF DISTRIBUTION OF ACCUMULATED DISC INCOME RECEIVED BY COOPERATIVES.—Paragraph (2) of section 805(b) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (relating to transition rules for DISC's) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) TREATMENT OF DISTRIBUTION OF ACCUMULATED DISC INCOME RECEIVED BY COOPERATIVES.—In the case of any actual distribution received by an organization described in section 1381 of such Code and excluded from the gross income of such corporation by reason of subparagraph (A)—

"(i) such amount shall not be included in the gross income of any member of such organization when distributed in the form of a patronage dividend or otherwise, and

"(ii) no deduction shall be allowed to such organization by reason of any such distribution."

(o) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subsection (f) of section 995 is amended by redesignating the paragraphs following the paragraph (3) relating to deferred DISC income as paragraphs (4), (5), and (6).

(2) Subsection (h) of section 901 is amended by striking out "section 927(d)(6)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 927(d)(6))".

(3) Paragraph (3) of section 802(c) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is hereby repealed.

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 401(k) (relating to cash or deferred arrangements) are each amended by striking out "(or a pre-ERISA money purchase plan)" and inserting in lieu thereof ", a pre-ERISA money purchase plan, or a rural electric cooperative plan".

(2) RURAL ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE PLAN DEFINED.—Subsection (k) of section 401 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) RURAL ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE PLAN.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'rural electric cooperative plan' means any pension plan—

"(A) which is a defined contribution plan (as defined in section 414(i)), and

"(B) which is established and maintained by a rural electric cooperative (as defined in section 457(d)(9)(B)) or a national association of such rural electric cooperatives."

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to plan years beginning after December 31, 1984.

(h) CLARIFICATION OF DEFINITION OF NEWLY DISCOVERED OIL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (2) of section 4991(e) (defining newly discovered oil) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "Such term includes any production from a property which did not produce oil in commercial quantities during calendar year 1978. For purposes of the preceding sentence, a property shall not be treated as producing oil in commercial quantities during calendar year 1978 if, during calendar year 1978 (A) the aggregate amount of oil produced from such property did not exceed 2,200 barrels (whether or not such oil was sold), and (B) no well on such property was in production for a total of more than 72 hours."

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by paragraph (1) shall apply to oil removed after February 29, 1980.

(i) ALLOWANCE OF INVESTMENT CREDIT TO ELIGIBLE SECTION 501(d) ORGANIZATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 48 (relating to definitions and special rules) is amended by redesignating subsection (r) as subsection (s) and by inserting after subsection (q) the following new subsection:

"(r) CERTAIN SECTION 501(d) ORGANIZATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of eligible section 501(d) organizations—

"(A) any business engaged in by such organization for the common benefit of its members and the taxable income from which is included in the gross income of its members shall be treated as an unrelated business for purposes of paragraph (4) of subsection (a),

"(B) the qualified investment for each taxable year with respect to such business shall be apportioned pro rata among such members in the same manner as the taxable income of such organization, and

"(C) any individual to whom any investment has been apportioned under subparagraph (B) shall be treated for purposes of this subpart (other than section 47) as the taxpayer with respect to such investment, and such investment shall not (by reason of such apportionment) lose its character as an investment in new section 38 property or used section 38 property, as the case may be.

"(2) LIMITATION ON USED SECTION 38 PROPERTY APPLIED AT ORGANIZATION LEVEL.—The limitation under subparagraph (A) of subsection (c)(2) shall apply with respect to the section 501(d) organization.

"(3) RECAPTURE.—For purposes of applying section 47 to any property for which credit was allowed under section 38 by reason of this subsection—

"(A) the section 501(d) organization shall be treated as the taxpayer to which the credit under section 38 was allowed,

"(B) the amount of such credit allowed with respect to the property shall be treated as the amount which would have been allowed to the section 501(d) organization were such credit allowable to such organization,

"(C) subparagraph (D) of section 47(a)(5) shall not apply, and

"(D) the amount of the increase in tax under section 47 for any taxable year with respect to property to which this subsection applies shall be allocated pro rata among the members of such organization in the same manner as such organization's taxable income for such year is allocated among such members.

"(4) NO INVESTMENT CREDIT ALLOWED TO MEMBER IF MEMBER CLAIMS OTHER INVESTMENT CREDIT.—No credit shall be allowed to an individual by reason of this subsection if such individual claims a credit under section 38 without regard to this subsection. The amount of the credit not allowed by reason of the preceding sentence shall not be allowed to any other person.

"(5) ELIGIBLE SECTION 501(d) ORGANIZATION.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'eligible section 501(d) organization' means any organization—

"(A) which elects to be treated as an organization described in section 501(d) and which is exempt from tax under section 501(a), and

"(B) which does not provide a substantially higher standard of living for any person or persons than it does for the majority of the members of the community."

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to periods after December 31, 1978 (under rules similar to the rules of section 48(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954), in taxable years ending after such date.

(3) SPECIAL RULE.—If refund or credit of any overpayment of tax resulting from the application of this subsection is prevented at any time before the close of the date which is 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act by operation of any law or rule of law (including res judicata), refund or credit of such overpayment (to the extent attributable to the application of the amendments made by this subsection) may, nevertheless, be made or allowed if claim therefor is filed before the close of such 1-year period.

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to taxable years ending after August 13, 1981.

(k) AMENDMENT TO SECTION 368(a)(2)(F).—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Clause (ii) of section 368(a)(2)(F) (relating to certain transactions involving 2 or more investment companies) is amended to read as follows:

"(ii) A corporation meets the requirements of this clause if not more than 25 percent of the value of its total assets is invested in the stock and securities of any one issuer (other than stock in a regulated investment company, a real estate investment trust, or an investment company which meets the requirements of this clause (ii)), and not more than 50 percent of the value of its total assets is invested in the stock and securities of 5 or fewer issuers (other than stock in a regulated investment company, a real estate investment trust, or an investment company which meets the requirements of this clause (ii)). For purposes of this clause, all members of a controlled group of corporations (within the meaning of section 1563(a)) shall be treated as one issuer."

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this subsection shall apply as if included in section 2131 of the Tax Reform Act of 1976.

(l) AMENDMENTS RELATING TO SUBCHAPTER S CORPORATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—

(A) Section 1361(d)(3) (relating to qualified subchapter S trusts) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "A substantially separate and independent share of a trust treated as a separate trust under section 663(c) shall be treated as a separate trust for purposes of this subsection and subsection (c)."

(B) Section 1368(e)(1) (relating to definitions and special rules) is amended by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "and no adjustment shall be made for Federal taxes attributable to any taxable year in which the corporation was a C corporation."

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1982.

(m) AMENDMENT RELATING TO SECTION 2523.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (A) of section 2523(f)(4) (relating to election with respect to life estate for donee spouse) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) TIME AND MANNER.—An election under this subsection with respect to any property shall be made on or before the date prescribed by section 6075(b) for filing a gift tax return with respect to the transfer (determined without regard to section 6019(2)) and shall be made in such manner as the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe."

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this subsection shall apply to transfers made after December 31, 1985.

(n) AMENDMENTS RELATING TO SECTION 4994.—

(1) For purposes of section 4991(b), a "qualified charitable interest" shall include an economic interest in crude oil held by the Episcopal Royalty Company, an entity created in 1961 as a subsidiary of the Protestant Episcopal Church Foundation of the Diocese of Oklahoma.

(2) The amendment made by this subsection shall apply to oil removed after February 29, 1980.

(o) AMENDMENT RELATING TO SECTION 292 OF THE TAX EQUITY AND FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY ACT OF 1982.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) of section 7430 is amended by inserting "(payable in the case of the Tax Court in same manner as such an award by a district court)" after "a judgment".

CHAPTER 8—EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 1881. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Except as otherwise provided in this subtitle, any amendment made by this subtitle shall take effect as if included in the provision of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 to which such amendment relates.

Subtitle B—Related to Other Programs Affected by the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984

CHAPTER 1—AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SOCIAL SECURITY ACT PROGRAMS

SEC. 1882. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO COVERAGE OF CHURCH EMPLOYEES (SECTION 2603 OF THE DEFICIT REDUCTION ACT).

(a) CLARIFICATION OF EXCEPTION FOR MEMBERS OF CERTAIN RELIGIOUS FAITHS.—Subsection (g) of section 1402 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to members of certain religious faiths) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) SUBSECTION NOT TO APPLY TO CERTAIN CHURCH EMPLOYEES.—This subsection shall not apply with respect to services which are described in subparagraph (B) of section 3121(b)(8) (and are not described in subparagraph (A) of such section)."

(b) TREATMENT OF INCOME OF CERTAIN CHURCH, ETC., EMPLOYEES.—

(1) AMENDMENTS OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 1402 of such Code (relating to definitions for purposes of the tax on self-employment income) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN CHURCH EMPLOYEE INCOME.—

"(1) COMPUTATION OF NET EARNINGS.—In applying subsection (a)—

"(A) church employee income shall not be reduced by any deduction;

"(B) church employee income and deductions attributable to such income shall not be taken into account in determining the amount of other net earnings from self-employment.

"(2) COMPUTATION OF SELF-EMPLOYMENT INCOME.—

"(A) SEPARATE APPLICATION OF SUBSECTION (b)(2).—Paragraph (2) of subsection (b) shall be applied separately—

"(i) to church employee income, and

"(ii) to other net earnings from self-employment.

"(B) $100 FLOOR.—In applying paragraph (2) of subsection (b) to church employee income, '$100' shall be substituted for '$400'.

"(3) COORDINATION WITH SUBSECTION (a)(12).—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any amount allowable as a deduction under subsection (a)(12), and paragraph (1) shall be applied before determining the amount so allowable.

"(4) CHURCH EMPLOYEE INCOME DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'church employee income' means gross income for services which are described in section 3121(b)(8)(B) (and are not described in section 3121(b)(8)(A))."

(B) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(i) NET EARNINGS.—Paragraph (14) of section 1402(a) of such Code (defining net earnings from self-employment) is amended to read as follows:

"(13) in the case of church employee income, the special rules of subsection (j)(1) shall apply."

(ii) SELF-EMPLOYMENT INCOME.—Subsection (b) of section 1402 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In the case of church employee income, the special rules of subsection (j)(2) shall apply for purposes of paragraph (2)."

(iii) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The second sentence of section 1402(b) of such Code is amended by striking out "clause (1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraph (1)".

(2) AMENDMENTS OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 211 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i)(1) In applying subsection (a)—

"(A) church employee income shall not be reduced by any deduction;

"(B) church employee income and deductions attributable to such income shall not be taken into account in determining the amount of other net earnings from self-employment.

"(2)(A) Subsection (b)(2) shall be applied separately—

"(i) to church employee income, and

"(ii) to other net earnings from self-employment.

"(B) In applying subsection (b)(2) to church employee income, '$100' shall be substituted for '$400'.

"(3) Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any amount allowable as a deduction under subsection (a)(11), and paragraph (1) shall be applied before determining the amount so allowable.

"(4) For purposes of this section, the term 'church employee income' means gross income for services which are described in section 210(a)(8)(B) (and are not described in section 210(a)(8)(A))."

(B) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(i) NET EARNINGS.—Section 211(a)(13) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(13) In the case of church employee income, the special rules of subsection (i)(1) shall apply."

(ii) SELF-EMPLOYMENT INCOME.—Section 211(b) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In the case of church employee income, the special rules of subsection (i)(2) shall apply for purposes of paragraph (2)."

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to remuneration paid or derived in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1985.

(c) REVOCATION OF ELECTION UNDER SECTION 3121(w).—Paragraph (2) of section 3121(w) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to timing and duration of election) is amended by striking out the last 2 sentences and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The election may be revoked by the church or organization under regulations prescribed by the Secretary. The election shall be revoked by the Secretary if such church or organization fails to furnish the information required under section 6051 to the Secretary for a period of 2 years or more with respect to remuneration paid for such services by such church or organization, and, upon request by the Secretary, fails to furnish all such previously unfurnished information for the period covered by the election. Any revocation under the preceding sentence shall apply retroactively to the beginning of the 2-year period for which the information was not furnished."

SEC. 1882A. EXEMPTION FROM SOCIAL SECURITY COVERAGE FOR CERTAIN CLERGY.

(a) CONDITIONS FOR RECEIVING EXEMPTION.—

(1) Section 1402(e)(1) (relating to exemption from tax on self-employment income of certain ministers, members of religious orders, and Christian Science practitioners) is amended by inserting "and, in the case of an individual described in subparagraph (A), that he has informed the ordaining, commissioning, or licensing body of the church or order that he is opposed to such insurance" after "Act)".

(2) Section 1402(e), as amended by paragraph (1) of this subsection, is further amended—

(A) in paragraph (1) by striking out "Any individual" and inserting in lieu thereof "Subject to paragraph (2), any individual",

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively, and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) VERIFICATION OF APPLICATION.—The Secretary may approve an application for an exemption filed pursuant to paragraph (1) only if the Secretary has verified that the individual applying for the exemption is aware of the grounds on which the individual may receive an exemption pursuant to this subsection and that the individual seeks exemption on such grounds. The Secretary (or the Secretary of Health and Human Services under an agreement with the Secretary) shall make such verification by means of in-person or telephonic communication with the individual.".

(3) The amendments made by paragraphs (1) and (2) shall apply to applications filed after September 30, 1986.

(b) REVOCATION OF EXEMPTION.—

(1) Notwithstanding section 1402(e)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, any exemption which has been received under section 1402(e)(1) of such Code by a duly ordained, commissioned, or licensed minister of a church or a Christian Science practitioner, and which is effective for the taxable year in which this Act is enacted, may be revoked by filing an application therefor (in such form and manner, and with such official, as may be prescribed in regulations made under chapter 2 of subtitle A of such Code), if such application is filed—

(A) before the applicant becomes entitled to benefits under section 202(a) or 223 of the Social Security Act (without regard to section 202(j)(1) or 223(b) of such Act), and

(B) no later than the due date of the Federal income tax return (including any extension thereof) for the applicant's first taxable year beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Any such revocation shall be effective (for purposes of chapter 2 of subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and title II of the Social Security Act), as specified in the application, either with respect to the applicant's first taxable year ending on or after the date of the enactment of this Act or with respect to the applicant's first taxable year beginning after such date, and for all succeeding taxable years; and the applicant for any such revocation may not thereafter again file application for an exemption under such section 1402(e)(1). If the application is filed on or after the due date of the applicant's first taxable year ending on or after the date of the enactment of this Act and is effective with respect to that taxable year, it shall include or be accompanied by payment in full of an amount equal to the total of the taxes that would have been imposed by section 1401 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to all of the applicant's income derived in that taxable year which would have constituted net earnings from self-employment for purposes of chapter 2 of subtitle A of such Code (notwithstanding paragraph (4) or (5) of section 1402(c) of such Code) but for the exemption under section 1402(e)(1) of such Code.

(2) Paragraph (1) shall apply with respect to service performed (to the extent specified in such paragraph) in taxable years ending on or after the date of the enactment of this Act and with respect to monthly insurance benefits payable under title II of the Social Security Act on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of any individual for months in or after the calendar year in which such individual's application for revocation (as described in such paragraph) is filed (and lump-sum death payments payable under such title on the basis of such wages and self-employment income in the case of deaths occurring in or after such calendar year).

(B) section 2663(c)(1) of that Act is amended by striking out subparagraph (B).

(6) Section 211(c)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended by indenting subparagraph (G) two additional ems (for a total indentation of four ems) so as to align its left margin with the margins of the other subparagraphs in such section.

(7) Section 215(i)(5)(B) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "subdivision (I)" in clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "clause (i)(I)";

(B) by striking out "subdivisions (I) and (II)" in the matter between clauses (iii) and (iv) and inserting in lieu thereof "clause (i)".

(8) The heading of section 218(m) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"Wisconsin Retirement Fund".

(9) Section 221(e) of such Act is amended by striking out "under this section" in the first sentence.

(10) Section 223(g)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out the second comma after the term "benefits" where such term first appears in the matter following subparagraph (C).

(11)(A) Section 1402(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by indenting subparagraph (G) two additional ems (for a total indentation of four ems) so as to align its left margin with the margins of the other subparagraphs in such section.

(B) Section 3121(a)(8) of such Code is amended by moving subparagraph (B) two ems to the left, so that its left margin is in flush alignment with the margin of subparagraph (A) of such section.

(b) AMENDMENTS RELATING TO AFDC AND CHILD SUPPORT PROGRAMS.—

(1)(A) Section 402(a)(31)(A) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "(or such lesser amount as the Secretary may prescribe in the case of an individual not engaged in fulltime employment or not employed throughout the month)".

(B) The amendment made by this paragraph shall be effective beginning October 1, 1984.

(2)(A) Section 402(a)(38) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out in subparagraph (B) "section 406(a)," and inserting in lieu thereof "section 406(a) or in section 407(a) (if such section is applicable to the State),".

(B) Section 402(a)(38) of such Act is further amended by striking out the parenthetical phrase at the end and inserting in lieu thereof "; and for purposes of this paragraph the term 'income' includes (i) child or spousal support, regardless of the terms of the payer's obligation under State law to provide such support, and (ii) benefits paid under title II (notwithstanding section 205(j)), and section 208(e) shall not be applicable by reason of the inclusion of such benefits pursuant to this paragraph".

(C) Section 402(a)(38) of such Act is further amended by relocating so much of subparagraph (B) as follows "section 407(a) (if such section is applicable to the State)," (as added by subparagraph (A)) and placing it after and below subparagraph (B), beginning flush, and indenting it two ems so that its left margin is aligned with the left margin of that portion of section 402(a)(38) that precedes subparagraph (A) thereof.

(D) The amendments made by this paragraph shall be effective beginning October 1, 1984.

(3)(A) Section 402(a)(39) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting "(without regard to school attendance)" after "under the age selected by the State pursuant to section 406(a)(2)".

(B) The amendment made by subparagraph (A) shall be effective beginning October 1, 1984.

(4)(A) Section 402(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "and" after the semicolon at the end of paragraph (37), and by making any additional changes which may be necessary to assure that paragraphs (34) through (37) each end with a semicolon, paragraph (38) ends with "; and", and paragraph (39) ends with a period.

(B) Effective on the date of the enactment of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, section 2639(a) of that Act is amended by striking out the period immediately following "utility providing home energy" (in the quoted matter) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon.

(5) The placement of the last sentence of section 402(a) of the Social Security Act is modified to the extent necessary to assure that it begins flush to the full left margin without any indentation, immediately after and below the last of the numbered paragraphs.

(6) Section 457(c) of such Act is amended by striking out "subsection (b)(3) (A) and (B)" in the matter following paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (b)(4) (A) and (B)".

(7) Section 458(d) of such Act is amended by striking out "on behalf of individuals residing in another State" and inserting in lieu thereof "at the request of another State".

(8) Section 464(b)(2)(A) of such Act is amended by striking out "threshhold" and inserting in lieu thereof "threshold".

(9)(A) Part E of title IV of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"EXCLUSION FROM AFDC UNIT OF CHILD FOR WHOM FOSTER CARE MAINTENANCE PAYMENTS ARE MADE

"SEC. 477. Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, a child with respect to whom foster care maintenance payments are made under this part shall not, for the period for which such payments are made, be regarded as a member of a family for purposes of determining the amount of the benefits of the family under part A, and the income and resources of such child shall not be counted as the income and resources of a family under such part.".

(B) The amendment made by subparagraph (A) shall become effective October 1, 1984.

(c) AMENDMENTS TO GENERAL PROVISIONS.—

(1) Section 1101(a) of such Act is amended by shifting paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) to the right to the extent necessary to assure that their left margins are aligned with the left margins of the other numbered paragraphs.

(2) Section 1136(b)(7) of such Act is amended by striking out "nongovermental" and inserting in lieu thereof "nongovernmental".

(d) AMENDMENTS RELATING TO SSI PROGRAM.—

(1) The heading of section 1631(g) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"Reimbursement to States for Interim Assistance Payments".

(2) Section 1612(a)(1)(C) of such Act is amended by striking out "section 43" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 32".

(3) Section 1612(b) of such Act is amended by making any changes which may be necessary to assure that paragraph (11) ends with a semicolon, paragraph (12) ends with "; and", and paragraph (13) ends with a period.

(e) AMENDMENTS RELATING TO SOCIAL SERVICES PROGRAM.—

(1)(A) Section 2003(d) of such Act is repealed.

(B) Section 2003(b) of such Act is amended by striking out "(subject to subsection (d))".

"(c) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—If refund or credit of any overpayment of tax resulting from the application of the amendment made by subsection (a) is prevented at any time before the close of the date which is 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, by the operation of any law or rule of law (including res judicata), refund or credit of such overpayment (to the extent attributable to the application of such amendment) may, nevertheless, be made or allowed if claim therefor is filed on or before the close of such 1-year period."

CHAPTER 2—AMENDMENTS RELATED TO THE RETIREMENT EQUITY ACT OF 1984

SEC. 1897. TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS TO THE RETIREMENT EQUITY ACT OF 1984.

(a) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTIONS 102 AND 202 OF THE ACT.—

(1) TREATMENT OF CLASS-YEAR PLANS.—

(A) AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—Paragraph (4) of section 411(d) (relating to class-year plans) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) CLASS-YEAR PLANS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of subsection (a)(2) shall be treated as satisfied in the case of a class-year plan if such plan provides that 100 percent of each employee's right to or derived from the contributions of the employer on the employee's behalf with respect to any plan year is nonforfeitable not later than when such participant was performing services for the employer as of the close of each of 5 plan years (whether or not consecutive) after the plan year for which the contributions were made.

"(B) 5-YEAR BREAK IN SERVICE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A) if—

"(i) any contributions are made on behalf of a participant with respect to any plan year, and

"(ii) before such participant meets the requirements of subparagraph (A), such participant was not performing services for the employer as of the close of each of any 5 consecutive plan years after such plan year, then the plan may provide that the participant forfeits any right to or derived from the contributions made with respect to such plan year.

"(C) CLASS-YEAR PLAN.—For purposes of this section, the term 'class-year plan' means a profit-sharing, stock bonus, or money purchase plan which provides for the separate nonforfeitability of employees' rights to or derived from the contributions for each plan year."

(B) AMENDMENT OF ERISA.—Paragraph (3) of section 203(c) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is amended to read as follows:

"(3)(A) The requirements of subsection (a)(2) shall be treated as satisfied in the case of a class-year plan if such plan provides that 100 percent of each employee's right to or derived from the contributions of the employer on the employee's behalf with respect to any plan year is nonforfeitable not later than when such participant was performing services for the employer as of the close of each of 5 plan years (whether or not consecutive) after the plan year for which the contributions were made.

"(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A) if—

"(i) any contributions are made on behalf of a participant with respect to any plan year, and

"(ii) before such participant meets the requirements of subparagraph (A), such participant was not performing services for the employer as of the close of each of any 5 consecutive plan years after such plan year, then the plan may provide that the participant forfeits any right to or derived from the contributions made with respect to such plan year.

"(C) For purposes of this part, the term 'class year plan' means a profit-sharing, stock bonus, or money purchase plan which provides for the separate nonforfeitability of employees' rights to or derived from the contributions for each plan year."

(C) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this paragraph shall apply to contributions made for plan years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act; except that, in the case of a plan described in section 302(b) of the Retirement Equity Act of 1984, such amendments shall not apply to any plan year to which the amendments made by such Act do not apply by reason of such section 302(b).

(2) RULES RELATING TO LUMP SUM TREATMENT.—Subsection (e) of section 402 (relating to tax on lump sum distributions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) TREATMENT OF POTENTIAL FUTURE VESTING.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of determining whether any distribution which becomes payable to the recipient on account of the employee's separation from service is a lump sum distribution, the balance to the credit of the employee shall be determined without regard to any increase in vesting which may occur if the employee is re-employed by the employer.

"(B) RECAPTURE IN CERTAIN CASES.—If—

"(i) an amount is treated as a lump sum distribution by reason of subparagraph (A),

"(ii) special lump sum treatment applies to such distribution,

"(iii) the employee is subsequently re-employed by the employer; and

"(iv) as a result of services performed after being so re-employed, there is an increase in the employee's vesting for benefits accrued before the separation referred to in subparagraph (A), under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year (in which the increase in vesting first occurs) shall be increased by the reduction in tax which resulted from the special lump sum treatment (and any election under paragraph (4)(B) shall not be taken into account for purposes of determining whether the employee may make another election under paragraph (4)(B)).

"(C) SPECIAL LUMP SUM TREATMENT.—For purposes of this paragraph, special lump sum treatment applies to any distribution if any portion of such distribution—

"(i) is taxed under this subsection by reason of an election under paragraph (4)(B), or

"(ii) is treated as long-term capital gain under subsection (a)(2) of this section or section 403(a)(2).

"(D) VESTING.—For purposes of this paragraph the term 'vesting' means the portion of the accrued benefits derived from employer contributions to which the participant has a nonforfeitable right."

(3) RULES RELATING TO ROLLOVERS.—Paragraph (6) of section 402(a) (relating to special rollover rules) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(G) TREATMENT OF POTENTIAL FUTURE VESTING.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of paragraph (5), in determining whether any portion of a distribution on account of the employee's separation from service may be transferred in a transfer to which paragraph (5)(A) applies, the balance to the credit of the employee shall be determined without regard to any increase in vesting which may occur if the employee is re-employed by the employer.

"(ii) TREATMENT OF SUBSEQUENT DISTRIBUTIONS.—If—

"(I) any portion of a distribution is transferred in a transfer to which paragraph (5)(A) applies by reason of clause (i),

"(II) the employee is subsequently re-employed by the employer, and

"(III) as a result of service performed after being so re-employed, there is an increase in the employee's vesting for benefits accrued before the separation referred to in clause (i), then the provisions of paragraph (5)(D)(iii) shall apply to any distribution from the plan after the distribution referred to in clause (i). The preceding sentence shall not apply if the distribution referred to in subclause (I) is made without the consent of the participant."

(4) TREATMENT OF WITHDRAWAL OF MANDATORY CONTRIBUTIONS.—

(A) AMENDMENTS OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—

(i) Clause (ii) of section 411(a)(3)(D) is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The plan provision required under this clause may provide that such repayment must be made (I) in the case of a withdrawal on account of separation from service, before the earlier of 5 years after the first date on which the participant is subsequently re-employed by the employer, or the close of the first period of 5 consecutive 1-year breaks in service commencing after the withdrawal; or (II) in the case of any other withdrawal, 5 years after the date of the withdrawal."

(ii) Subparagraph (C) of section 411(a)(7) is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"The plan provision required under this subparagraph may provide that such repayment must be made (I) in the case of a withdrawal on account of separation from service, before the earlier of 5 years after the first date on which the participant is subsequently re-employed by the employer, or the close of the first period of 5 consecutive 1-year breaks in service commencing after the withdrawal; or (II) in the case of any other withdrawal, 5 years after the date of the withdrawal."

(B) AMENDMENTS OF ERISA.—

(i) Clause (ii) of section 203(a)(3)(D) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The plan provision required under this clause may provide that such repayment must be made (I) in the case of a withdrawal on account of separation from service, before the earlier of 5 years after the first date on which the participant is subsequently re-employed by the employer, or the close of the first period of 5 consecutive 1-year breaks in service commencing after the withdrawal; or (II) in the case of any other withdrawal, 5 years after the date of the withdrawal."

(ii) Subsection (e) of section 204 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"The plan provision required under this subsection may provide that such repayment must be made (A) in the case of a withdrawal on account of separation from service, before the earlier of 5 years after the first date on which the participant is subsequently re-employed by the employer, or the close of the first period of 5 consecutive 1-year breaks in service commencing after the withdrawal; or (B) in the case of any other withdrawal, 5 years after the date of the withdrawal."

(5) PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENTS UNDER SIMPLIFIED EMPLOYEE PENSIONS.—Subparagraph (A) of section 408(k)(2) (relating to participation requirements) is amended by striking out "age 25" and inserting in lieu thereof "age 21".

(b) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTIONS 103 AND 203 OF THE ACT.—

(1) CLARIFICATION OF QUALIFIED PRERETIREMENT SURVIVOR ANNUITY IN CASE OF TERMINATED VESTED PARTICIPANT.—

(A) AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—Paragraph (1) of section 417(c) (defining qualified preretirement survivor annuity) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"In the case of an individual who separated from service before the date of such individual's death, subparagraph (A)(ii)(I) shall not apply."

(B) AMENDMENT OF ERISA.—Paragraph (1) of section 205(e) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (defining qualified preretirement survivor annuity) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"In the case of an individual who separated from service before the date of such individual's death, subparagraph (A)(ii)(I) shall not apply."

(2) CLARIFICATION OF TRANSFEREE PLAN RULES.—

(A) AMENDMENTS OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—

(i) Subclause (III) of section 401(a)(11)(B)(iii) (relating to plans to which requirements of joint and survivor annuity and preretirement survivor annuity apply) is amended by striking out "indirect transferee" and inserting in lieu thereof "indirect transferee (in a transfer after December 31, 1984)".

(ii) Subparagraph (B) of section 401(a)(11) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"Clause (iii)(III) shall apply only with respect to the transferred assets (and income therefrom) if the plan separately accounts for such assets and any income therefrom."

(B) AMENDMENTS OF ERISA.—

(i) Clause (iii) of section 205(b)(1)(C) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is amended by striking out "a transferee" and inserting in lieu thereof "a direct or indirect transferee (in a transfer after December 31, 1984)".

(ii) Paragraph (1) of section 205(b) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"Clause (iii) of subparagraph (C) shall apply only with respect to the transferred assets (and income therefrom) if the plan separately accounts for such assets and any income therefrom."

(3) CLARIFICATION OF COORDINATION BETWEEN QUALIFIED JOINT AND SURVIVOR ANNUITY AND QUALIFIED PRERETIREMENT SURVIVOR ANNUITY.—

(A) AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—Clause (i) of section 401(a)(11)(A) is amended by striking out "who retires under the plan" and inserting in lieu thereof "who does not die before the annuity starting date".

(B) AMENDMENT OF ERISA.—Paragraph (1) of section 205(a) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is amended by striking out "who retires under the plan" and inserting in lieu thereof "who does not die before the annuity starting date".

(4) REQUIREMENT OF SPOUSAL CONSENT FOR USING PLAN ASSETS AS SECURITY FOR LOANS.—

(A) AMENDMENTS OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—

(i) Subparagraph (B) of section 417(a)(1) is amended by striking out "paragraphs (2) and (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (2), (3), and (4)".

(ii) Subsection (a) of section 417 is amended by redesignating paragraphs (4) and (5) as paragraphs (5) and (6), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) REQUIREMENT OF SPOUSAL CONSENT FOR USING PLAN ASSETS AS SECURITY FOR LOANS.—Each plan shall provide that, if section 401(a)(11) applies to a participant when part or all of the participant's accrued benefit is to be used as security for a loan, no portion of the participant's accrued benefit may be used as security for such loan unless—

"(A) the spouse of the participant (if any) consents in writing to such use during the 90-day period ending on the date on which the loan is to be so secured, and

"(B) requirements comparable to the requirements of paragraph (2) are met with respect to such consent."

(iii) Subsection (f) of section 417 is amended by redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (6) and by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) DISTRIBUTIONS BY REASON OF SECURITY INTERESTS.—If the use of any participant's accrued benefit (or any portion thereof) as security for a loan meets the requirements of subsection (a)(4), nothing in this section or section 411(a)(11) shall prevent any distribution required by reason of a failure to comply with the terms of such loan."

(B) AMENDMENT OF ERISA.—

(i) Subparagraph (B) of section 205(c)(1) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is amended by striking out "paragraphs (2) and (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (2), (3), and (4)".

(ii) Subsection (c) of section 205 of such Act is amended by redesignating paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) as paragraphs (5), (6), and (7), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) Each plan shall provide that, if this section applies to a participant when part or all of the participant's accrued benefit is to be used as security for a loan, no portion of the participant's accrued benefit may be used as security for such loan unless—

"(A) the spouse of the participant (if any) consents in writing to such use during the 90-day period ending on the date on which the loan is to be so secured, and

"(B) requirements comparable to the requirements of paragraph (2) are met with respect to such consent."

(iii) Section 205 of such Act is amended by redesignating subsection (j) as subsection (k) and by inserting after subsection (i) the following new subsection:

"(j) If the use of any participant's accrued benefit (or any portion thereof) as security for a loan meets the requirements of subsection (c)(4), nothing in this section shall prevent any distribution required by reason of a failure to comply with the terms of such loan."

(C) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(i) The amendments made by this paragraph shall apply with respect to loans made after August 18, 1985.

(ii) In the case of any loan which was made on or before August 18, 1985, and which is secured by a portion of the participant's accrued benefit, nothing in the amendments made by sections 103 and 203 of the Retirement Equity Act of 1984 shall prevent any distribution required by reason of a failure to comply with the terms of such loan.

(iii) For purposes of this subparagraph, any loan which is revised, extended, renewed, or renegotiated after August 18, 1985, shall be treated as made after August 18, 1985.

(5) CLARIFICATION OF NOTICE REQUIREMENT FOR INDIVIDUALS WHO BECOME PARTICIPANTS AFTER AGE 35, ETC.—

(A) AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—Subparagraph (B) of section 417(a)(3) (relating to plan to provide written explanations) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) EXPLANATION OF QUALIFIED PRERETIREMENT SURVIVOR ANNUITY.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Each plan shall provide to each participant, within the applicable period with respect to such participant (and consistent with such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe), a written explanation with respect to the qualified preretirement survivor annuity comparable to that required under subparagraph (A).

"(ii) APPLICABLE PERIOD.—For purposes of clause (i), the term 'applicable period' means, with respect to a participant, whichever of the following periods ends last:

"(I) The period beginning with the first day of the plan year in which the participant attains age 32 and ending with the close of the plan year preceding the plan year in which the participant attains age 35.

"(II) A reasonable period after the individual becomes a participant.

"(III) A reasonable period ending after paragraph (5) ceases to apply to the participant.

(iv) Clause (iv) of section 206(d)(3)(H) of such Act is amended by striking out "the 18-month period" and inserting in lieu thereof "the 18-month period described in clause (v)".

(v) Subparagraph (H) of section 206(d)(3) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(v) For purposes of this subparagraph, the 18-month period described in this clause is the 18-month period beginning with the date on which the first payment would be required to be made under the domestic relations order."

(3) COORDINATION WITH QUALIFIED PLAN REQUIREMENTS.—Section 401 is amended by redesignating the subsection relating to cross references as subsection (n) and by inserting after subsection (l) the following new subsection:

"(m) COORDINATION WITH QUALIFIED DOMESTIC RELATIONS ORDERS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such rules or regulations as may be necessary to coordinate the requirements of subsection (a)(13)(B) and section 414(p) (and the regulations issued by the Secretary of Labor thereunder) with the other provisions of this chapter."

(4) CLARIFICATION OF APPLICATION OF DOMESTIC RELATION PROVISIONS.—

(A) AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—Subsection (p) of section 414 is amended by redesignating paragraph (9) as paragraph (11) and by inserting after paragraph (8) the following new paragraph:

"(9) SUBSECTION NOT TO APPLY TO PLANS TO WHICH SECTION 401(a)(13) DOES NOT APPLY.—This subsection shall not apply to any plan to which section 401(a)(13) does not apply."

(B) AMENDMENT OF ERISA.—Paragraph (3) of section 206(d) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is amended by redesignating subparagraph (L) as subparagraph (N) and by inserting after subparagraph (K) the following new subparagraph:

"(L) This paragraph shall not apply to any plan to which paragraph (1) does not apply."

(5) BENEFIT PAYMENTS MADE IN ACCORDANCE WITH QUALIFIED DOMESTIC RELATIONS ORDERS NOT TREATED AS GARNISHMENTS FOR PURPOSES OF CONSUMER CREDIT PROTECTION ACT.—Paragraph (3) of section 206(d) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (as amended by paragraph (4)(B)) is further amended by inserting after subparagraph (L) the following new subparagraph:

"(M) Payment of benefits by a pension plan in accordance with the applicable requirements of a qualified domestic relations order shall not be treated as garnishment for purposes of section 303(a) of the Consumer Credit Protection Act.".

(6) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN SPOUSES.—

(A) AMENDMENT OF THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—Subparagraph (A) of section 414(p)(5) (relating to treatment of former spouse as surviving spouse for purposes of determining survivor benefits) is amended by striking out "sections 401(a)(11) and 417" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 401(a)(11) and 417 (and any spouse of the participant shall not be treated as a spouse of the participant for such purposes)".

(B) AMENDMENT OF ERISA.—Clause (i) of section 206(d)(3)(F) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is amended by striking out "section 205" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 205 (and any spouse of the participant shall not be treated as a spouse of the participant for such purposes)".

(7) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(A) AMENDMENTS OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—

(i) Subparagraph (F) of section 402(a)(6) is amended by striking out "paragraph (5)(A)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraph (5)".

(ii) Clause (i) of section 414(p)(1)(B) is amended by striking out "to a spouse," and inserting in lieu thereof "to a spouse, former spouse,".

(iii) Clause (i) of section 414(p)(6)(A) is amended by striking out "any other alternate payee" and inserting in lieu thereof "each alternate payee".

(A) AMENDMENT TO THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—Section 411(a)(11) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) DIVIDEND DISTRIBUTIONS OF ESOPS ARRANGEMENT.—This paragraph shall not apply to any distribution of dividends to which section 404(k) applies."

(B) AMENDMENT TO ERISA.—Section 203(e) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) This subsection shall not apply to any distribution of dividends to which section 404(k) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 applies."

(e) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 207 OF THE ACT.—

(1) Paragraph (1) of section 402(f) (relating to written explanation to recipients of distributions eligible for rollover treatment) is amended by striking out "qualifying rollover distribution" and inserting in lieu thereof "eligible rollover distribution".

(2) Paragraph (2) of section 402(f) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) ELIGIBLE ROLLOVER DISTRIBUTION.—The term 'eligible rollover distribution' means any distribution any portion of which may be excluded from gross income under subsection (a)(5) of this section or subsection (a)(4) of section 403 if transferred to an eligible retirement plan in accordance with the requirements of such subsection.

"(B) ELIGIBLE RETIREMENT PLAN.—The term 'eligible retirement plan' has the meaning given such term by subsection (a)(5)(E)(iv)."

(f) AMENDMENT RELATED TO SECTION 301 OF THE ACT.—

(1) SPECIAL RULE FOR ESOPS.—

(A) AMENDMENT TO THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—Section 411(d)(6) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) SPECIAL RULE FOR ESOPS.—For purposes of this paragraph, any—

"(i) tax credit employee stock ownership plan (as defined in section 409(a)), or

"(ii) employee stock ownership plan (as defined in section 4975(e)(7)), shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of this paragraph merely because it modifies distribution options in a nondiscriminatory manner."

(B) AMENDMENT TO ERISA.—Section 204(g) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, any—

"(A) tax credit employee stock ownership plan (as defined in section 409(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954), or

"(B) employee stock ownership plan (as defined in section 4975(e)(7) of such Code), shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of this subsection merely because it modifies distribution options in a nondiscriminatory manner."

(2) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (1) of section 204(g) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is amended by striking out "section 302(c)(8)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 302(c)(8) or 4281".

(g) AMENDMENT RELATED TO SECTION 302 OF THE ACT.—Paragraph (2) of section 302(b) of the Retirement Equity Act of 1984 is amended by striking out "January 1, 1987" and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1988".

(h) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 303 OF THE ACT.—

(1)(A) Subsection (c) of section 303 of the Retirement Equity Act of 1984 (relating to transitional rule for requirement of joint and survivor annuity and preretirement survivor annuity) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) ELIMINATION OF DOUBLE DEATH BENEFITS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a participant described in paragraph (2), death benefits (other than a qualified joint and survivor annuity or a qualified preretirement survivor annuity) payable to any beneficiary shall be reduced by the amount payable to the surviving spouse of such participant by reason of paragraph (2). The reduction under the preceding sentence shall be made on the basis of the respective present values (as of the date of the participant's death) of such death benefits and the amount so payable to the surviving spouse.

"(B) SPOUSE MAY WAIVE PROVISIONS OF PARAGRAPH (2).—In the case of any participant described in paragraph (2), the surviving spouse of such participant may waive the provisions of paragraph (2). Such waiver shall be made on or before the close of the second plan year to which the amendments made by section 103 of this Act apply. Such a waiver shall not be treated as a transfer of property for purposes of chapter 12 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and shall not be treated as an assignment or alienation for purposes of section 401(a)(13) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or section 206(d) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974."

(B) Section 2503 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) WAIVER OF CERTAIN PENSION RIGHTS.—If any individual waives, before the death of a participant, any survivor benefit, or right to such benefit, under section 401(a)(11) or 417, such waiver shall not be treated as a transfer of property by gift for purposes of this chapter."

(2) Subparagraph (A) of section 303(e)(2) of the Retirement Equity Act of 1984 (relating to treatment of certain participants who perform services on or after January 1, 1976) is amended by striking out "in the first plan year" and inserting in lieu thereof "in any plan year".

(3) Paragraph (2) of section 303(c) of the Retirement Equity Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In the case of a profit-sharing or stock bonus plan to which this paragraph applies, the plan shall be treated as meeting the requirements of the amendments made by sections 103 and 203 with respect to any participant if the plan made a distribution in a form other than a life annuity to the surviving spouse of the participant of such participant's nonforfeitable benefit."

(i) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Except as otherwise provided in subsections (a)(1)(C) and (b)(4)(C), any amendment made by this section shall take effect as if included in the provision of the Retirement Equity Act of 1984 to which such amendment relates.

CHAPTER 3—AMENDMENT RELATED TO THE CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT AMENDMENTS OF 1984

SEC. 1898. AMENDMENT RELATED TO THE CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT AMENDMENTS OF 1984.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 457(b)(3) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting "or administrative" after "court".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall become effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

POLITICS AND ELECTIONS IN HAITI

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, there are more people of Haitian descent in my district and in the greater New York area than anywhere else outside of Haiti. Many Haitians in New York have spoken with me about their worry and concern regarding the recent events in their homeland and I would like to briefly outline and explain these issues to my fellow Members of Congress.

Since the departure of Jean-Claude Duvalier in February of this year, the country has been ruled by the Duvalier-appointed military junta headed by Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy. This provisional government has been faced with political unrest, as the people of Haiti begin to consider their various political options. The Namphy government has scheduled parliamentary and presidential elections for November 1987 and the campaigning has already begun. The different factions in Haiti span the political spectrum; the far-right wish to return to Duvalier-style totalitarian control of the population and others want varying degrees of political and social reform. Many of the Haitian people want to see an end to the agricultural and manufacturing monopolies which hamstring the Haitian economy.

While the Haitian people look forward to electing a new government next year, they are also looking at the basis of the oppression of the former regime. They see the concentration of wealth in the hands of very few Haitians as a significant cause of economic and social oppression. Since Haiti is the poorest country in the Western Hemisphere, with an annual per capita income of $300, there are millions of Haitians who resent the present economic structure. This dire poverty is a very destabilizing political influence. The frustration and unrest of the poor in Haiti in concert with the hostility toward residual Duvalier influence are threatening and weakening the interim government. In Haiti, the promise of change which came with Duvalier's exit, coupled with poverty, has created a volatile situation which can only be resolved by elections which are both open and fair.

The poverty and political unrest which Haiti faces are similar to those in Central America countries. When the Governments of El Salvador, Guatamala, and Honduras held elections to determine their people's choice for a ruling government, many nations of the world were there to watch. The Organization of American States and the United States Government have both sent delegations to observe elections in Central America. These groups of observers helped to ensure that the elections are being conducted fairly and honestly. When the Haitian people hold their elections at each stage, as they develop their constitution and in 1987, the United States and the OAS should be observers. As the world's most powerful democracy, we should support the people of Haiti as they determine their political future in free and democratic elections. This will improve America's stature with the Haitian people and will be the first step toward constructive cooperation with the new government in the Republic of Haiti.

OUR ENVIRONMENTAL LEGACY

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, world attention has been riveted to environmental crises such as Bhopal and Chernobyl that have ramifications that will be felt for generations to come. In addition to these global crises, there is not a community in the United States that has not been affected by the issue of hazardous waste disposal and landfill siting. The environmental questions that we consider today, whether they relate to the effects of environmental accidents in other countries or the fear of living near a hazardous waste landfill are questions that will affect our children and our grandchildren. The legacy we will pass on to our children will include a contaminated environment if we do not act to ensure that communities will be free of leaking landfills and chronic and accidental toxic industrial releases.

I recently read an insightful article that was written by Jack C. Sheppard, Sr., the mayor of Wenonah, NJ, in the form of a letter to his grandson, Brent. Mayor Sheppard rightfully points out that we have a responsibility to preserve and protect the legacy that includes a clean environment and unpolluted resources. We will continue to fail our responsibility if we continue to falsely believe that we can build sanitary and safe landfills and site them within a community without endangering current residents and future generations. Our legacy will be a "chemical time bomb" rather than a green Earth.

I wanted to commend to the attention of my colleagues Mayor Sheppard's article which appeared in the Gloucester County Times:

The article follows:

"EXPERTS?" MOSTLY TO BLAME FOR SPOILING EARTH

(By Jack C. Sheppard, Sr.)

This letter is in the form of an apology to my 10-month-old grandson, Brent, who will have to live on whatever becomes of this planet long after I am gone.

Brent, if I wait until you are old enough to understand what I want to tell you, either I will have forgotten what I wanted to say because of the infirmities of age, or I will no longer be here.

I just feel the need to apologize to you for the excesses of my generation and most of the generations following mine, and to give you my opinion of how we messed up our custodianship of the territory we occupy on this planet Earth.

And I will start by accepting part of the blame for helping degrade our earth, sky and water, if only because I didn't try hard enough to convince myself and others that we each have a responsibility to protect and to conserve the resources that have been entrusted to us for ourselves and future generations.

We, and that includes me, have used too much, wasted too much, indulged ourselves too much, and have expected others to mend their ways so we can continue to do our thing unabated.

Because of our excesses Brent, you and your generation may have a difficult time finding land and air that isn't tainted and water that is drinkable without complicated and expensive treatment.

However, while I accept some of the responsibility for the problems we are leaving you, I also want you to know that in my opinion, the "experts?" of my generation are deserving of an even greater share of the blame than we common folk.

Notice my use of the word "experts?" I do this purposely to make a distinction from the good experts who are learned, experienced people of principle who know the truth of a given matter, and will stand by that truth no matter what.

But there are other experts, who I will refer to as "experts?" who stand ready to sell their very soul for the almighty dollar and the truth be damned.

Many of these "experts?" including bureaucrats, engineers, chemists, environmentalists, planners, and, yes, politicians too, appear to have compromised their own principles and ideals, and are for hire to whomever will pay the most for their services.

You can hire "experts?" to tell you that landfills, toxic-waste sites and incinerators are good for you, or bad for you, even though they may personally believe just the opposite.

A biologist recently told me that in his field they have a name for them. They are called "biostitutes," and I won't go into detail as to what he meant by that.

As an example, for many years "experts?" in the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) have both authorized and supervised the construction and use of the so-called "sanitary landfills," only to jump on the bandwagon against them when they found, too late, that they were aiding in the creation of chemical "time-bombs."

And some more of these same "experts?" are now trying to convince us that we can build "safe" and "sanitary" landfills in our county, even though our track record to date is just awful.

And now these same "experts?" are telling us it is not only safe, but desirable, to place a large solid-waste incinerator in the middle of a densely populated area near Westville even though other experts, or "experts?" (we don't know which they are yet), say it's a dumb idea. Who do we believe?

And, Brent, for a great many years these "experts?" from the New Jersey DEP have demanded and received monthly reports of water withdrawal by both quantity and quality from municipalities and industry without ever, until just recently, mentioning that we are taking far too much water out of the ground, and apparently have been doing so for a long, long time.

As a matter of fact, Brent, during last summer's water shortage an "expert?" in the governor's office wrote me a letter explaining the reasons for the drought emergency, and never once mentioned that we have a problem with our underground water supply in South Jersey.

I wouldn't be at all surprised to find that the "experts?" withheld this information until they used up the millions of dollars voted by the people of our state by the most recent "Water Supply Bond Issue," almost all of which was used in North Jersey.

So now, the "experts?" at the N.J. DEP are proposing that the municipalities bear the brunt of water conservation efforts by mandatory reductions of water usage of as much as 35 percent.

To illustrate how silly this approach is, let me quote what Dr. Robert L. Johnson, professor of civil engineering at Lehigh University has to say about our usage of water.

Dr. Johnson says, "In Pennsylvania, the amount of water used for industrial purposes and electrical generation is 90 percent of the total, much of it being lost in the industrial process."

The article in which he is quoted notes that only about 6 percent of water usage is by households, yet most calls for conservation seem to emphasize saving water in the home. Says Dr. Johnson, "In terms of the total amount of water saved through household conservation efforts, it doesn't make a nickel's worth of difference."

Turning to a related matter Brent, I, as did many others, grew up believing the chemical industry slogan "Better Living Through Chemistry," only to find that the residue and waste from the products the industry is producing are to a great measure responsible for contaminating our air, soil, and water?

Few can deny that the quality of our surroundings is declining, that our waters are polluted, that our air is being fouled, that we are using up irreplaceable resources.

And too many of these "experts?" of our world have been in charge during the time that this has been happening.

What we need Brent is a new breed of experts who will seek the truth of a matter, and stand up for it even if the truth is the opposite of what they or their employer is trying to prove.

What we need are experts who will stand up for principles and beliefs, even if the truth of a given matter might cost them their job or a fat commission.

And Brent, what we also need is a new breed of politician who is willing to serve for one term only, if standing by his or her own convictions and opinions and challenging the "experts?" jeopardizes his or her chance for another term in office.

But getting back to my apology to you, Brent, I must tell you that if there is to be any hope for your generation and those following, then all of us, beginning right now must assert ourselves and take "experts?" to task.

We must say to them "tell us the truth even if it hurts you to do so or we will lose our faith in you altogether, and will depend more on our own intelligence and innate common sense to get the job done without you."

I am hoping Brent that each of us will begin accepting responsibility for our own actions and activities without waiting to be told to do so by "experts?," who we are not even sure we can trust or believe.

I am hoping that we will all take a good hard look at what we are doing to our surroundings, and start to conduct our lifestyles in a way that is more certain to leave something worthwhile for you, Brent, so you too can enjoy the wonders of this good earth as we have been able to do during our lifetimes.

And Brent, if we fail to get the job done in time to save something for you, I hope it isn't because we didn't even try.

From your loving Grandad.

EXECUTION OF MENTALLY ILL IS UNCIVILIZED

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, Jerome Bowden was executed in the State of Georgia. Many protested his execution based on the fact that he was mentally retarded. The pardon board which declined to stay the execution made their decision based on the determination that Mr. Bowden was capable of knowing right from wrong. However, for testimonial purposes, children as young as 4 have been able to testify based on the fact that they knew the simple difference between the truth and a lie.

Mr. Bowden's IQ score was 65. At this level, it is highly questionable whether or not he could effectively assist counsel in conducting a defense. The other man convicted of the same murder was given a prison sentence while Mr. Bowden was condemned to death.

Looking at the primary argument for capital punishment, that it deters one from committing a capital crime, we must also look to whether or not a person was capable of understanding what the punishment was. If one is incapable of understanding what death is, it is hard to imagine that the threat of death could deter one from an act. Based on Mr. Bowden's IQ score of 65, it is hard to imagine that Mr. Bowden had the ability to comprehend death on the same level as a child of 6 or 7. Even the most ardent supporters of capital punishment have not suggested that we should execute children of that age and yet the Georgia board which reviewed the sentence made no determination of whether or not Mr. Bowden could even comprehend what was to happen to him. Life experience had undoubtedly taught him to fear pain, but it could not have taught a person of such limited ability to comprehend death.

Capital punishment remains a game of chance. It falls most frequently on the poor, those of limited intelligence and minorities. It is irreversible and provides no recognition of the fact that error is possible. Mr. Bowden, poor, mentally retarded, and black got death. His codefendant got life. This should concern all who believe, as I do, that there should be equality before the law.

VOTING RECORD OF HON. DON J. PEASE

HON. DONALD J. PEASE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, it has become my practice to insert periodically in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a list of key votes that I have cast in the U.S. House of Representatives.

The list is arranged in this manner: Each item begins with the rollcall vote number of the bill or resolution that the House was considering, followed by the bill number of a summary of the issue. This is followed by my own vote on the issue and the vote outcome.

The list of votes covers the period of January 23, 1986, through June 19, 1986:

KEY VOTES OF CONGRESSMAN DON J. PEASE

(7) H.R. 2443. Expedited Funds Availability Act. Substitute replacing the check-hold provisions with a requirement that the Federal Reserve Board within 18 months issue preliminary regulations to shorten the check-holding period, and within 3 years issue final regulations. No. Rejected 80–211.

REPORT TO THE 16TH DISTRICT ON THE 26TH MEXICO-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in the occasion of a special order addressing the United States-Mexico Interparliamentary Conference. I appreciate the comments of my colleague from Texas, the chairman of the House of Representatives delegation, for his remarks and for the high priority he accords to United States-Mexico relations.

Mr. Speaker, last month I had the distinct pleasure of being a member of the U.S. delegation to the XXVI United States-Mexico Interparliamentary Conference in Colorado Springs, CO. Relations between the United States and Mexico are of paramount importance not only because of the geographic proximity of our nations but because our affairs are inextricably bound. Our countries share a proud history of good relations, trust, and cooperation.

The importance of working through our difficulties is of particular importance at this time in view of the irresponsible criticisms that have been leveled against Mexico by some administration officials and by Senator HELMS. As I am sure my distinguished colleagues are aware, witnesses at Senate hearings targeted Mexico's efforts in regard to drug trafficking and corruption at high government levels. Not only is the factual accuracy of these statements highly questionable, but I do not believe that waging such criticism is a constructive way of conducting diplomatic relations with our southern neighbors. Fortunately, since these unfortunate statements were made there have been constructive efforts on both sides to try to reestablish communication and trust.

I am glad that others have joined me in expressing full confidence in the integrity of President Miguel de la Madrid, and we appreciate the dedicated and conscientious efforts of the Mexican Government to cooperate with the United States in fighting the war on drugs. Together, we can be more effective than either country can be working individually, and no one country can be blamed for the failure to control the demand or supply of drugs. Our drug efforts are but one example of the great need for cooperation between us. There are a number of other issues that are of mutual concern and on which we can continue to work together. It is for this reason that I welcomed the opportunity to keep open the channels of communication with our neighbor at the Interparliamentary Conference.

I appreciated the candor with which Mexican delegates addressed the issues. I am hopeful that by participating in similar frank discussions we will be able to overcome the misunderstandings that many times complicate our relations. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to provide a report to my colleagues on the issues included in the conference's agenda:

UNITED STATES-MEXICO INTERPARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE REPORT

IN-BOND INDUSTRIES

Twin plants, or maquiladoras as they are commonly known in Mexico, continue to play an important role in the development of that country's economy, as they provide a growing number of jobs in Mexico.

The number of maquiladoras on the Mexican side has increased greatly as a result of the continuing devaluation of the peso. Currently about 700 maquiladoras operate along the border, as well as others located in the country's interior. For Mexico, the maquiladoras are its second largest growing industry, behind only petroleum and ahead of tourism, and play a major part in that country's plan to restructure its economy and pay off its foreign debt. A number of Mexico's border cities have seen a boom in population increases and economic development as a by-product of the twin plants. In Ciudad Juarez, for instance, across the Rio Grande from El Paso, about three-fourths of the city's work force of 266,000 is directly or indirectly supported by the more than 180 maquiladoras in the city.

At the Interparliamentary Conference, Mexican delegates recognized the importance of the twin plants in creating jobs for Mexico, and expressing their concern over several problems facing these industries on which they sought U.S. support, including the establishment of day care centers in view of the fact that 69% of the maquiladora employees are women, expediting these manufactured products through customs, and not counting these products as part of the national exporting industry, since otherwise the national quota of products will be rapidly exhausted. In addition, the problems of the overburdened infrastructure in Mexican Border communities due to this rapid growth were discussed. We also discussed the loss of U.S. jobs and the needs to attract supply and other by-product industry to the U.S. side of the border.

FOREIGN DEBT AND OIL

The crisis in which Mexico finds itself as a result of its foreign debt obligations and the decline in the price of oil is common knowledge. Indeed, the country is experiencing the most severe economic crisis of its contemporary history. During 1985, for instance, 53% of Mexico's exports and 45% of the foreign currency coming into the country were used to service the debt commitments. The amount required to meet its annual obligations is four times the income derived from the maquiladoras and tourism. It is clear that the growing proportion of resources used for this purpose imposes limitations on economic growth and diminishes the resources that could be used to finance imports. Due to the fact that about one-third of the Mexican public sector's foreign debt is owed to American banks, that country's foreign debt has strong implications for the U.S. economy and for economic relations between our countries. We acknowledge that Mexico has adopted positive economic policy measures, which have included promoting non-oil exports and reducing imports. Participants at the conference joined in recognizing the seriousness of Mexico's economic situation, and in calling for a viable solution that is more realistic than the mere periodic restructuring of the debt.

Mexican delegates expressed their apprehensions about the Baker plan, appreciating its intent but saying the strategy it proposes is insufficient because, among other things, Latin America would continue being a net exporter of capital. A fair and lasting solution to the debt problem demands new commercial practices between the industrialized nations and the developing countries, and I am glad to see that new approaches are currently being developed by our country to deal with a problem not unique to our neighbor, but that is rather an international phenomenon.

BORDER ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

The quality of the environment in the areas along the U.S.-Mexico border is of great concern to our countries. Because of our geographic proximity, it becomes extremely important to mutually acknowledge the need for action since the programs implemented in one country will inevitably affect the other. I would like to commend the Mexican government for its willingness to cooperate with the United States and for its most recent efforts during the last year to work in easing our environmental problems.

Last summer, a very significant step towards these goals was taken when our two countries entered into a "gray triangle" agreement providing that our smelters along the border would be brought into compliance with our respective Clear Air Acts by 1988. This "gray triangle" is formed by the Nacozari smelter in Sonora, the Cananea smelter also in Sonora and the Douglas smelter in Arizona. In the meantime, the smelters are being brought into interim control by the use of portable self-operating monitors.

It is generally believed that economically less developed countries tend to postpone environmental pollution control in favor of economic expansion, which in turn has political repercussions. The United States realizes that Mexico was hard-hit by the tragic earthquakes in the country's interior and by the oil price decline in world markets. In view of this, we are appreciative of the fact that environmental policy which affects our country has remained a priority concern on which we can develop joint strategies.

BORDER CROSSINGS

The Interparliamentary Conference also provided an opportunity to discuss the issue of international bridges and border crossings. I have made the bridge expansion project in the El Paso/Ciudad Juarez area a priority of my office, as I am regularly contacted by residents of my congressional district who must deal on a daily basis with the problems of bridge congestion. I was pleased to announce to the Mexican delegates that I feel confident the Appropriations Committee will approve the funding to complete the expansion of the Zaragosa international bridge in this area.

This project has involved more than three years of bilateral coordination with the Mexican government, and both the economies of Ciudad Juarez and El Paso will benefit greatly from this bridge expansion. Furthermore, bilateral relations between both nations can only be strengthened when mutually beneficial projects can be carried out.

Members of the Mexican delegation reiterated their concerns about inadequate staffing levels at the ports of entry by the U.S. government. It is difficult to explain why Mexico should commit new bridge resources in these difficult economic times when the U.S. refuses to fully staff existing bridges.

TRADE

The trade relations between Mexico and the U.S. strongly reflect the asymmetrical interdependence of the two countries. This economic interdependence is manifested in the areas of commerce, finance, oil, direct investment, public debt, technology transfer, border transactions, migratory movements and tourism. For the United States, trade with Mexico represents 6% of its total trade, while for Mexico, the U.S. represents a little more than 60% of the total sales abroad. In simple terms, this means that for each dollar the Mexicans use to purchase abroad, 60 cents go the the United States, while for each dollar of American imports, 6 cents go to Mexico. In addition, Mexico is the third largest client of the U.S., after Japan and Canada, and its third supplier of industrial raw materials and capital goods, while the U.S. is the first client and supplier of Mexico.

Mexico has taken positive steps in implementing measures to reorder its economic structure and stimulate the volume of foreign currency entering the country. In particular, we are pleased that Mexico has begun negotiations to join the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the international organization devoted to promoting freer trade. In so doing, Mexico recognizes that foreign policy constitutes an inseparable element of national development. GATT can be helpful in promoting non-petroleum exports, in increasing its access to world markets, and in resolving trade disputes. In this respect, we strongly support the Mexican government in its negotiations.

U.S.-MEXICO SUMMIT

I was pleased that several days before the Interparliamentary Conference took place, the House of Representatives, passed my amendment to the Trade and International Economic Policy Reform Act of 1986. This amendment calls for both nations to conduct a bilateral economic trade summit, which I believe would be very helpful in developing policy priorities.

The amendment also would set up a Cabinet-level U.S.-Mexico Bilateral Commission to provide Congress with more comprehensive information on all issues relating to Mexico. On the U.S. side, the Commission would be chaired by the Secretary of State and would consist of representatives from the Departments of State, Justice, Treasury and Commerce as well as the U.S. Trade Representative. The commission would also receive input from all federal agencies having jurisdiction over any issues relating to Mexico. I am hopeful that the lines of communication established at this and prior Interparliamentary Conferences will be strengthened at a U.S.-Mexico summit, and that the summit will provide a fresh approach to U.S.-Mexico relations that is clearly necessary.

VALEDICTORY SPEECH

HON. JOE BARTON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with you and Members of this body the valedictory speech of a young man from my congressional district. The speech focuses on President Reagan's decision to bomb Libya in retaliation for numerous acts of terrorism against Americans. It measures that decision against the qualities of good leadership.

The speech was written by Anthony S. Vivona of the Woodlands and given at the McCullough High School commencement. Anthony will attend Stanford University this fall on a ROTC scholarship.

It is refreshing to read what is good about America coming from one of our future leaders.

The speech follows:

Throughout the history of earth, the most influential and important leaders have all possessed some basic virtues in common. One of the most important of these is a sense of originality, for it is the uniqueness of a leader which distinguishes him from a follower.

Too many times does society place pressures upon individuals to be a specific type of person. Now it is not the laws which I speak of, for without laws, order would become an unending chaos. I am speaking about the social norms which are placed upon each one of us. The originality within leadership is best stated as the ability and will to risk embarrassment by doing something which has not been done before, even if it directly contradicts ideas considered as social normalcy. Now this is not to say that the person who dyes his hair purple and listens to English punk rock is exemplary of leadership potential. For this, one must feel true moral conviction toward a particular purpose. This is what distinguishes nonconformism from originality.

For those seeking a sense of uniqueness, I'd like to offer a few TIPS. You see, TIPS is my acronym concerning the acquisition of originality. To begin, T stands for thought. Before the implementation of any plan, a leader must find out who may be affected, directly or indirectly. This is also the area where the means must be acknowledged as the best way to accomplish the end product. If in the process of the achievement of a goal, someone is hurt, the means must be justified and necessary. Without thought, the plans of an individual may benefit a select few at the expense of the community.

The I is characterized by imagination. It is imagination which makes inventors famous and brings wealth to writers. More and more, corporations are seeking to hire bright, young executives with fresh ideas. With the implementation of imagination, anything is possible.

Purpose is the third characteristic. Moral purpose is what gives the backbone to the originality found within leadership. This purpose may be seen as having deep psychological undertones, or it may seek only entertainment value; but either way, that person should feel strongly about what he is doing.

Finally, S stands for satisfaction. As with purpose, you should feel good about why you have decided as you did. You should hopefully feel some satisfaction with the results also.

Now you may be saying, it may all be fine and easy to say this, but does it really happen? Well, this year America faced an experience never felt by our younger generation. In April of 1986, a natural leadership containing originality of thought was required. The event I am speaking of is the United States bombing of Libya in retaliation to former Libyan government sponsored terrorist acts.

Before anything physical was done, the President had to think about what to do. America could play the passive, complaining world powers and state disapproval of these acts, or America could take a stand for its self-preservation and the protection of its citizens at the cost of being the great Yankee Imperialist. The choice was not an easy one, and a lot of thought went into the decision.

The imagination which came into play was in the planning stages. President Reagan weighed his options and chose the one which was the most feasible, clear, and effective. America had made threats which were blatantly ignored. The President was now in a positin of difficulty, so he chose his methods.

The purpose of the assault was made clear to American citizens and to the world when Reagan made his public announcement only hours after the bombing. America would no longer allow terrorist acts to be inflicted upon American citizens without reprisals. Also, each pilot had a clear, concise plan of attack to minimize civilian casualties. Again, the purpose was well thought out. America was retaliating against government sponsored terrorism, not innocent civilians.

With the attack complete, Reagan expressed his satisfaction with the performance of all involved individuals. He also stated that any nation which was found sponsoring terrorism against Americans would receive similar treatment.

In closing, I only ask each one of you to recognize the importance of originality in society. By following my four tips: thought, imagination, purpose, satisfaction; I hope that each of you may continue to lead productive and truly unique lives.

ATTACKING THE BACKUP IN BOSTON HARBOR

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, the Nation has made great progress in alleviating water pollution. But as we await the conference committee's action on the reauthorization of the Clean Water Act, it is time to remind ourselves that much remains to be done.

I would like to call attention to an article in the New York Times of Sunday, June 22, 1986, that describes the continuing pollution crisis that faces Boston Harbor.

ATTACKING THE BACKUP IN BOSTON HARBOR

(By Matthew L. Wald)

BOSTON.—At the New England Aquarium, visitors can see re-creations of coral reefs, tidal wetlands, the Amazon River and other underwater habitats. One of the more striking exhibits is a tank that represents Boston Harbor. It is littered with shoe soles, discarded bottles and rusty metal. But the first thing the eye settles on amid the murk is a sewage pipe.

The volume of water that flows naturally into Boston Harbor from three major rivers—the Neponset, the Charles and the Mystic—is exceeded by the volume of sewage that enters the harbor from 43 towns and cities of eastern Massachusetts with a total population of 2 million. And this sewage has been washing up on beaches in Cohasset, 10 miles from the city of Boston, at the southern mouth of the harbor, in Plymouth, 20 miles farther south on Cape Cod Bay, and on beaches 50 miles across the bay.

In 1982, the pollution prompted Quincy, abutting Boston on the south, to sue the city in state court. After a Superior Court judge threatened to put Boston's water authority into receivership and bar new sewer connections, the Massachusetts Legislature created the Water Resources Authority to improve the system.

Meanwhile, a private group, the Conservation Law Foundation, sued in Federal District Court demanding that the Environmental Protection Agency enforce Federal pollution-control standards. As a result of that suit, a Federal judge, A. David Mazzone, is setting the schedule for repair and modernization.

The need for improvement is clear. When weather conditions are right, airline passengers approaching Logan Airport can see a brown plume spreading under water from Greater Boston's 20-year-old sewage treatment plant on Deer Island, in the north harbor. A smaller, older plant operates at Nut Island. The combination is far from adequate.

If the plants are not malfunctioning—a common occurrence—or rainstorms have not overloaded the system, causing raw sewage to flow into the harbor from 108 overflow pipes, the two facilities remove a substantial portion of the solids from the 560 million gallons of sewage they process every day.

But even when the system is working properly, both the solids and the sewage are ultimately dumped into the shallow waters of the harbor, a practice that Judge Mazzone has described as "incomprehensible." Under the Judge's schedule, which mandates an end to sludge dumping by December 1991, the water authority has chosen Deer Island as the site for a new treatment plant that will replace both existing facilities.

THE INDUSTRIAL FACTOR

Where the sludge will go remains to be decided. Land disposal is more difficult for Boston than for many other cities, according to Douglas I. Foy, executive director of the Conservation Law Foundation, because of toxic industrial discharges the state has done little to curb.

Among the disposal possibilities is dumping at sea, 106 miles off the New Jersey coast. That approach would require shipping the sludge 200 miles from Boston, and it is unpopular with New Jersey officials, including Representative James J. Howard, Democrat of Wall Township and the chairman of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation. Mr. Howard is the sponsor of a bill that would block dumping off New Jersey.

Boston's difficulties grow out of its decision to seek a waiver under the Federal Clean Water Act, which mandated that cities build sewage treatment plants by 1977. Though most cities took steps to comply with the law, Boston proposed instead that it construct a nine-mile pipe to carry sewage to sea.

Mr. Foy, whose conservation law group sued to force the Environmental Protection Agency to consider the pipe on its merits, argued that in cities like Los Angeles, a nine-mile pipeline would dump sewage in water hundreds of feet deep and "a current that will carry the stuff right to Japan." But the waters nine miles off Boston, Mr. Foy said, are only 118 feet deep and not far from the Stellwager Bank, a feeding ground for whales.

Now the E.P.A. is suing, pressing the Water Resources Authority to start construction on new treatment plants. The authority has raised sewer rates 60 percent and will probably raise them again. But the portion of the total cost of treatment plants that Washington will contribute has been cut from 90 percent to 55 percent, and even 55 percent of the $2 billion bill for the Boston plan would exceed the Federal allocation for all of Massachusetts.

Said Michael R. Deland, regional administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, "Boston has made one of the most expensive public policy mistakes in the history of New England."

JAPANESE TECHNICAL LITERATURE ACT

HON. TIM VALENTINE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, the House on June 23 passed by voice vote the Japanese Technical Literature Act, S. 1073, which establishes within the Department of Commerce a program for the collection and dissemination of Japanese scientific and technical information. I would like to commend the leadership of the House Science and Technology Committee, of which I am a member, for recognizing a critical need and acting in such a timely fashion to assist an American business.

The United States must continue to maintain its technological leadership. The Government cannot do it alone, our universities cannot, and our industries cannot—we must all work together to maximize the increasingly scarce Federal funds that are available.

Japanese industries are skillfully developing and using technologies that increase productivity and international competitive strength. Certain traditional industries throughout the country—and especially those in North Carolina, such as textiles, flexible and computer integrated manufacturing, wood products, and food processing—are among some of the primary examples of industries that have been adversely affected by the recent surge of imports. Each of these industries has lost opportunities for modernization due to the lack of technology translations.

We in North Carolina have recognized the plight of our traditional industries and have begun to address them.

In my district, the North Carolina Science and Technology Research Center has undertaken an innovative approach for making valuable Japanese scientific and technical information available to American industries, which are in turn a critical generator of employment opportunities.

The center has: Conducted surveys to determine potential beneficiaries of Japanese technical and scientific information; established networks of Japanese translators both here and in Japan; and arranged cooperative agreements through university extension programs, trade associations, and Local and State governments to promote the use of Japanese technical and scientific information through publications, meetings, and workshops.

Many companies, trade associations, and universities have expressed great interest in acquiring Japanese scientific and technical information. They all believe that the use of technical information from Japan and other foreign countries could provide significant advantages to domestic industries now faced with encroachment from foreign imports. This unique project could serve as a prototype for the Nation, combining the resources of industry, universities, and the Government.

The Japanese Technical Literature Act could assist the North Carolina Science and Technology Research Center in promoting these arrangements. This legislation represents the kind of innovative thinking that is essential if we are to regain our competitive advantage. We are making a relatively modest investment that could be repaid many times over in the forms of modernized production, employment opportunities, and a renewed competitiveness in the international marketplace. I wholeheartedly endorse and support the bill.

"MICAJAH AUTRY DAY" IN AUTRYVILLE, NC

HON. CHARLES WHITLEY

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. WHITLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of Micajah Autry, hero of the Alamo, soldier in the War of 1812 and a native of Autryville, NC.

Micajah Autry was captured by the British in the War of 1812 and was held a prisoner of war in Charleston, SC. Upon his release he returned to his home in Sampson County, NC, then went to Tennessee to study law and open a practice in the Volunteer State.

He joined up with Davy Crockett's company to fight for the independence of Texas from Mexico. He was a rifleman of reknown, and early in the siege of the Alamo in 1836 he was chosen to pick off Gen. Santa Anna. The plan failed, and Micajah Autry died in the company of Davy Crockett, Jim Bowie and fewer than 200 other brave men who faced Santa Anna's force of 4,000. Texans rallied as the brave stand at the Alamo became known and went on to win independence.

July 5 is "Micajah Autry Day" in Autryville, NC. The day is celebrated with parades, music, picnics, games, and historical displays. The day concludes with the presentation of the outdoor drama "Micajah" sponsored by the Autryville Area Fire Department.

The memory of Micajah Autry, an authentic American hero, brings the people of Autryville and Sampson County, NC, together to recognize and celebrate a link in history between this small North Carolina community in the East and the founding of the State of Texas.

I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in recognition of "Micajah Autry Day", July 5, 1986.

SALUTE TO NANCY B. JEFFERSON

HON. CARDISS COLLINS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to a very special woman and fellow Chicagoian, Mrs. Nancy B. Jefferson, who is being honored tomorrow evening by the mayor of Chicago, Harold Washington, for all of her hard work on behalf of Chicago's disenfranchised constituents.

Mrs. Jefferson is the executive director of the Midwest Community Council for the Westside of Chicago. Her many other community activities include her participation on the governing board of the Garfield Park Community Mental Health, Inc., her trusteeship on the Citizens Information Service, and membership on the board of directors of Operation PUSH and the Chicago Police Board.

Her many, many contributions to the citizens of Chicago have earned her the Woman of the Year Award at Malcolm X College, the WBEE Outstanding Community Service Award, the Marshall High School Exceptional Service Award and the 1984 Henry Horner Boys Club of Chicago Award.

As a direct result of Mrs. Jefferson's active and distinguished role in the community, the city of Chicago is having a boulevard named after her. The "Nancy B. Jefferson Boulevard" is a living tribute to her service and dedication to the men and women of Chicago.

I join with the mayor, members of the Illinois General Assembly, the Governor, and distinguished politicians and activists in wishing Mrs. Jefferson and her family the very best.

A BI-PARTISAN LONG-TERM POLICY TOWARD CENTRAL AMERICA

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not here today to debate the issue of whether or not Nicaragua poses an immediate threat to its neighbors in Central America or whether its conduct can be justified in the world community of civilized nations. Over the course of the past few years, the conclusions have become obvious even to most of those who oppose any assistance to the Contras.

Yet, the fundamental facts are no longer contested. The 3,000 military and 4,000 civilian Cuban advisers in Nicaragua; the $600 million in Soviet bloc and Cuban military aid; the $400 million from Mu'ammar Qadhafi are a matter of public record. Nicaraguan support for insurgents in El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala, Costa Rica, and Colombia is clear. In fact, in comments printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD earlier this week, LEE HAMILTON, the distinguished Democratic chairman of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence succintly outlined the Nicaraguan commitment to a policy of support for insurgencies in Central America. In those same comments, the chairman addressed the issue of Sandinista relations with the PLO, Libya, Cuba, Soviet Union, North Korea, Bulgaria, and East Germany.

No, what we are debating and voting on today is not whether a threat exists, but how can the United States best respond to that threat. How can we keep the Sandinistas at home—ending their efforts to foment revolution and conflict in neighboring countries? How can we keep Nicaragua from becoming a base of operation for the Soviets, Libyans and other nations hostile to the values of democracy and freedom? How can we contribute to real and lasting peace for the region?

I would be less than honest if I didn't say that I am frustrated and disturbed that it has taken this long for the House to even be allowed a legitimate vote on this issue. Sure, there have been votes, plenty of votes; but, they have repeatedly been within the context of obstructionist rules and extraneous legislation designed to complicate and slow down the development of concrete and meaningful U.S. policy.

But today we are presented, in the bipartisan Edwards-Skeleton amendment, a comprehensive proposal that not only deals with the threat posed by the Sandinistas, but also incorporates provisions addressing the issues of regional economic development, basic civil liberties, and respect for human rights.

Most importantly, this proposal offers an opportunity to establish a meaningful and consistent U.S. policy today—not tomorrow, not 30 days from now and not next year. With the exception of different funding levels for economic assistance, the major difference between the Edwards amendment and the McCurdy language, is that the Edwards amendment establishes U.S. policy today; the McCurdy language simply delays the issue by requiring a second vote. While a second vote may be good politics, it is poor public policy.

How then does the Edwards proposal address the issue of United States policy toward Nicaragua? How does it address the issues that have been raised by opponents to Contra assistance?

First, the amendment makes a long-term commitment of economic assistance to the Central American democracies in amounts recommended by the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America. This is not a commitment at the expense of Americans, it is a commitment that will ultimately benefit all Americans—North, South, and Central. Previously appropriated funds would be used to help achieve the economic development so critical to a lasting peace in the region.

The amendment reprograms $100 million in previously appropriated funds from the Department of Defense, to assist the Nicaragua democratic resistance.

It calls for $30 million in immediate humanitarian assistance to the democratic resistance, with $3 million to be used for the express purpose of strengthening programs and activities for the observance and advancement of human rights.

Under the amendment, no weapons or ammunition would be delivered to the Contras before September, in further hopes that negotiations will work.

An additional $20 million in military assistance could be made available after October 15, 1986, only if the President certifies and reports to the Congress that the following conditions exist:

First, a Contadora peace agreement has not been signed;

Second, the Government of Nicaragua is not engaged in a serious dialog with representatives of all elements of the Nicaragua democratic opposition, a cease-fire is not in effect, and steps leading to free and fair elections have not been taken;

Third, restrictions on freedom of the press, assembly and religion have not been lifted;

Fourth, no other avenues exist for a negotiated settlement.

The release of the balance of funds would be delayed until next February, and would be subject to the same conditions listed above.

As I have said many times before, America must loudly and repeatedly communicate its abhorrence with human rights violations. We must denounce violations whenever and wherever they occur. The Edwards amendment specifically prohibits the appropriation of funds to Contra forces, unless human rights abuses are eliminated. The required subordination of military forces to civilian leadership is designed to assist efforts to eliminate abuses.

In this time of fiscal constraint, it has become more important than ever before that a full and proper accounting be made of all Government expenditures. I strongly support a full investigation of any alleged misuse or misappropriation of funds previously allocated to resistance forces, and commend the sponsors of the Edwards amendment for incorporating language that requires the application of "rigorous standards, procedures and controls" to assure that funds are "fully accounted for and are used exclusively for the purposes authorized" by the legislation.

It has been argued that there is no international support for the U.S. policy course as outlined in the Edwards amendment. I would argue that we are seeing increasingly strong support for this policy voiced by the democratically elected governments of Central America. President Arias of Costa Rica, Azcona of Honduras, Duarte of El Salvador, and Cerezo of Guatemala have made it clear that Nicaragua's unwillingness to engage in serious negotiation within the Contadora framework; instead using Contadora as a forum for propaganda purposes, has left the United States with little choice but to pursue a three-tracked approach: economic assistance, encouragement of negotiations, and minimal military assistance.

Time and time again, it is charged that the United States is not serious about pursuing negotiations; that America only goes through the motions, guaranteeing that the military option becomes the only option. Well, Mr. Speaker, both you and I know that this House is serious about pursuing a negotiated settlement. To pressure both the administration and the Sandinistas into undertaking serious and responsible negotiations, the Edwards amendment includes provisions establishing a Bipartisan Commission on Central American Negotiations. The five-member commission, including one member whom you yourself will appoint, will monitor and report on the status of negotiations on the peace, stability and security of Central America.

In response to concerns over the prospect of United States combat troops being sent to Nicaragua, the Edwards amendment specifically prohibits any "member of the United States Armed Forces or employee of any department, agency, or other component of the United States Government from entering Nicaragua to provide military advice, training, or logistical support to paramilitary groups operating inside that country." There is no authorization for any member of unit of the Armed Forces of the United States to engage in combat against the Government of Nicaragua.

It has been my goal and hope throughout the congressional consideration of this issue, that we achieve a bipartisan long-term policy for Central America. In all honesty, I am becoming convinced that those who oppose this amendment will never agree to any bipartisan consensus.

I am gratified to see that the debate on United States policy toward Central America and Nicaragua has broadened to include issues such as economic development, human rights, civil liberties, strong support for Contadora, and bipartisan monitoring of negotiations. We have succeeded in moving the extremes closer to the middle and are closer than ever before to developing a truly bipartisan long-term policy toward Nicaragua.

LEATHER WORKERS LOCAL NO. 1 CELEBRATES 100TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the Leather Goods, Plastics, Handbags & Novelty Workers' Union, Local 1 as they celebrate their 100th anniversary. As the first trade union ever formed in the American leather goods industry, the Local 1 has given New York and the rest of the country an example and a model of a great union, dedicated to its members.

On February 1, 1886, a small group of workmen, many of whom had recently arrived in America, and had learned and perfected their trades in European countries, met to form what was then called the Purse Makers Union of New York. They began the tradition of expert craftsmanship, inspired ambition, enthusiasm, determination, and dedication to their profession which we associate with the Local 1 today. Many had come to this country searching for freedom, opportunity, and security. The trade-union movement offered these men the opportunity for making a living, while expressing their hopes, realizing their dreams, and bringing themselves and their families comforts that were unheard of in their homeland.

However, like many other immigrants, the original members of Local 1 were disappointed with some of the conditions in the leather goods industry. Workers, often including children, labored up to 60 hours a week for the meager pay of $5 a week. To the union member of today, those unsanitary and often dangerous conditions the original members met are difficult to imagine.

The first few years were rough ones. The workers were trying to liberate themselves from the sweatshop. Meanwhile the industry controllers wanted to retain their control and their profits. From 1900 through 1916, the climb was uphill, with many setbacks. However, in 1916, through a general strike, Local 1, demonstrated what can result from the determination to improve their working conditions. This resulted in the signing of the first industry-wide collective bargaining agreement on August 23, 1918. All the benefits the union has today stem from the rights won from these initial struggles.

Today, the Purse Makers Union of New York is the AFL–CIO-affliated Leather Goods, Plastics, Handbags, and Novelty Workers' Union, Local 1, which united all workers in the handbag and novelty shops. This union, representing workers of every race, creed, color, and nationality, is dedicated and devoted to bettering the working conditions for all its members. Under the leadership of its manager, Domenic Di Paola, and its cosecretary/treasurer/business agents, Albert Berman and Isaac Rosario, the Local 1 continues in its heritage of democratic format and dedicated efforts on behalf of its members.

Local 1 has led the fight of the handbag, leather goods, plastic and novelty industry to obtain fair trade regulations. The United States has been generous for too long. To a large extent, U.S. capital and technology have been used by foreign countries to exploit our virtually-open trade policy. Over 85 percent of the industry is imports; and that figure is rising daily. One of the union's oldest shops is closing it's manufacturing and changing to retailing strictly imports. Local 1 has led the leather goods industry in fighting unfair trade policies. It is vital, that as a Nation, we join with them to protect the jobs of our people, to protect the welfare of our communities, where the loss of an industry can be so disruptive. Let us unite to ensure that Local 1 will live to see another 100 years—that the leather goods industry will remain strong. Local 1, we salute you and wish you 100 more years of success and leadership in the New York community.

HONORING OUR NATION'S FIREFIGHTERS

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to praise the work of our Nation's volunteer firefighters.

We have seen in recent years an enormous increase in volunteer work across our country, as the American people have risen to President Reagan's call for a renewed spirit of volunteerism. It is this spirit that makes the American people, and in turn, America, great.

The volunteer firefighters, since the earliest days of our Nation, have never lost this spirit.

Each day these brave men and women risk their lives to save the lives of others. This is the noblest work anyone can do.

The firefighters have a prayer, calling on God to give them the strength and courage to carry on their noble work. I wish to share this prayer with my colleagues in Congress and with the American people.

The text of the prayer follows.

THE FIREMAN'S PRAYER

When I am called to duty, God,
Wherever flames may rage;
Give me strength to save a life
Whatever be its age.
Help me embrace a little child
Before it is too late,
Or save an older person from
The horror of that fate.
Enable me to be alert
And hear the weakest shout
And quickly and efficiently
To put the fire out.
I want to fill my calling, Lord,
And give the best in me;
To guard my ev'ry neighbor, and Protect his property.
And if, according to your will,
I have to lose my life,
God bless with your protecting hand
My children and my wife.

JOHN VORNDICK RECOGNIZED

HON. JOHN G. ROWLAND

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the loyal efforts of one man who has made a difference in the lives of two of my constituents. That gentleman is John Vorndick of Annapolis, MD.

John Vorndick serves his Nation as a sponsor at the Naval Academy. While this may not seem like an important position to the 20 or so midshipmen who John sponsors every year, he is an important part of their experience at the Academy. He provides guidance, counseling and a chance to escape the pressure at the Academy. His hospitality and genuine concern provides needed support to midshipmen who must deal with a rigorous curriculum that begins daily at 6:15 A.M. His willingness to open his home to others every weekend and virtually every evening is an example to emulate.

Two of my constituents, Lt. Robert Ravener, Jr. of Danbury and Lt. Dan Evans of Danbury, were sponsored by John. Their success at the Naval Academy and their current success as young officers in our Navy was assisted greatly by the sponsorship of John Vorndick and I thank him on their behalf.

It takes much more than flashy equipment to make our Navy "top gun". It takes dedicated young men who are capable of being take charge leaders. John Vorndick has done a great deal to assist in the education of these men. He represents the spirit of patriotism and spirit of voluntarism that we seek to advance. John Vorndick truly cares, and for that I am grateful.

SUPPORT FOR THE CONTRAS

HON. THOMAS N. KINDNESS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the cause of freedom tonight, and in support of military and economic aid for the Contras.

How much longer can we afford to stand by while the Sandinistas continue to build their military might for the purpose of exporting their revolution to their weaker Central American neighbors?

Under the guise of promoting further negotiation with the Sandinistas, the Congress last year rejected appeals for military assistance for the Contras and provided instead some $27 million in nonlethal assistance to the Contras. Did we achieve any negotiated settlement in Central America?

Of course, we didn't. Instead of spending his time and effort on negotiations through the Contadora process, Commandante Ortega decided to take a trip to Moscow.

After we failed to provide assistance to the Contras earlier this year, the Sandinistas responded with yet another military incursion into neighboring Honduras.

Can there be any doubt about who the Sandinistas really are, and to whom they owe their allegiance?

With the help of the Soviet Union and Cuba, the Sandinistas have built a military machine which far exceeds the needs of any country in the region.

Their intentions have been stated publicly by various Sandinista officials. Closer to the southern border of the United States than we are here in Washington, DC, Mr. Speaker, there is another Communist revolution that festers and swells.

We simply cannot afford further delay and inconsistency in our response to this threat, nor can we afford another Cuba to our south. Our commitment to the cause of freedom is in question.

In my mind the choice is clear. We have got to provide humanitarian and military assistance to the Contras before the situation worsens or before it's too late altogether.

The cost of naivete and apathy is simply too high.

CHANDLER VOTING RECORD

HON. ROD CHANDLER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, June 11, I was hospitalized for abdominal discomfort and underwent exploratory surgery that same day. As you can see, the malady was by no means fatal; the greatest challenge was learning to pronounce the name of this particular affliction: mesenteric adenitis.

My kids thought it was great because they got to eat fast food for a few evenings: no vegetables. I'm pleased to report that the doctors have assured me that I can participate in next month's congressional baseball game, one of the few chances House Republicans get to leave House Democrats in the dust.

My hospitalization and recovery caused me to miss several votes, and I would like at this point in the RECORD to indicate how I would have voted had I been present.

THE IMPORTANCE OF CATTLE FUTURES MARKETS

HON. ARLAN STANGELAND

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Speaker, the proper working of all future contracts is, and should certainly be, a continuous goal of the exchanges and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

How the cattle markets functions is an important question today in the ranching community. It needs to be fully discussed. The context of the reauthorization of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission raises that opportunity.

During the last reauthorization process, Congress directed the CFTC to conduct a study on their cattle markets to determine how large hedgers use these cattle futures markets. In 1984, the CFTC concluded "that the existing regulatory programs of the CFTC and the CME are adequate to deter any abusive trading by large hedgers in livestock markets and to preserve to restore orderly trading in those markets."

The Commission has recently published data on the composition of large traders in the live cattle futures market. The CFTC's report stated that of those traders holding more than 100 contracts, 75 percent of the large traders were commercial users: cattlemen, meat packers, processors, food distributors, and growers of the feed itself. Cattlemen have been using these markets since 1964. Almost 5 million cattle contracts traded on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange last year. That demonstrates tremendous economic utility of these markets.

From 1980 to 1984, the cash market in cattle was relatively stable. In 1986, several factors effected the downward price for cattle. Most obviously, there was the USDA dairy whole herd buyout program: 1.6 million cattle were brought to market in a relatively precipitous fashion.

The CFTC reviewed trading in the cattle futures market following the dairy buyout announcement for instances of unfair trading practices. The Commission found supply and demand forces at work that were clearly germane to cash and futures markets price responses during that period. The Commission believes that the price movements in the cattle markets were consistent with true economic supply and demand factors, and not any aberration in either market.

While I commend my colleagues who have raised constituent concerns about cattle contracts, I do not believe we should hastily castigate the free market system or call for amendments to the Commodity Exchange Act.

The Commodity Exchange Act now requires that a contract have economic utility. That is the critical test. Nothing mandates that anyone must use a future contract.

Rather, the law mandates that a contract does work for those who choose to utilize it for risk shifting. The present day use of these contracts demonstrates they are meeting the marketplace test.

The Commodity Exchange Act and the CFTC regulations and the Exchange rules require strict enforcement of surveillance programs and trading practices to maintain the integrity of contracts. And, should the CFTC ever have reason to believe a contract is no longer serving a beneficial purpose, or functioning in any way detrimental to its real economic function, it can institute immediate and severe corrective proceedings and sanctions.

I am concerned about a possible misconception about how the USDA did operate under the Old Commodity Exchange Authority, before 1974. The USDA never held referenda on futures contracts. And the USDA has never advocated doing so. I think it is essential to point out that today the CFTC makes a far more thorough inquiry into the economic utility—the hedging and price discovery value—of all new contracts than ever occurred at the USDA. That greater inquiry occurs because the CFTC statute requires it.

The Commodity Exchange Act today, in the most serious sense, does require a form of referendum. A referendum, not in the sense of raising hands, but in the sense that the requirement of economic utility value is mandated as part of the CFTC evaluation procedure.

The new economic utility test was part of a fundamental change enacted in 1974. In the old days at USDA, all contracts were in effect, without any Federal examination, until such time as they were disapproved by the USDA. Now, no contract can trade until the CFTC approves that new contract.

The central part of this new approval process is the statutory requirement of a "public interest test." That test examines the hedging value and price discovery value of a contract. To meet the test CFTC economists meet with producer organizations to learn their opinions on the value of, not only new contracts, but of existing contracts as well.

Certainly, producer's opinions about futures markets are essential and should be sought.

The Exchange constantly seeks to know the concerns of producers. I learned that the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, the only exchange that has beef-related contracts, has an ongoing program to hold agriculture symposia throughout the country. The Exchange's staff has visited with such groups as American Farm Bureau's Young Farmers and Ranchers; the Arizona Cattlefeeders; the Colorado Cattlefeeders; Iowa Agricultural Bankers; the Kansas Livestock Association; the Central Iowa Extension Group; the California Cattlemen's Association; the Nebraska Extension Service; the Nevada-Utah Cattlemen's Association; the Albia, IA, Hedging Symposium; the O'Brien County, IA, Farmers and Ranchers; the Texas Agricultural Economic Service; the Texas Syntex Feedlot Group; the Illinois Livestock Association, and scores of similar producer organizations.

Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about the cattle community and the hardships it is facing today. I am also concerned that we support the free market forces of supply and demand. Vigilance to ensure the integrity of the Nation's futures markets is critical. But where that vigilance is at work, misconceptions about futures markets should not lead us astray.

IN HONOR OF THE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ENACTMENT OF THE FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT

HON. THOMAS N. KINDNESS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, for those of us who believe in a limited government—that is, one that does not regulate so many aspects of our lives as our Government has in the past several decades—the Freedom of Information Act is an important tool in helping to assure accountability for agency actions.

The Congress is obligated to oversee the agencies and programs it has created. But, being involved in their creation, the Congress is not always the most objective forum in which to oversee and assure their accountability. Our seeming inability to cut Federal expenditures is but another symptom of this problem. Therefore, it is vital that the people to whom we, as Members of Congress, are accountable, be able to inform themselves of their government through information which is available under the Freedom of Information Act.

The act is not perfect and thus has been subject to varying administration by the agencies and interpretation by the courts. As ranking minority member for the last four Congresses of the subcommittee which has legislative jurisdiction over the act, I have worked with Subcommittee Chairman ENGLISH to oversee the act and develop some reasonable amendments to it. I believe that the best way that we can celebrate the 20th anniversary of the Freedom of Information Act is by regular and systematic oversight of agency compliance with the act and timely and careful amendment of the act where a legislative solution is appropriate.

LIVING UP TO OUR COMMITMENTS RESTORING FAIRNESS TO THE COLAS

HON. DEAN A. GALLO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 4060, a bill to ensure that Federal retirees receive their 1987 cost-of-living adjustments. I believe that this bill restores fairness and equity to our Federal retirement system.

Several months ago, we, Republicans and Democrats alike, passed the landmark Gramm-Rudman Deficit Reduction Act. It was our intention when adopting this legislation to set deficit reduction targets and to establish a mechanism to reach those targets in cases where this body is unsuccessful in its own efforts.

Gramm-Rudman was and is a necessary step to encourage this House to act responsibly. Acting responsibly requires that we also act in the spirit of fairness.

When we crafted this legislation, it was generally agreed that certain programs should be exempted from the bill's automatic reduction mechanism because those programs are so very vital to the public health and welfare. For instance, we protected the Social Security cost-of-living adjustments from automatic cuts. We also exempted, among other programs, veterans' benefits and Aid to Families with Dependent Children. Unfortunately, the cost-of-living adjustments for Federal retirees were not exempted. This shortcoming has resulted in inequitable treatment for a whole class of citizens.

Fairness is a cornerstone to our democracy. The principle of fairness guides our democracy and this Congress. It is the sense of fairness that encourages us to correct the shortcomings of our system of laws.

By yesterday's vote we corrected an inequity, and I am pleased that so many of my colleagues joined me in supporting this bill.

EDUCATION AND LABOR COMMITTEE TAKES FIRM ACTION TO CURB WORKPLACE CANCERS

HON. JOSEPH M. GAYDOS
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Committee on Education and Labor favorably reported H.R. 1309, the High Risk Occupational Disease Notification and Prevention Act of 1986, which I introduced in this Congress last year.

I compliment all the members of the committee for their attention to this important matter, whether they are in support of the bill or not. As of yesterday, 135 Members of Congress were listed as cosponsors of this legislation.

The bill is aimed at reducing, in the least, or eliminating the 100,000 annual deaths and 340,000 annual diseases that stem from, and are directly related to, exposures of hazardous and toxic substances in the workplace.

Too many of those diseases are cancers that are preventable or treatable if discovered in their earliest stages.

The problem is that too many of those diseases have latency periods ranging from 5 or 10 years to as many as 30 or 40 years.

H.R. 1309 will give us that edge to discover workers who are at high risk of contracting those diseases because of the specific jobs they do and the substances with which they come in contact during the working career.

H.R. 1309 is a simple measure. It establishes a risk assessment board that, after reviewing epidemiologic and other studies, will identify those specific worker populations at risk.

This identification will put into action a notification program aimed at those workers in the population at risk, encouraging them to enter into a program of testing, evaluation, and medical monitoring.

The whole trust of the program is to prevent the onset of workplace diseases, including cancers known to result from exposures to specific substances, by reducing the notified worker's exposure to the substance by moving that worker to another job where there is less or no exposure by instituting more effective engineering systems that will reduce exposure levels, and by using alternative substances that have been proven to be less toxic or, preferably, nontoxic.

There are those who oppose this bill vigorously, but I find it difficult to believe that those opponents really believe it is right and proper for us to allow 100,000 American workers to die each year from workplace-caused cancer.

In testimony to the Subcommittee on Health and Safety on this bill, witnesses noted that NIOSH already has the names and addresses of some 250,000 Americans who are at risk of disease. NIOSH has notified those workers individually of their risk. No one has suggested that these workers enter into a medical surveillance program to determine their health now and in the future.

Can our industrial leaders be so callous as to ignore the health of their employees? Can they really and truly believe that cancers caused by workplace exposures are the price a worker is expected to pay for doing his job?

This country was in existence for about 200 years before we adopted our first worker health and safety law, the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970.

I am proud to say that I was in Congress then and had a part in that effort.

I am proud to say that I was active in the passage of the Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977 despite claims from so many that it wouldn't work and it would lead to the end of the mining industry.

Well, quite frankly, the economic practices of this administration are probably wreaking more havoc on the mining industry than the Mine Safety and Health Act.

I feel the same way about H.R. 1309. Depsite the claims by its opponents that the program initiated in it will bankrupt industry, I believe it will be the other way around.

After all, Mr. Speaker, if we prevent deaths and disabilities caused by exposures to hazardous workplace substances, where is the cost?

If employees are healthy, we know they are more productive. If they don't get cancer or some other incurable and fatal disease, there won't be worker's compensation claims.

In fact, industry will save money in the long run, when H.R. 1309 does its job.

For the enlightenment of my colleagues, I am attaching a copy of H.R. 1309 as amended and favorably reported by the Committee on Education and Labor yesterday.

H.R. 1309

A bill to establish a system for identifying, notifying, and preventing illness and death among workers who are at increased or high risk of occupational disease, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "High Risk Occupational Disease Notification and Prevention Act of 1986".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) many toxic and hazardous substances, physical agents, materials, and processes are in wide industrial and commercial use in the United States;

(2) a significant number of workers suffer disability or death or both from occupational diseases caused by hazardous occupational exposures;

(3) diseases caused by hazardous occupational exposures constitute a substantial burden on interstate commerce and have an adverse effect on the public welfare;

(4) workers have a basic and fundamental right to know they have been and are being exposed to an occupational hazard and are at risk of contracting an occupational disease;

(5) social and family services that reinforce health promoting behavior can reduce the risk of contracting an occupational disease;

(6) there is a period of time between exposure and the onset of disease when it often is possible to intervene medically in the biological process of disease either to prevent or, by early detection, successfully treat many disease conditions;

(7) a significant number of identifiable occupational populations are at risk of developing diseases because of hazardous occupational exposures;

(8) by means of established epidemiological, clinical, and laboratory studies, it is possible to define and identify very specific worker populations at risk of contracting occupational diseases;

(9) there is no established national program for identifying, notifying, counseling, and medically monitoring worker populations at risk of occupational disease;

(10) there is a lack of adequately trained medical and human service professionals, as well as appropriately staffed and equipped health facilities to recognize, diagnose, and prevent occupational diseases;

(11) there is a need for increased research to identify and monitor worker populations at risk of occupational disease; and

(12) through prevention and early detection of occupational disease the staggering cost of medical treatment and care in the United States can be substantially reduced.

(b) PURPOSES.—It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to establish a Federal program to notify individual employees within populations at risk of occupationally induced disease that they are at risk because of a hazardous occupational exposure, and to counsel them appropriately;

(2) to authorize and direct the certification of occupational and environmental health facilities which have a primary purpose of education, training, and advising physicians and social service professionals in local communities throughout the United States to recognize, diagnose, and treat occupational disease;

(3) to expand Federal research efforts to improve means of identifying and monitoring worker populations at risk of occupational disease; and

(4) to establish a set of protections prohibiting discrimination against employees on the basis of identification and notification of occupational disease risk.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

For the purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "employee" means—

(A) any individual employed by an employer, or

(B) any individual formerly employed by an employer as to whom any Federal agency maintains records pertaining to work history, or the employer maintains personnel records, medical records, or exposure records;

(2) the term "employer" means any person engaged in commerce or in an industry or business affecting commerce, or any agency of Federal, State, or local government;

(3) the term "Secretary" means Secretary of Health and Human Services;

(4) the term "population at risk" means an employee population exposed to hazardous occupational exposures within which an associated disease occurs at a rate 30 percent greater than a comparable population not exposed to the hazardous occupational exposure;

(5) the term "hazardous occupational exposure means—

(A) any harmful chemical, physical, or biological agent found in the workplace;

(B) any industrial or commercial process or activity found in the workplace which is associated with the risk of disease; or

(C) any occupational activity which is associated with the risk of disease;

(6) the term "medical monitoring" means periodic medical examinations of employees who are in a population at risk of occupational disease;

(7) the term "ethical manner" means conduct that recognizes the voluntary nature of the patient-physician relationship and the confidentiality of information communicated in that relationship; and

(8) the term "Board" means the Risk Assessment Board established by section 4 of this Act.

SEC. 4. RISK ASSESSMENT BOARD.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—(1) There is hereby established within the Department of Health and Human Services the Risk Assessment Board. The Board shall consist of 8 members appointed by the Secretary in accordance with paragraph (2) and the Assistant Secretary of Health, who shall serve as chairman.

(2) Of the 8 members appointed by the Secretary—

(A) 5 shall be career or commissioned public health service employees, including an epidemiologist, a toxicologist, and industrial hygienist, a physician, and an occupational health nurse; and

(B) 3 shall be physicians, including an academic physician specializing in occupational medicine, an occupational physician, and a general practitioner.

(3) The members of the Board appointed under paragraph (2)(A) shall be appointed for terms of 5 years, except that—

(A) the terms of members initially so appointed shall expire (as designated by the Secretary at the time of their appointment) at the end of 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 years, respectively; and

(B) any member appointed to fill a vacancy in the Board that occurs prior to the expiration of a term shall be appointed to serve for the remainder of that term.

(4) The members of the Board appointed under paragraph (2)(B) shall be appointed for terms of one year.

(5) The Secretary shall provide a full-time staff necessary to carry out the functions of the Board.

(b) FUNCTIONS.—(1) The Board shall—

(A) review current medical and other scientific studies and reports concerning the incidence of disease associated with employment;

(B) report to the Secretary on the state of current research with respect to such diseases; and

(C) designate from this review employee populations at risk of disease associated with hazardous occupational exposures, including the size, nature, and composition of the population at risk.

(2) In identifying the populations at risk of disease, the Board shall consider the following factors based upon the best available scientific evidence;

(A) the agents, materials, or processes, or combinations thereof, that may be toxic based upon epidemiologic and clinical observations of human populations, or animal and laboratory studies;

(B) estimates of increased risk of death and disease in specific sites, systems, or organs of the body in exposed human populations; and

(C) estimates of increased risk of death or disease in exposed human populations related to industrial classifications, job categories, and durations of exposure.

(3) The Board shall determine criteria for designating populations at risk in those cases of a rare disease for which the definition in section 3(4) may not be applicable because the disease in question is extremely rare in the general population.

(c) PRIORITIES.—The Board shall undertake, as its first priority, to review employee populations exposed to hazardous occupational exposures whose members are most likely to be helped, either through medical interventon or through counseling on personal health habits. In making this determination, the Board shall consider exposures for which there exists a permanent standard promulgated under section 6(b)(5) of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 and also shall consider the extent of medical monitoring and surveillance already available to employee populations covered by the permanent standards.

(d) PROCEDURES.—(1) The Board shall initiate a proceeding to identify a population at risk by issuing a notice of its proposed findings and recommendations.

(2) The notice shall—

(A) be published in the Federal Register;

(B) set forth which classes or categories of employees are being considered for inclusion in a population at risk and the reasons for such inclusion;

(C) request the public to submit written views on the proposed findings and recommendations within 45 days; and

(D) provide for a hearing within 30 days after the conclusion of such 45-day period, at which the public may express views on the Board's proposed findings and recommendations.

(3) The Board shall issue final findings and recommendations within 45 days following the hearing, based on the record developed pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection.

(4) If the Board determines that a class or category of employee is a population at risk of disease, it shall make such a finding and, within ten days of making such a finding, transmit to the Secretary a recommendation that the individuals within such a population at risk be notified under section 5 of this Act.

SEC. 5. EMPLOYEE NOTIFICATION AND COUNSELING.

(a) DETERMINATIONS OF THE SECRETARY.—(1) The Secretary shall determine whether a class or category of employees is a population at risk of disease based upon the findings and recommendations made by the Board under section 4 of this Act. The Secretary shall review the findings and recommendations without further notice and without public comment.

(2) The Secretary shall adopt the findings and recommendations of the Board unless the Secretary concludes that—

(A) procedural requirements set forth in section 4(d) are not met, or

(B) to do so will endanger the health and safety of a class or category of employees.

(b) NOTIFICATION OF POPULATION AT RISK.—(1) Upon determination by the Secretary that a given class or category of employee is a population at risk of occupational disease, the Secretary shall notify each individual within such population, and their respective employers, of that risk.

(2) In addition, the Secretary shall make simultaneous use of public service announcements and other means of notification appropriate to reach the population at risk.

(c) CONTENTS OF NOTIFICATION.—The Secretary's notification shall include—

(1) an identification of the hazardous occupational exposure, including the name, composition, and properties of known chemical agents;

(2) the disease or diseases associated with the hazardous occupational exposure;

(3) any known latency periods from time of exposure to time of clinical manifestation of the disease;

(4) counseling appropriate to the nature of the risk including, but not limited to—

(A) the advisability of initiating a personal medical monitoring program;

(B) the most appropriate type of medical monitoring for the disease associated with the risk;

(C) the name and address of the nearest health center certified under this Act;

(D) the prohibitions against discrimination for notified employees as established under section 8 of the Act;

(E) employer responsibilities with respect to health care for notified employees, as established under section 8 of this Act; and

(F) the telephone number of the hot line established under subsection (d) of this section.

(d) TELEPHONE INFORMATION.—The Secretary shall establish a telephone "hot line" for the employees notified under this section and for their personal physicians for the purpose of providing additional medical and scientific information concerning the nature of the risk and its associated disease.

(e) DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION.—The Secretary shall prepare and distribute other medical and health promotion materials and information on any risk subject to notification under this section and its associated disease as the Secretary deems appropriate.

(f) ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—In carrying out the notification responsibilities under this section, the Secretary shall, subject to the requirements of section 552a of title 5, United States Code, and other applicable provisions of Federal law, have access to information and data contained in the records—

(1) of any Federal agency solely for the purpose of obtaining names, addresses, and work histories of employees subject to notification under this section; and

(2) of any employer insofar as Federal access is provided for under the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 and the Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977 and regulations promulgated pursuant thereto.

(g) COOPERATION WITH PRIVATE EMPLOYERS AND STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.—(1) In carrying out the notification responsibilities under this section, the Secretary shall cooperate to the extent practicable with private employers and State and local departments of health and may certify a private employer or a State or local government to conduct notification under this section, pursuant to standards issued by the Secretary. Such standards shall prohibit access by any such employer or government to information and data contained in records described in subsection (f) of this section.

(2) Private employers and State and local departments of health certified by the Secretary to conduct notifications pursuant to subsection (g)(1) of this Act shall assume the costs associated with such notification.

(3) A private employer who has been found to willfully violate a recordkeeping, notification, or hazards communication requirement as promulgated under the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 or the Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977 may not be certified by the Secretary to fulfill the notifications pursuant to subsection (g)(1) for a period of five after from the date of such finding or may have its certification revoked for a period of five years after such finding.

(h) LIABILITY.—The Secretary and the agents of Secretary, including any employer or government acting pursuant to subsection (g) of this section, shall not be liable under Federal or State law for monetary damages with respect to any omission or act performed pursuant to this section.

(i) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—(1) Any person adversely affected or aggrieved by a determination of the Secretary under this Act that a given class or category of employees is a population at risk is entitled to judicial review of that determination in the appropriate United States Court of Appeals upon a petition filed in such court by such person. Any petition filed pursuant to this section shall be filed within 30 days after such determination by the Secretary.

(2) A copy of any petition filed under paragraph (1) shall be promptly transmitted to the Secretary by the clerk of the court. The Secretary shall file in the court, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code, the record of the proceedings on which the determination is based, including the findings and recommendations of the Board and the record of its proceedings.

(3) The court may set aside the determination of the Secretary under subsection (a) of this section only if the determination is found to be—

(A) arbitrary, capricious, or an abuse of discretion;

(B) contrary to constitutional right, power, privilege, or immunity;

(C) in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations; or

(D) without observance of procedure required by law.

(4) The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall not operate as a stay of the determination of the Secretary to notify employees unless the court specifically orders a stay based upon a determination by the court that the complaining party is highly likely to succeed on the merits.

SEC. 6. HEALTH CENTERS.

(a) SELECTION FROM AMONG EXISTING FACILITIES.—(1) Within 90 days after the effective date of this Act, the Secretary shall establish and certify 10 health centers. The Secretary shall select the 10 health centers from among education resources centers of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health and similar facilities of the National Institute for Environmental Health Sciences, the National Cancer Institute, and other private and governmental organizations that apply for such designation by the Secretary. At a later date, but not more than five years after the effective date of this Act, the Secretary shall establish and certify additional health centers from among the health care facilities described in this paragraph so as to obtain no less than one center per State throughout the United States.

(2) Such centers and personnel assigned to them—

(A) shall be selected on the basis of (i) their demonstrated ability and experience in the recognition, diagnosis, and treatment of occupationally related diseases in an ethical manner, and (ii) their capability to offer training and assistance to physicians and social service professionals engaged in the management of populations and individuals at risk of occupational disease, and to fulfill other functions assigned to them under this section, and

(B) shall be certified as such under criteria issued by the Secretary.

(b) FUNCTIONS OF CENTERS.—The centers shall provide education, training, and technical assistance to personal physicians and social service professionals who serve employees notified under section 5 of this Act. The centers also shall be capable of providing research resources, diagnosis, treatment, medical monitoring, and family services for employees notified under section 5 of this Act.

(c) COST OF TRAINING AND EQUIPMENT.—The Secretary shall, from funds appropriated under this Act, reimburse the health centers certified under this section for the cost of developing a training program and procuring specialized equipment required under the certification criteria developed pursuant to subsection (a) of this section.

SEC. 7. RESEARCH, TRAINING, AND EDUCATION.

(a) IMPROVED METHODS OF MONITORING AND IDENTIFICATION.—The Secretary shall, primarily through the health centers established and certified under section 6 of this Act, conduct research, training, and education aimed at improving the means of medically assisting employees exposed to occupational health hazards and the means of identifying worker populations exposed to such hazards, Such research, training, and education shall include, but not be limited to, the following areas:

(1) studying the etiology and development of occupationally related diseases and the disabilities resulting from such diseases;

(2) developing means of medical surveillance of employees exposed to occupational health hazards;

(3) examining the medical treatment of workers exposed to occupational health hazards, and means of medical intervention to prevent the deterioration of the health and functional capabilities of employees disabled by occupational disease;

(4) studying and developing medical treatment and allied social services for employees exposed to occupational health hazards;

(5) developing education programs designed to train physicians and social services professionals to assist employees and their families in underaking measures which ameliorate the effects of those diseases; and

(6) sponsoring epidemiological, clinical, and laboratory research to identify and define additional employee populations at risk of disease from hazardous occupational exposures.

(b) AUTHORITY TO EMPLOY EXPERTS AND CONSULTANTS.—In carrying out activities under this section, the Secretary is authorized to engage the services of experts and consultants as deemed necessary.

SEC. 8. EMPLOYEE TESTING, EVALUATION, MEDICAL MONITORING, AND DISCRIMINATION.

(a) CERTIFICATION OF PROGRAM AVAILABILITY.—An employer who receives a notificiation under section 5(b) that one or more of its current employees is in a population at risk shall certify to the Secretary that the testing, evaluation, and medical monitoring requested by such employees as a result of the hazard occupational exposure identified in such notification—

(1) will be provided or made available by such employer at no cost to the employee, if any part of such exposure occurred in the course of the employee's employment by that employer; or

(2) will be provided or made available by such employer at a charge to the employee not exceeding the cost to the employer (or at no charge), if no part of such exposure occurred in the course of the employee's employment by that employer.

(b) DISCRIMINATION PROHIBITED.—No employer or other person shall discharge or in any manner discriminate against any employee on the basis that the employee is or has been a member of a population that has been determined by the Secretary to be a population at risk of disease and shall not discriminate against such an employee by refusing to provide for testing, evaluation, and medical monitoring at cost.

(c) BENEFIT REDUCTION PROHIBITED.—If, following a determination by the Secretary under this Act, it is medically determined by the employees personal physician in consultation with the employer and his medical representative, that such employee should be temporarily or permanently transferred to a less hazardous or nonexposed job, the employee shall retain the earnings, seniority, and other employment benefits as though the employee had not been transferred from the former job.

(d) REVIEW OF COMPLAINTS.—(1) Any employee who is aggrieved by a violation of this section, may, within six months after such violation occurs, apply to the Secretary of Labor for a review of such alleged violation. Upon receipt of such application, the Secretary of Labor shall cause an investigation to be made as he deems appropriate. If upon such investigation the Secretary of Labor determines that the provisions of this section have been violated, he shall bring an action in any appropriate United States district court. In any such action, the United States district courts shall have jurisdiction for cause shown to restrain violations of this section and order all appropriate relief under subsection (e) or (f) of this section.

(2) Within 90 days of the receipt of the application filed under this subsection, the Secretary of Labor shall notify the complainant of his determination under paragraph (2) of this subsection. If the Secretary of Labor finds that there was no such violation, he shall issue an order denying the application.

(e) REINSTATEMENT AND OTHER RELIEF.—Any employee who is subjected to a violation of this section shall be restored to his or her employment and shall be compensated for—

(1) any lost wages (including fringe benefits and seniority);

(2) costs associated with medical monitoring; and

(3) costs associated with bringing the allegation of violation.

(f) CIVIL PENALTIES.—Any person or institution that violates this section shall be liable for a civil penalty of not less than $1,000 or more than $10,000 for each violation as may be determined by the Secretary of Labor.

SEC. 9. ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY.

(a) INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.—Whenever the Secretary determines that any person or institution is engaged in an act or practice constituting a violation of this Act or any rule or regulation promulgated under this Act, the Secretary may bring an action in the proper United States district court to enjoin such acts or practices, and upon a proper showing an injunction or permanent or temporary restraining order shall be granted without bond. The provisions of section 5(h) shall not limit the authority of the Secretary under this subsection.

(b) EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS.—The notification of an employee pursuant to this Act that such employee is in a population at risk and the initiation of medical evaluation and monitoring shall not constitute or in any way affect a claim for compensation, loss, damage arising out of the hazardous occupational exposure, except that the results of such medical evaluation and monitoring may be introduced as evidence with respect to such a claim. Notification pursuant to this Act shall not commence the tolling of any statute of limitations with respect to filing a timely claim.

SEC. 10. AUTHORIZATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987 and 1988 to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 11. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Except as may be otherwise provided therein, the provisions of this Act shall become effective six months after the date of enactment of this Act.

THE ELEANOR GERSON SCHOOL: TURNING KIDS FROM TROUBLE TO TRIUMPH

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, in many schools throughout our Nation, once a child is labeled a "problem" all efforts to educate that child are abandoned. As a result, the child is ignored and left to stagnate in the school environment, or worse, the child may leave school, never to be educated nor taught to function in our society. In Cleveland, however, efforts are being made to rescue those children who have difficulty coping in a traditional school environment.

Mr. Speaker, the Eleanor Gerson School, run by the Child Guidance Center of Cleveland, OH, is a place where young people can be educated and convinced that they can learn and that they have something to contribute to the world. The Gerson School provides an alternative to children who need special attention. It is a fine example of an institution that refuses to give up on our young people who are not "problems," but those who simply, march to a different drummer.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a profile, from the June 13, 1986, Cleveland Plain Dealer, of Scott Hardman. He represents only one of the many success stories emanating from the Gerson school. I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in saluting the work and accomplishments of Scott Hardman, and all of the 1986 graduates of the Gerson School. They provide inspiration to young people throughout the Nation and should be commended for their desire to succeed.

SCHOOL TURNS TRUANT INTO GRADUATE

(By Tom Andrzejewski)

When Scott Hardman was transferred from one Cleveland junior high school to another, he was heading toward becoming a statistic.

"I wasn't getting along at all in regular junior high schools," he said. "So when I got there, I just stopped going after two weeks."

A lot of youngsters like him eventually get included in the dropout rates, the illiteracy statistics, maybe even the crime reports—sometimes whether they want to or not.

"I would really hate being a statistic," he said. "Being anything but an individual is something I don't like."

But Hardman had flunked seventh grade three times. He wasn't getting along with his mother. He said he stayed away from drugs and alcohol, but spent his days addicted to afternoon soap operas—not even the plots, just that they were something to watch.

He was not a bad kid, not a dumb kid, just one who had trouble with rules. If he didn't like something, he didn't do it.

But in a ceremony today that will be small enough to fit into the courtyard of the Child Guidance Center, 2525 E. 22nd St., Hardman and eight classmates from a unique high school will be getting their diplomas.

"Some people thought these kids would never graduate, so we make sure they invite the cousins, that grandparent or anyone else who would say they would never make it," said Jim Dunne, director of the Eleanor Gerson School. It is known as an alternative high school.

Hardman, who was introduced to the school through a child guidance counselor, had always been confident, even overconfident. It showed when he started the Gerson School (then known as the School on Magnolia).

"It sounded like something I could deal with," he said. "They weren't pushing authority. It sets up an atmosphere, 'You're welcome, we want you here.' "

But Hardman soon found out this wasn't going to be like idly lounging around friends' houses watching the soaps.

"When I first got here, I was the lowest form of Magnolia life. I was the class jerk. So the students all sat down with me in the lounge.

"It surprised me. I didn't think anyone cared, and these people who didn't even know me sat down to talk to me.

"After that, everybody tells me, I changed. I think I'm the same person, but they said I changed."

Not entirely. Despite its loose atmosphere—students call teachers by their first names, they can smoke in the lounge and so on—the school still has some rules. Like having to do the work.

"There have been times I came close to being thrown out," he said.

Hardman's old friends—he doesn't associate with them anymore—have had much different lives. One is in the Juvenile Detention Center. Another still will be in high school next year. Another struggles to stay out of trouble.

Their stories might have better endings if they had the opportunity Hardman received.

The Gerson School, in the Central YMCA, 2055 E. 22nd St., is run by the Child Guidance Center, supported with grants, donations and tuition. It costs $3,850 a year for each student. A student's tuition is based upon a student's ability to pay.

It was begun as an alternative high school in 1970 by the Society of Friends, but was taken over by the Child Guidance Center in 1974 and named the School on Magnolia. Three years ago, it moved from University Circle to downtown and was renamed for Eleanor Gerson, civic leader and philanthropist.

This year's enrollment of 50 included 34 from Cleveland, 16 from the suburbs, including Fairview Park and Strongsville. It is 58% white, 38% black and 4% Hispanic.

The students are there because they have had some trouble in conventional schools. It may have stemmed from family situations, emotional disorders or just plain inability to cope with adolescence.

In Hardman's class, three have full-time jobs lined up, three are going to college, one to a technical institute and one will be a full-time mother.

And Hardman, the kid who couldn't get along with rules, who rebeled against authority, is joining the Army this fall after some travel this summer. He hopes to take advantage of programs in the military so he can go to college.

"Self-discipline isn't going to be hard for me anymore," said Hardman. "I felt it was my responsibility to discipline myself. What this school has said to me is, 'You're a worthwhile person—so act like it.' "

RECOGNIZING THE PLIGHT OF SOUTH AFRICAN DETAINEES

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, the Lawyer's Committee for Civil Rights Under Law has distributed to members of the Subcommittee on Africa information on the state of emergency in South Africa, including a list of detainees in South African prisons.

As the Lawyer's Committee aptly points out, information on detainees has only reached organizations like the Lawyer's Committee and Amnesty International at great risk to those providing the information. These individuals are willing to risk their lives in the fight against apartheid. It is up to us to see that those who are working so hard to protect the men and women being detained by the South African Government are not forgotten. I certainly hope that "constructive engagement" includes protesting the abusive detainment of these unfortunate individuals.

I am inserting in the RECORD a copy of the statement provided to my office by the Lawyer's Committee, along with a list of the detainees. I hope my colleagues will join me in remembering these individuals and in asking our State Department to put pressure on the Botha government to secure their release.

RECOGNIZING THE PLIGHT OF SOUTH AFRICAN DETAINEES

In South Africa, on June 12, a State of Emergency was declared covering the entire country. Estimates of detentions under the State of Emergency run as high as 3,000. Under the State of Emergency, detentions are authorized to be held without charge or trial. It is impossible to verify the total number or the identities of those detained, since the South African Government refuses to release that information. In addition, under the State of Emergency Regulations, anyone who publishes or distributes the names of people allegedly detained faces a possible ten year jail sentence or an $8,000 fine. Despite these intimidating and dangerous circumstances, information has reached the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, Amnesty International, the World Council of Churches and other monitoring groups from sources who have placed themselves at great personal risk.

The attached list of names has been compiled through this process. The accuracy of the list cannot be definitely verified so long as the South African Government refuses to release such information. These circumstances set the stage for the disappearance of hundreds of individuals.

FARM MORTGAGE MARKETING CORPORATION OF 1986

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am joined by Congressman DOUG BEREUTER, my colleague on the House Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs Committee, in introducing legislation which would provide a long-term solution to the financial credit crisis facing the agricultural borrowers and lenders of the Nation.

This legislation, the "Farm Mortgage Marketing Corporation Act," would stabilize and enhance the flow of capital for long-term financing of agricultural real estate credit needs by establishing an institutional secondary market mechanism. The association would be similar to other existing secondary market institutions and would act as a conduit between primary commercial agricultural lenders and the capital markets.

This legislation embodies a very simple concept that has already proven successful in providing a stable source of capital to meet the needs of the Nation in the areas of housing and education. "Fannie Mae" [Federal National Mortgage Association. "Freddie Mac" [Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation], and "Sallie Mae" [Student Loan Marketing Association] have each demonstrated the importance of their role as a source of capital within their respective sectors.

These secondary market entities purchase mortgage loans from qualified lenders, repackage them as securities or pool them in some fashion and sell them in the capital market to institutional investors such as pension funds, insurance companies and other large investors.

This new corporation would operate in a similar fashion by purchasing agricultural real estate mortgages from qualified commercial lenders, such as banks and insurance companies, and similarly repackaging them for the capital market.

Just as "Freddie Mac", "Fannie Mae", and "Sallie Mae" reflect a strong commitment by the Federal Government in meeting the housing and education needs of millions of Americans, creation of an agricultural secondary market for ag loans reflects the same type of commitment toward America's farmers.

The creation of this type of secondary market goes well beyond political rhetoric. It would instill more competition into the agricultural credit market, would provide an institutional source of liquidity and financing to ensure that lenders have the resources to remain in agricultural lending, and because of its mixed government and private ownership would minimize costs to the Federal Government.

The concept is one which was endorsed by the joint task force of the American Bankers Association and the Independent Bankers Association during hearings earlier this year by both the House Agriculture Committee and the House Banking Committee.

While the Congress has already taken a number of steps to address the economic crisis facing the Nation's farmers, it is evident that both farm borrowers and commercial agricultural lenders are continuing to have a difficult time in meeting the current and anticipated credit needs. This legislation continues those efforts to provide relief to the agricultural economy.

Following is a brief summary of the legislation and the text of the bill:

"FARM MORTGAGE MARKETING CORPORATION ACT OF 1986—CONGRESSMAN RICHARD H. LEHMAN

It is the intent of this Act to establish a secondary market entity similar to those which already serve the needs of the nation's housing and education sectors. This secondary market mechanism will serve as a means of enhancing and stabilizing the flow of capital for long-term financing of agricultural real estate credit needs by serving as a conduit between primary commercial agricultural lenders and the capital markets.

SECTION BY SECTION SUMMARY

SECTION 1. TITLE.—"Farm Mortgage Marketing Corporation Act of 1986".

SECTION 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to establish a quasi-private organization chartered by the Federal Government to purchase and insure agricultural mortgages from commercial agricultural lenders and to sell pools of agricultural mortgages to the capital market. Such a secondary market entity will facilitate the availability of long-term credit for agricultural borrowers and provide liquidity for financial institutions and other agricultural lenders.

SECTION 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION.—There is hereby established a corporation to be known as the Farm Mortgage Marketing Corporation.

SECTION 4. BOARD OF DIRECTORS.—The Act establishes a five-member Board of Directors. An initial interim Board will be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be comprised of the following: the Comptroller of the Currency, the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), and three appointees with expertise and training in agricultural lending and mortgage investments. When sufficient common stock of the Corporation has been sold to qualified lenders, the interim Board shall turn over the affairs of the Corporation to a regular Board elected from among the holders of the stock.

SECTION 5. PURCHASE AND SALE OF MORTGAGES.—The Corporation, with certain limitations, may purchase farm mortgages from any qualified agricultural lender and dispose of those mortgages through the issuing of securities.

The Corporation may purchase farm mortgages if the mortgage seller agrees to retain a 10 percent participation in the mortgage, or to repurchase or replace the mortgage upon demand by the Corporation if the borrower defaults on the loan. In addition, at the time of the purchase of the mortgage, the outstanding principal balance of the mortgage must be less than 80 percent of the value of the property securing the mortgage, or the portion of the unpaid balance of the mortgage in excess of 80 percent is guaranteed by or insured by a qualified insurer.

The Corporation shall issue securities which provide for the payment of principal and interest on farm mortgages purchased and held by the Corporation.

SECTION 6. CAPITALIZATION.—The Corporation shall be initially capitalized by the purchase of $200,000,000 in stock by the U.S. Treasury. In addition the Corporation shall have the authority to require that each mortgage seller make a nonrefundable capital contribution equal to not more than two percent of the unpaid principal amounts of the mortgages purchased from the seller, charge appropriate fees to meet all costs and expenses, and issue stock in return for any contribution to capital and capital surplus accounts.

The Corporation may at any time retire any stock of the Corporation which was purchased by the Treasury.

SECTION 7. POWERS OF THE CORPORATION.—The Corporation will have the authority to prescribe such regulations to carry out the provisions of the Act and meet the normal obligations of the Corporation.

SECTION 8. DEFINITIONS.—Defines the terms of the Act.

"Farm mortgage" is defined as any loan to an agricultural producer which is secured by a fee-simple or leasehold mortgage with status as a first lien on agricultural real estate originated after the date of enactment of this Act and which is an obligation of a person who is a citizen or business entity whose majority interest are citizens of the United States.

"Qualified agricultural lender" is defined as meaning any bank, business and industrial development company, savings and loan institution, commercial finance company, trust company, credit union, insurance company, or other person approved by the Corporation.

SECTION 9. TERMINATION OF THE CORPORATION.—The Corporation shall be in existence until ten years after the effective date of the Act and shall make no commitment to purchase new agricultural mortgages later than seven years after the effective date of the Act.

SECTION 10. DESIGNATION OF CORPORATION AS MIXED-OWNERSHIP GOVERNMENT CORPORATION.

SECTION 11. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—$200,000,000 shall be appropriated beginning after September 30, 1986.

H.R. 5132

A bill to increase the amount of capital available to financial institutions and other agricultural lenders for loans to farmers by providing a secondary market for farm mortgages through the establishment of a federally chartered corporation, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Farm Mortgage Marketing Corporation Act of 1986".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) economic stability would be enhanced and the availability of long-term credit for agricultural borrowers would be ensured if a mechanism to access secondary markets was created; and

(2) economic stability would be enhanced and the liquidity of investment funds available to lend to agricultural borrowers by financial institutions and other agricultural lenders would be ensured by providing a secondary market for the purchase of sound agricultural real estate mortgages.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to establish a quasi-private corporation chartered by the Federal Government which will purchase and insure agricultural mortgages and sell pools of such agricultural mortgages in order to—

(1) facilitate the availability of long-term credit for agricultural borrowers;

(2) provide liquidity for financial institutions and other agricultural lenders; and

(3) provide an institutional mechanism to allow capital markets to invest in and provide funding for agricultural loans.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION.

There is hereby established a corporation to be known as the Farm Mortgage Marketing Corporation.

SEC. 4. BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

(a) NUMBER AND APPOINTMENT.—

(1) 5 MEMBERS.—The powers of the Corporation shall be vested in the Board of Directors which shall consist of 5 members.

(2) INTERIM APPOINTED BOARD.—Until a determination is made by the President under paragraph (3), the Board of Directors shall be composed of the following members:

(A) The Comptroller of the Currency.

(B) The Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

(C) 3 members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among individuals who have substantial experience and expertise in the fields of agricultural lending and mortgage investments and are representative of agricultural lending institutions.

(3) REGULAR ELECTED BOARD.—When in the judgment of the President, sufficient common stock of the Corporation has been sold to qualified agricultural lenders, the interim Board shall turn over the affairs of the Corporation to regular Board members elected from holders of common stock.

(b) TERMS.—

(1) APPOINTED MEMBERS.—Directors appointed by the President shall serve at the pleasure of the President until their successors have been elected pursuant to subsection (a)(3).

(2) ELECTED MEMBERS.—Directors shall be elected for a term ending on the date of the next annual meeting of the common stockholders of the Corporation.

(3) VACANCY.—

(A) ELECTED MEMBERS.—Any elective seat on the Board shall be filled by the Board, but only for the unexpired portion of the term.

(B) APPOINTED MEMBER.—Any appointive seat which becomes vacant shall be filled by the President in the manner provided in subsection (a)(2).

(c) CHAIRPERSON.—The Chairperson of the Board shall be designated by and from among the members of the Board.

(d) MEETINGS.—The Board shall meet semiannually at the call of its Chairperson to determine the general policies which shall govern the operations of the Corporation. A majority of members of the Board shall constitute a quorum.

(e) EMPLOYMENT OF STAFF.—

(1) APPOINTMENT.—The Board may appoint and fix the pay of such personnel as the Board considers appropriate.

(2) APPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN CIVIL SERVICE LAWS.—The staff of the Board may be appointed without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and may be paid without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates, except that no individuals so appointed may receive pay in excess of the maximum annual rate of basic pay in effect for the Senior Executive Service pursuant to section 5382 of such title.

SEC. 5. PURCHASE AND SALE OF MORTGAGES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) AUTHORITY TO PURCHASE.—Except as provided in subsection (c), the Corporation may purchase, and make commitments to purchase, farm mortgage loans from any qualified agricultural lender.

(2) AUTHORITY TO SELL.—The Corporation may sell or otherwise dispose of, any farm mortgage or interest in a mortgage purchased under paragraph (1).

(3) CERTIFICATION OF APPLICATIONS.—The Corporation shall receive applications for the certification of qualified agricultural lenders for the purpose of this Act and establish criteria for determining the eligibility of an agricultural lender for certification.

(b) AGREEMENTS FOR SERVICING MORTGAGES.—The Corporation may enter into agreements with the seller of any farm mortgage which the Corporation purchases, or with any qualified agricultural lender, to further provide for the servicing of such mortgage.

(c) LIMITATIONS.—No farm mortgage may be purchased by the Corporation under this section unless—

(1) the seller of the mortgage agrees—

(A) to retain a participation of not less than 10 percent in the mortgage; or

(B) to repurchase or replace the mortgage upon demand of the Corporation if, during such period and under such circumstances as the Association may require, the borrower is in default with respect to such mortgage; and

(2) at the time of purchase—

(A) the outstanding principal balance of the mortgage is less than 80 percent of the value of the property securing the mortgage; or

(B) the portion of the unpaid balance of the mortgage is in excess of 80 percent of the value securing the mortgage is guaranteed or insured by a qualified insurer, as determined by the Association.

(d) MORTGAGE-BACKED SECURITIES.—

(1) ISSUANCE AUTHORIZED.—To provide a greater degree of liquidity to the farm mortgage investment market and as an additional means of financing the operations of the Corporation, the Corporation may issue and sell securities which provide for the payment of principal and interest in relation to payments of principal and interest on farm mortgages purchased and held by the Corporation under this section.

(2) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—Securities issued under this subsection shall have such term to maturity and bear such rate of interest as the Corporation may prescribe with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

(3) PRIVATE ISSUANCE OF PAYMENTS.—The Corporation shall issue or purchase from private sources commitments to insure the timely payment of principal and interest to purchasers of the securities backed by farm mortgages held by the Corporation.

(4) NOT EXEMPT SECURITIES.—No security issued by the Corporation under this subsection shall be—

(A) an exempted security under section 3 of the Securities Act of 1933; or

(B) an exempted security within the meaning given to such terms by section 3(a)(12) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

(5) MINIMUM AMOUNT ESTABLISHED FOR FARM MORTGAGES BACKING SECURITIES.—The Corporation shall at all times hold such number of farm mortgages as may be necessary to enable the Corporation to make timely principal and interest payments on securities issued under this subsection from the principal and interest payments received by the Association with respect to such mortgages.

(6) NOTICE THAT SECURITIES ARE NOT FEDERALLY GUARANTEED.—The Corporation shall insert such language in each security issued under this subsection as the Corporation determines to be appropriate to clearly indicate that—

(A) the payment of principal and interest with respect to such security is not guaranteed by the United States; and

(B) the security does not constitute a debt or obligation of the United States or any agency or instrumentality of the United States other than the Association.

(7) REPURCHASE AUTHORIZED.—The Corporation may repurchase in the open market any security issued under this subsection at any time and at any price.

(e) CLASSIFICATION OF SELLERS FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES.—

(1) CLASSIFICATION AUTHORIZED.—The Corporation may establish a system for classifying sellers of farm mortgages, or qualified agricultural lenders which services such mortgages, according to type, size, location, assets, or on such other basis the Corporation may consider appropriate.

(2) PURPOSES OF CLASSIFICATION.—The Corporation may take any classification system established under paragraph (1) into account and may distinguish between classes established under such system in prescribing regulations and imposing charges or fees.

SEC. 6. CAPITALIZATION.

(a) INITIAL CAPITALIZATION; GENERAL PROVISIONS.—

(1) INITIAL CAPITALIZATION.—The Corporation shall have capital stock of $200,000,000 subscribed by the Secretary of the Treasury from funds appropriated for such purchase.

(2) SHAREHOLDER VOTING RIGHTS.—Owners of common stock shall be vested with all voting rights, each share being entitled to one vote with rights of cumulative voting at all elections of directors.

(3) UNRESTRICTED TRANSFERABILITY.—The free transferability of the common stock at all times to any person shall not be restricted except that, as to the Corporation, it shall be transferable only on the books of the Corporation.

(b) CONTRIBUTIONS TO CAPITAL; FEES.—

(1) REQUIRED CONTRIBUTIONS ALLOWED.—The Corporation may accumulate funds for its capital surplus account by requiring each mortgage seller to make nonrefundable capital contributions equal to not more than 2 percent of the unpaid principal amounts or mortgages purchased by the Corporation from such seller.

(2) FEES.—The Corporation may impose charges or fees in such amounts as may be necessary to meet all costs and expenses incurred in connection with the administration of this Act.

(c) MANAGEMENT OF CAPITAL AND EARNINGS.—

(1) TRANSFER TO GENERAL SURPLUS ACCOUNT.—All earnings from the operations of the Corporation shall be transferred annually to its general surplus account.

(2) TRANSFER TO RESERVES.—At any time, funds of the general surplus account may, at the discretion of the Board, be transferred to reserves.

(3) DIVIDENDS.—Any dividends paid by the Corporation on stock issued under this section shall be charged against the general surplus account.

(d) STOCK FOR CONTRIBUTIONS TO CAPITAL.—

(1) CONTRIBUTIONS BY MORTGAGE SELLERS.—The Corporation shall issue, from time to time to each mortgage seller, its common stock evidencing any capital contributions made by such seller pursuant to subsection (b).

(2) OTHER CONTRIBUTIONS.—In addition to the shares of common stock issued under paragraph (1), the Corporation may issue additional shares of common stock in return for any other contributions to capital or capital and surplus.

(e) RETIREMENT OF STOCK.—The Corporation may at any time retire any stock of the Corporation which was purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 7. POWERS OF THE CORPORATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Corporation shall have the following powers:

(1) To adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal.

(2) To have succession until dissolved by an Act of Congress or terminated under section 9.

(3) To prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(4) To make and perform contracts, agreements, and commitments.

(5) To borrow, give security, pay interest or dividends, and issue notes, debentures, bonds, preferred stock, or other obligations or securities under terms and conditions which the Corporation may prescribe.

(6) To settle, adjust, compromise, and release any claim, demand, or right of, by, or against the Corporation, whether in whole or in part and with or without consideration or benefit to the Corporation.

(7) To sue and be sued in its corporate capacity, to prosecute or defend any action brought by or against the Corporation in any State or Federal court of competent jurisdiction.

(8) To acquire, hold, and dispose of any property.

(9) To determine the Corporation's expenditures and the manner in which such expenditures shall be incurred and paid.

(10) To exercise such incidental powers which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act and are necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 8. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act—

(1) CORPORATION.—The term "Corporation" means the Farm Mortgage Marketing Corporation established under section 3.

(2) BOARD.—The term "Board" means the Board of Directors of the Corporation.

(3) FARM MORTGAGE.—The term "farm mortgage" means any loan to an agricultural producer which—

(A) is secured by fee-simple or leasehold mortgage with status as a first lien on agricultural real estate located in the United States;

(B) is originated after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(C) is an obligation of—

(i) an individual who is a citizen of the United States; or

(ii) any person other than an individual a majority interest in which is held by individuals who are citizens of the United States, whose training or farming experience is sufficient, under criteria established by the Corporation, to assure a reasonable likelihood that such loan will be repaid according to its terms.

(4) AGRICULTURAL REAL ESTATE.—The term "agricultural real estate" means a parcel or parcels of land used for the production of one or more agricultural commodities or products and consisting of a minimum acreage or producing minimum annual receipts as determined by the Corporation;

(5) QUALIFIED AGRICULTURAL LENDER.—The term "qualified agricultural lender" means any bank, business and industrial development company, savings and loan institution, commercial finance company, trust company, credit union, insurance company, or other person approved by the Corporation.

(6) SECURITY.—The term "security" has the meaning given to such term in section 3(a)(10) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

SEC. 9. TERMINATION OF THE CORPORATION.

(a) TERMINATION AFTER 10 YEARS.—The Corporation shall continue in existence until 10 years the effective date of this Act but shall make no commitment to purchase and shall purchase no new agricultural farm mortgages later than 7 years after the effective date of this Act.

(b) SUBSEQUENT ADMINISTRATION OF ASSETS AND OBLIGATIONS.—After the termination of the Corporation, any asset or obligation of the Corporation shall be administered by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 10. DESIGNATION OF ASSOCIATION AS MIXED-OWNERSHIP GOVERNMENT CORPORATION.

Section 9101(2) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(K) The Farm Mortgage Marketing Corporation."

SEC. 11. AUTHORIZATION.

There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of the Treasury for any fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1986, not to exceed $200,000,000 for the purchase of stock of the Corporation to carry out the provisions of this Act.

TAIWAN-AMERICAN RELATIONS

HON. BILL EMERSON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, Dr. Nathan K. Mao, professor, Shippensburg University, is known to many of us as an expert on Taiwan-American relations; actually, perhaps we should say American-Republic of China relations, but the Taiwan Relations Act a April 1979 obviated our formal relations with that country. We now have an informed, but very important liaison with Taiwan/Republic of China. Many of us are very interested in improving our trade relations with Taiwan, and reducing the imbalance in trade that exists between our two countries, an imbalance that is currently to the detriment of the United States.

Dr. Mao recently spoke at a seminar sponsored by the American Defense Foundation and offered a perspective on Taiwan-American relations of which we should all be aware. We all certainly want to maintain the warm friendship the United States and the Republic of China has traditionally maintained, and we certainly want to improve our own trade posture and opportunity for sales of American goods in Taiwan. As with so many issues, both sides have some strong concerns which need to be aired in order for there to be a resolution of impediments to better relations. Dr. Mao's remarks to the forum offered by the American Defense Foundation came on the heel of his recent trip to Taiwan, where he was in contact with many government leaders and folks in the street, and I am pleased to share his comments with my colleagues.

U.S. MILITARY SALES TO TAIWAN VITAL TO TAIWAN'S STABILITY AND PROSPERITY—DAWNING OF A NEW ERA IN TAIWAN

(By Nathan Mao)

Recently I spent two weeks in Taipei. I met with a number of government officials and private citizens, who included university teachers, newspaper editors, businessmen, housewives and taxi drivers. I discussed with them Taipei's new high rises, traffic jams, Snake Alley, proliferation of barber shops and Taiwan-U.S. relations. While there in Taipei, something unexpected happened. An earthquake shook Taipei and other parts of the island on May 20. It was surprising to someone who had never experienced an earthquake before. Yet after ten or fifteen seconds of shock, I quickly settled down to a feeling of acceptance and tranquility.

In many ways, the Republic of China on Taiwan has experienced a number of big and small political earthquakes ever since it left the U.N. in 1971 and became de-recognized by the Carter administration in January, 1979. Every time it faced adversity, it somehow managed to bounce back with vitality.

After Taipei left the U.N., observers predicted that Taipei would cease to function in the community of nations. The fact is that Taipei continues to have diplomatic relations with twenty some countries and maintains substantive relationships with 140 more non-communist countries in the world. Similarly, in place of diplomatic recognition by the U.S., the Taiwan Relations Act of April, 1979 provided the legal basis for Taipei to continue its unofficial relationship with Washington. This relationship is on-going and sound, thanks to the relentless efforts of people like Captain Eugene McDaniel and Dr. Fred Chien. This does not mean that there haven't been disappointments from Taipei's perspective.

For instance, in January 1982, Taipei's request for advanced jet fighters, the FX, was denied by the State Department, on the grounds "that no sale of advanced fighter aircraft to Taiwan is required because no military need for such aircraft exists."

Another disappointment was the Shanghai Communique of August 17, 1982, which specified the gradual reduction of military sales to Taipei as tensions decrease in the Taiwan Strait.

Most recently, the administration proposed the sale of $550 million of avionics to equip Mainland China's F-8 fighter planes. The request sailed through Congress. In fact, in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, only Senator Jesse Helms opposed the sale.

Why wasn't there any major outcry against such military sales to Mainland? My Taipei friends would like to know.

Proponents for arms sales to the Mainland argued that Taipei continues to enjoy air superiority over the Mainland in the Taiwan Strait. Not so, my Taipei friends replied. They pointed out that Taiwan's F-100s and F-104s, representing 40 percent of Taiwan's total fighter force, are aging and need to be replaced. Moreover, they emphasized that Taiwan's co-production of F5Es with Northrop will terminate in a few months.

Proponents for arms sales to Peking also argued that Taiwan is developing its own advanced jet fighter with the help of General Dynamics and that Taiwan has successfully tested its new air-to-air missile called the "Tien Chien." Again, my argumentative friends replied that the new fighter planes are still in the planning stage and will not be operative until the mid 1990s. As for the "Tien Chien," it would certainly be no match for what the U.S. plans to do for the Chinese military. For example, additional U.S. military sales to the Mainland now under consideration include Hawkeye early warning planes, ground to air missiles and co-production of the TOW anti-tank missile and the Mark 46 torpedo.

Even in the near future, the U.S. sale of avionics will give Mainland China's F-8 fighter planes all weather and night operational capabilities that Taiwan's current fleet of 250 F5Es do not have.

If there is such an apparent increase in Mainland's military capability, why isn't there a corresponding upgrading of Taipei's military strength? My Taipei friends were puzzled.

The answer is that the Mainland, ever since Nixon's visit in 1972, has slowly but steadily reshaped its image in the U.S. It is no longer the bellicose anti-American adversary of the Korean War era but a "reasonable country" willing and ready to adopt Western values including French cuisine and rock and roll.

In its eagerness to have the Mainland as a counterweight against the Soviets, the United States readily believes the myths about the Mainland. Foremost among these myths is that China is the place to make money. Reality, however, is different. A June 6, 1986 Wall Street Journal article said, "There's a new brand of Chinese cigarette for sale at a few shops around Peking. It's named, in big English letters, Profit. Gloomy foreign businessmen say that buying a pack is about the closest they'll come to making any money in a China that continues to entice and then sour the foreign investors."

A second myth is that China acts in the interest of the U.S. Reality once again tells a different story. In April, 1986, China joined the Soviet Union and several other nations in a U.N. Security Council vote condemning the U.S. bombing of Libya. Even more distressing is the Washington Post report on June 7, 1986 that "China, despite repeated denials, is selling weapons in large and increasing quantities to Iran, . . . an estimate of $1.6 billion in recent sales . . . the International Institute of Strategic Studies in London . . . said China had also sold weapons to Iraq. . . ."

A third myth is that China has peaceful intentions toward Taiwan. My Taipei friends, by now nearly exhausted by their discussions with me, insisted that no one should forget that the Mainland has never renounced the use of force against Taiwan. Chinese leaders Deng Ziaoping and Hu Yaobang have repeatedly warned of a blockade against the island if Taiwan authorities do not take re-unification seriously. In addition, no one should ever ignore Peking's military adventurism such as its war against Vietnam in 1979.

My Taipei friends were also puzzled by the formation of the "Committee for Democracy on Taiwan" on May 20, 1986. The Committee urged the Taiwan government to match its economic progress by granting more political freedoms. My friends said it was unfair that the Committee made no mention of the violations of human rights on the Mainland or the fact that the people on Taiwan do enjoy most of the freedoms of any Western democracy.

My Taipei friends brought to my attention President Chiang Ching-kuo's display of flexibility on several fronts. The ruling Kuomintang recently allowed a major opposition group to open branches in Taiwan, conducted talks with Peking for the return of the China Airlines' jet and permitted Tangwai's street demonstrations in Taipei. In early May the Kuomintang also pledged a comprehensive review of all controversial issues regarding the future of Taiwan.

These were giant steps in view of Taipei's worries about its own military security. In my friends' views, the Kuomintang will not make any more major political concessions until it feels that Taiwan's future, based on overt U.S. support and not on Mainland China's professed intentions, has been better assured.

Better assurance means an increase of the present level of military sales to Taipei, currently projected at $760 million. Better assurance means that Taipei be allowed to purchase more advanced aircraft, submarines and other sophisticated military hardware. Better assurance means that the U.S. reaffirm from time to time its interest in the security of Taiwan. Better assurance means that the U.S. public understand that the arms issue seriously affects the morale of the people in Taiwan. In other words, increased military sales to Taipei will make the Taiwanese people feel more secure and more dedicated to economic growth. The end result is a stable Taiwan.

A stable Taiwan is in everyone's interest. A stable Taiwan will serve America's strategic interest in the Far East; it will mean more purchase of American consumer goods and a better balance of trade between Taiwan and the United States.

A stable Taiwan will allow the ruling Kuomintang to seriously consider lifting of martial law, formation of new opposition parties, rejuvenation of the lawmaking bodies, restructuring of the Taiwan provincial government and end of censorship.

A stable Taiwan will mean continuing prosperity for its 19 million people and in time converting the Mainland to democracy and free enterprise.

A stable Taiwan, however, does not mean giving in to pressures of any democracy committee. It does not mean subscribing to the concept of Taiwan independence. Nor does it mean surrendering to the Communist propaganda of reunification.

Ladies and gentlemen, this is not the twilight hour in Taiwan. It is the dawning of a new era—an era of a closer working relationship with the U.S. and other non-communist countries, an era of dialogue with the Tangwai and an era of continuing economic growth at home and of Taiwan being "the guiding light for the future development of Mainland China."

Thank you very much.

WASTE, FRAUD, AND MISMANAGEMENT

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, in a time when we are deeply concerned about where every dollar in our budget goes, I feel that we are being falsely persuaded by liberals in Congress to overlook our biggest expense on the grounds that no more cuts can be made in social welfare programs. Social programs have fallen victim to a carelessly wasteful bureaucracy and some unscrupulous benefit recipients.

Stories of frauds and scams are common and evident to some of us in Congress and the frequency of them in the media indicates a growing problem. One example appeared in the June 11 edition of the Washington Times in an attached article by Donald Lambro. The story indicated that over $2 billion in fraud has been uncovered in the Department of Health and Human Services by Richard P. Kusserow of the Inspector General's Office. This was in the first half of this fiscal year alone. Just imagine how much more waste there is in other agencies that provide social welfare aid and are not monitored correctly.

Resources such as these could be used toward other legitimate national goals instead of initially looking at higher taxes or defense cuts. I encourage my colleagues to read the following article in order to see that there still remains a lot of fat in the Federal budget.

HEALTH-CARE ABUSES THAT COST $2 BILLION

(By Donald Lambro)

The congressional skeptics who say that little, if any, waste, fraud, and abuse remain to be found in federal spending programs should read the latest report from the Department of Health and Human Service's Office of Inspector General. It's a $2 billion eye-opener.

Citing case after case of wrongdoing, the report shows that taxpayers are being relentlessly taken to the cleaners by unscrupulous doctors, dentists, nursing-home operators, and other professionals—as well as by health and welfare beneficiaries.

In all, the inspector general's office, headed by Richard P. Kusserow, identifies more than $2 billion in cash recoveries and potential savings during the first six months of this fiscal year. Among them:

A New York couple, says Mr. Kusserow, created "one of the largest schemes we have uncovered for stealing money from a Medicare carrier." The wife, who was a senior claims examiner for the carrier in question, used her position to mail fraudulent checks totaling more than $850,000 to different addresses. Authorities convicted the husband, who masterminded the scheme, and two others.

A Texas ophthalmologist was convicted on a 74-count indictment for billing Medicaid for work not performed and passing along inflated costs of goods bought from a fictitious corporation.

In Chicago, 15 people falsely claimed enrollment in various colleges in order to obtain more than $75,000 in student-aid benefits.

A dentist in Georgia was convicted of billing Medicaid for examinations and fluoride treatments that were never performed.

In a nursing-home scam in Iowa and Texas, three podiatrists were convicted of submitting phony Medicaid or Medicare bills for services they never performed, including toenail surgery, nail removals, therapy, and X-rays. Investigators said $120,000 in phony claims was submitted by the foot specialists.

A Pennsylvania osteopath was convicted of false billings and kickbacks after agents discovered that he was paying kickbacks to other doctors who prescribed his heart-monitoring devices for their patients. The man was fined $100,000, sent to prison, and suspended from the Medicare and Medicaid programs for nine years.

One of Mr. Kusserow's most effective fraud-detection methods has been to match Social Security beneficiaries against state and Medicare death records. Among his latest disclosures:

A California man collected his mother's benefits for six years after her death in 1979. He was convicted and ordered to pay back the $25,000 he had obtained illegally in another California case, a woman was convicted after having cashed $40,000 worth of her deceased aunt's Social Security checks in 10 years.

In New York, Mr. Kusserow found that 23 persons had stolen $235,000 in benefits sent to relatives and friends who had long since died. In the case, both a husband and wife had been cashing their deceased parents' benefit checks.

In Illinois, Medicaid investigators broke what Mr. Kusserow called "the largest Medicaid fraud scheme in terms of dollars." Eleven people were convicted. Included in the scheme, which bilked Medicaid out of $20 million, were doctors, pharmacists, and 20 clinic-pharmacies that sold codeine-containing sedatives and cough medicine to drug addicts.

In all, 90 health-care providers were banned from Medicare and/or Medicaid programs and 655 wrongdoers were prosecuted.

Mr. Kusserow's team of auditors also found that more than $1 billion is being wasted as a result of poor management.

For example, the government could save taxpayers a minimum of $600 million a year by reducing Medicare payments for indirect medical-education costs to teaching hospitals.

Another $450 million in welfare costs would be saved over three years by promoting the transfer of automated Aid to Families with Dependent Children claims-processing retrieval systems among the states.

Think of it: that's $2 billion in savings found within a six-month period. And Mr. Kusserow says he has only begun to scratch the surface" of this $340 billion department.

It makes you wonder: how much waste, fraud, and abuse remains to be uncovered in the rest of the government?

JOB TRAINING AMENDMENTS TO THE IRA

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce legislation to expand the use of Individual Retirement Accounts [IRA's] in such a way that they may be used for job training and retraining. My bill, entitled, "Job Training Amendments to the IRA," would allow individuals to withdrawal up to $4,000 of their IRA funds without penalty.

The need for this legislation is readily apparent when one looks at the grave disparity between the need for displaced workers job retraining and the amount of resources currently being expended.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, from 1979 to 1984, 11.5 million people lost their jobs due to plant closings or employment cutbacks. As of January 1984, looking at 5.1 million of those workers who had been employed for over 3 years, 3.1 million were reemployed, 1.3 million were unemployed, and 700,000 had left the work force altogether. Assuming that these figures have remained relatively constant over the past 2 years, it is reasonable to assume from these statistics alone, that at least 1.5 to 5 million displaced workers are in need of job retraining. These statistic are supported by the Office of Technology Assessment's [OTA] report entitled, "Technology and Structural Unemployment: Reemploying Displaced Adults."

According to the OTA report, Title III, Job Training Partnership Act [JTPA] funds "served 96,100 workers in its first 9 months, and another 132,200 workers were newly enrolled in the full program year July 1984 to June 1985." They estimated that these figures represent "less than 5 percent of the eligible [displaced worker] population." In other words, out of approximately 4.5 million displaced workers who could have benefited from some type of job retraining, most were receiving no assistance.

Turning to an examination of what is being spent to retrain these displaced workers, we find that government programs, which involve both State and Federal funds, are simply not adequate to do the job.

While close to $5 billion was appropriated in fiscal year 1986 on employing training programs, only $100 million from title III of the JTPA's $3,461 billion in fiscal year 1986 appropriation went toward job retraining for displaced workers. With an additional $100 million coming from the Employment Services [ES] Program, and approximately $30 million from States Title III, JTPA matching funds, the total figure for displaced worker job retraining still does not rise above $230 million per year.

The OTA report, "Technology and Structural Unemployment: Reemploying Displaced Adults," echoed these statistics in stating that, "Whether title III is an effective and sufficient response to the problem of worker displacement is questionable. One important question is whether the heavy emphasis on placement may divert attention and resources away from training. The limited information available on program spending indicates that vocational skills training in title III programs is probably sparse—While retaining for strictly high technology skills and occupations may have been overemphasized in the past, training is still a very important component of well-run displaced worker programs. For many displaced workers, training is the best route back to a job with reasonable opportunities for advancement. This is particularly true for unskilled or semiskilled manufacturing production workers, whose former jobs were based largely on routine manual and mental skills. Many of these people need substantial retraining or education to get good jobs in the service-producing sectors, where most new jobs are being created.

The benefits of using an IRA-type funding approach to fill these job retaining needs are many.

The very concept of the IRA encourages people to save for and provide for their own future and job training needs. While this has obvious economic consequences, psychologically there are benefits as well. By orienting people toward personal responsibility, we encourage them to devote more energy into decisions relating to career choices and long-term career planning.

Following on the concept of individual responsibility is the factor of portability. The personal nature of the IRA lends itself to the kind of flexibility needed by individuals seeking training on short notice and in areas other than their home State. While current approaches to job training using State agencies and programs are effective for many, still many more could benefit from the use of personal funds to be used in programs available all over the country. For instance, if a worker in the Lehigh Valley of Pennsylvania wants to live with relatives in New York and take specialized training classes and then move back to the Valley, he will be able to do it with an IRA approach to job training. In this era of changing job markets and differing levels of availability of training in different areas of the country, it makes good sense to go with this type of a highly flexible, mobile approach to job training.

While these funds will be ready for use in retraining, it is important to remember that all unused funds will be used for retirement needs. At a time when Federal and State spending on welfare programs continues to increase, any program which offers the potential to provide greater incentives for saving for one's future can only serve to relieve pressure on already burdened Federal programs.

Cost and effectiveness of implementation of training programs is another strong factor which favors the use of IRA funds versus more traditional approaches to job training. While other programs provide useful training services, there is the unwanted side effect of having to divert large portions of funds intended for training to the administration of programs. Conforming to the rules that would be imposed by the IRS for compliance with this program promise to be far less costly than any similar program utilizing a large bureaucracy.

Establishing a program for training which gives the individual a stake in the quality of training promises to cut down on abuse. In programs previously established by the Congress, from welfare to the extremely effective and highly regarded GI bill that called for individuals to spend money that was not their own, there invariably were problems of abuse. And, while abuse in and of itself has been causes for concern, often times solutions can have equally damaging effects with a subsequent flow of regulations and redtape produced to quell the misuse of funds. Quite simply, when individuals spend their money, it is far less likely to be misspent.

Not much needs be said about the benefits of savings on economic growth. However, economies like Japan's which encourage savings, have continued to see strong growth; something we would be wise to emulate. In terms we can all understand: More savings means more money for growth; which means more jobs.

Finally, effective job training turns people who were once idle into taxpaying citizens working to contribute to the overall soundness of our Nation's economy. The benefit of lost dollars due to a tax break for IRA savings may well be minimal in comparison to the benefit to both our economy and the U.S. Treasury, when unemployed people return to productive work.

I would urge my colleagues to support this effort to provide for the retraining of America's workers through their cosponsorship of this legislation. The need is real; the lack of funds being spent to solve the problem is real and the need for IRA's to be a part of the solution is real. Let us all work to save the IRA in the current tax reform battle. It's benefit in terms of retirement savings and the potential it represents for job training are too important to lose.

SOUTH AFRICA: AT THE EDGE OF ARMAGEDDON

HON. GEO. W. CROCKETT, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, on June 12, 1986, the racist white minority Government of South Africa imposed a "State of Emergency" over the entire nation, seeking to suppress the will of the majority of its people for justice and equality.

Under the state of emergency, the Government can stop, harrass, arrest and detain anyone for any reason, and can use "such force as, they, under the circumstances may deem necessary" to prevent even suspected dangers to public order. Those detained may be interrogated without warrant, held incommunicado and held indefinitely without due process.

In addition, anyone who reports on such detentions is subject to sweeping press restrictions, including shutting down the publication and imprisoning the reporter for up to 10 years.

Nevertheless, information has reached us about the hundreds of persons missing and presumed in detention under this barbaric system.

I would like, for the benefit of my colleagues, to insert into the RECORD at this point just a few of the names of those now missing and presumed detained by the South African police:

PLUGGING THE LEAKY SHIP OF STATE

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, the ship of state is listing so badly these days that it is amazing that it's still afloat. One Washington wag has said that it now has more holes than a shower head through which relentless streams of state secrets are gushing. The U.S.S. America is, indeed, leaking profusely and something must soon be done to save it from sinking.

The root of the problem is that too many people in both the executive and legislative branches of this Government have access to sensitive information. Lee Hamilton, chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, was on target when he noted in a perceptive article on protecting secrets that appeared in the September 4, 1985, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, "Leaks are inevitable when so many people handle secrets."

Predictably, both Congress and the administration tend to blame each other for the leaks. As a matter of fact, both are culpable and both need to take corrective action.

The administration is at last beginning to reduce access to secrets and punishing those who have leaked. Congress must follow suit and to this end I have introduced House Joint Resolution 7, which currently has 159 bipartisan cosponsors from all points of the political spectrum.

What House Joint Resolution 7 does is replace the House and Senate Intelligence Committees with a consolidated joint committee that would supervise the activities of the intelligence community. The membership of this panel would be drawn from the four committees in each House that historically have exercised some oversight over intelligence activities. Specifically, Democratic and Republican members from the House Committees on Foreign Affairs, Appropriations, Armed Services, and Judiciary would all have seats. The same membership formula would apply for Senate members. This arrangement would protect the turf of concerned interests in Congress while saving the U.S. taxpayer, according to a cost benefit analysis received last year, approximately $1.5 million per annum in operating expenses. That's an important consideration in this era of stricter budget constraints.

Effective congressional oversight of any executive branch component requires budget review authority. Consequently, my proposal stipulates that the joint committee shall have exclusive legislative jurisdiction with respect to any intelligence activity conducted by any agency or department of the Federal Government.

To be sure, there is opposition to this radical legislative surgery, but, given the national security ramifications, we have no alternative. Intelligence collection and the conduct of espionage are uniquely different and sensitive activities requiring the utmost secrecy. As I see it, the singular nature of these activities dictates a specially structured and very protective legislative oversight process; not one that mimics ordinary congressional procedure.

It's instructive to look back at how our Founding Fathers addressed the intelligence question. These hardheaded realists understood that a breach of security during that perilous revolutionary period often meant the difference between life and death. As a result, only five Members of the Second Continental Congress—the most famous being Ben Franklin—sat on the Committee of Secret Correspondence, America's original foreign intelligence directorate. Moreover, on November 9, 1775, the Continental Congress adopted the following oath of secrecy which ought to still be in effect today:

Resolved, That every member of this Congress considers himself under the ties of virtue, honour and love of his country, not to divulge, directly or indirectly, any matter or thing agitated or debated in Congress, before the same shall have been determined, without the leave of the Congress: nor any matter or thing determined in Congress, which a majority of the Congress shall order to be kept secret. And that if any member shall violate this agreement, he shall be expelled this Congress, and deemed an enemy to the liberties of America, and liable to be treated as such, and that every member signify his consent to this agreement by signing the same.

This oath was not taken lightly and no less a revolutionary figure than Thomas Paine, the author of "Common Sense," was fired as secretary of the Secret Correspondence Committee for revealing information from the committee's files.

Keeping a secret has become so difficult that today it is almost impossible to conduct activities in furtherance of U.S. foreign policy objectives. This was brought home dramatically in the recent bombing of Libya. That episode probably would not have occurred if the President possessed a viable covert foreign policy option that lies somewhere between doing nothing and sending the marines or American bombers.

Effectively combating international terrorism frequently requires close and quiet cooperation between our intelligence agencies and those of our allies. It is no secret, however, that the friendly foreign intelligence services are becoming increasingly reluctant to cooperate with us for fear of disclosure. A joint committee framework that significantly reduced the number of individuals with access to sensitive information would help restore our allies' confidence that their circumspect cooperation would be protected.

A new joint oversight panel with balanced party membership, supported by a small, professional staff, would diminish the possibilities for partisan posturing and significantly reduce the number of individuals with regular access to sensitive information. This would not only minimize the risk of damaging unauthorized disclosures, but it would also increase the likelihood of the FBI and the Justice Department identifying leak sources—something that rarely occurs now because of the large number of individuals in the "intelligence information loop."

A joint committee would also eliminate the possibility of executive branch components playing one committee off against the other and would simplify the problem of handling and storing the classified data that the two intelligence committees and others now regularly receive from the intelligence community.

Worthy of note are the findings of a recent Senate security report that was ordered by Majority Leader ROBERT DOLE. According to Alfred M. Lehn, who is the chief of the Senate's national security information office;

The report found there is good cause to believe that we have the potential for serious security problems . . . you do have an awful lot of offices that can store classified material—120 separate places under the control of 300 to 400 people in four different buildings. We need some central office that will be responsible for all of it.

A joint committee provides a tailor-made answer to this problem.

Congress has increasingly insisted upon being briefed and consulted by the executive branch regarding national security and foreign policy questions. A large percentage of these briefings are intelligence related and require the involvement of high level executive branch officials who are often hard pressed to meet the demands of both the House and Senate Intelligence Committees. This is particularly true during fast-breaking crisis situations such as we have seen recently. A consolidated oversight panel would provide one point of contact for consultation and briefings in those instances when time is of the essence.

A bipartisan Senate Select Committee—headed by Senator DAN QUAYLE—studied how to streamline the Senate's committee system. The Quayle panel endorsed the joint committee concept in its final report to the Senate in December 1984, as did then-Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker and Senator SAM NUNN. In addition, ex-CIA directors, Richard Helms, James Schlesinger, GEORGE BUSH, and Adm. (ret.) Stansfield Turner have voiced their support, as has the Vice President's Task Force on Combatting Terrorism.

Finally, this joint committee proposal is an important aspect of a broad-based nonpartisan effort to tighten and enhance this Nation's intelligence infrastructure at a time when all of us are much more conscious of security problems because of recent spy scandals, terrorism, and egregious leaks that have severely hurt the United States. It is also seen as the best means available for repairing the serious deterioration in relations between Congress and the intelligence community with the resultant loss of trust—the most vital ingredient of all in the oversight process.

RELIEF FOR CAROLINA'S COTTON GROWERS

HON. CHARLES ROSE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation for the relief of the Carolinas Cotton Growers Assocation, Inc. This bill has the sponsorship of the entire North and South Carolina delegations. Before explaining the history behind this legislation, I would first like to emphasize that the legislation does not make any determination as to the issues of liability or damages. This bill merely provides the association with the opportunity for a day in court, an opportunity which it has been denied up to his point.

The association is a marketing cooperative for the cotton farmers located in North and South Carolina. The association performs its function by purchasing cotton directly for farmers at a price slightly less than the price being quoted on the New York Cotton Exchange for cotton of a like grade and subsequently selling that cotton at or slightly above the market price established by the Cotton Exchange for that grade of cotton. For decades the grade of cotton purchased has been determined by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

During October 1980, the association purchased cotton based on the USDA classification and, relying on the USDA class cards, began to sell the cotton to various mills. During the winter of 1980–81 when numerous bales of cotton were rejected by mills as overgraded, the association discovered that USDA had in most cases significantly overgraded the 1980 crop purchased by the association. Soon the association realized that it could no longer use the class cards to sell its cotton inventory. Furthermore, the association was unable to market its inventory as quickly as usual because it was faced with the time-consuming task of reclassifying the cotton. As a result the association alleges that it sustained losses of nearly $4 million, which included losses on sales, additional interest and storage costs for inventory not sold, lost gross profits and other consequential damages. The magnitude of the loss has imperiled the association's financial viability. The loss of the association would be an enormous blow to the cotton farmers of North and South Carolina.

Since the losses of the association were alleged to be caused by the negligence of the USDA, the association filed suit under the Federal Tort Claims Act against the Government for its damages. The district court dismissed the action on jurisdictional grounds and on appeal the fourth circuit affirmed the district court's decision. The circuit court determined that the association's tort claim arose wholly out of reliance on the Governments' misrepresentation of the proper grade and was therefore precluded by section 2680(h) of the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C.A. 2680(h), which exempts tort claims against the Government for misrepresentation.

Had the association's claim been characterized by the courts as, for example, one of negligence on the part of the USDA, the association would have been allowed to bring its claim. (Claims have been allowed by courts against the USDA in similar circumstances for damages sustained from negligent inspection of rural housing under the Farmers Home Administration programs and meat under the Meat Inspection Program). Furthermore, had the grading been carried out by a nongovernment organization, the association would certainly have been allowed to bring its claim. Therefore, without legislative relief the association cannot prosecute a claim against the Government for its alleged losses caused by the USDA action. Again, I wish to emphasize that this legislation does not either concede liability on the part of the USDA or establish the amount of damages at issue. Rather, the legislation merely confers special jurisdiction on the U.S. Claims Court to award such damages as that court may find resulted form the misgrading. In short, the bill merely gives the Carolinas Cotton Growers Association its day in court.

SALUTE TO LIBERTY

HON. JOHN P. HAMMERSCHMIDT

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, the newly renovated Statue of Liberty will be the recipient of much attention this July 4th, but it is the hopes and dreams of the citizens of the United States and the world that have made her what she is.

Today, I would like to share a poem which was written by one of my constituents, Daphne Hamilton, an American History student at Woodland Junior High School in Fayetteville, AR. It is heartening to know that young people, like Daphne, understand the convictions and realities that are behind one of this country's greatest principal's.

Mr. Speaker, Daphne's salute to Liberty follows:

OUR STATUE: TEACHER OF LIBERTY

They came in sailing ships and liners,
Yearning to breathe free.
Leaving behind their homes and countries,
Searching for Liberty.
Some were tired, poor, and homeless;
Some were young and brave and strong.
Some were laughing as they saw the shore;
Some broke out in tears or song.
They waved and pointed at Our Statue,
As they sailed across the bay.
and here and there a family,
Fell upon their knees to pray.
Some called it the "promised land",
And expected streets of gold.
Some were lost. Many frightened,
Pretending to be bold.
Then they saw Miss Liberty,
And smiled at one another.
They reached out to clasp a hand.
They called each other "Brother".
My great grandfather was one of them,
And my grandma and some cousins,
Aunts and uncles followed them,
Coming over by the dozens.
They made me a little jealous.
Saying, "Our Statue of Liberty".
See, I was born and raised here,
And thought she belonged to me.
That's why I'd like to be a part,
Of the unveiling in July.
And mix with all the others,
See them shout and laugh and cry.
And brag about the nickels,
And the dimes and every penny,
We sent in to renovate.
Oh my, it took so many.
I'd like to see her where she's standing,
Proud and shining in the bay,
Carrying the torch of Liberty,
Still lighting Pilgrims on their way.

CASA GRANDE HIGH SCHOOL NATIONAL RESOURCES PROGRAM

HON. DOUGLAS H. BOSCO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Speaker, I submit for inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following remarks made by a group of concerned young people from Casa Grande High School in my congressional district. I would also like to take this opportunity to commend the faculty of Casa Grande and the many fine students that have invested their time and energy in this very innovative Natural Resource Program.

CASA GRANDE HIGH SCHOOL NATURAL RESOURCE PROGRAM

"We the students enrolled in the Natural Resources program at Casa Grande High School, 333 Casa Grande Road, Petaluma, California, 94952, on this day June 10, 1986 would like to formally voice our concerns for the protection and conservation of our Natural Resources in America.

We feel that America's homeland is being tragically ignored and continuing problems such as lack of real concern for America's endangered species, toxic waste disposal, air and water pollution, the declining importance placed on habitat loss for fisheries and wildlife plus reforestation programs. All these important issues should be heard loud and clear in Washington D.C. for it is our belief that our generation and others following will soon be denied the precious resources that has made our America the greatest country in the world."

Signed by 79 Casa Grande High School students.

SUITABLE DRUG TESTING REQUIRES SUITABLE INFORMATION

HON. E. CLAY SHAW, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to respond to the release of a study by the Civil Service Subcommittee of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee. I comment the chairwoman of the subcommittee for her efforts to further investigate the controversy over drug testing. I am particularly pleased that she endorses the concept of substance abuse testing to "help employees overcome drug dependency." I am also pleased at the conclusion of the study which states that "random testing is the one method which can effectively scare employees away from using drugs."

The subcommittee report is an improvement in the sensationalized atmosphere which has surrounded political reaction to the concept of drug testing. None of us doubts the epidemic proportions and associated tragedies of illegal narcotics usage. When the President's Commission on Organized Crime released its report recommending "suitable drug testing" last February, there was a great hue and cry about massive civil liberties violations and the potential demoralization of our Federal work force. Those who heightened the controversy treated the idea as if it were a bold new concept—untested in the American workplace.

We came to realize however, that drug testing is not new either to the private sector where 25 percent of the Fotune 500 companies do such testing, or the Federal Government where over 10 agencies or divisions have such programs. Even the New York Times uses such tests as a screen for new employees. The real controversy about drug testing arises if you view them in isolation. My support for drug testing is conditioned upon it being a component of a comprehensive strategy for conducting the war on drugs. Supply side interdiction and drug education programs are equally important in our efforts to come to terms with the Federal role in this area.

Unfortunately, the subcommittee's report fails to understand the context in which the recommendation for "suitable drug testing" was offered, and you cannot fairly evaluate the merits of a proposal if you lack suitable information about its context. The President's Commission recommended these tests precisely because they represented a new strategy to place more resources on the demand side of the drug equation. The solid and ever-increasing efforts of law enforcement to stem the supply of illegal narcotics have simply not done the job. Absent a determined effort to reduce demand for drugs, these efforts are doomed to failure. The subcommittee report reaches exactly the opposite conclusion:

Even if every government worker who used drugs stopped, it would not make a dent in the flow of drugs coming into this country.

The approach to drug abuse which says let's not inconvenience anybody or let's limit our efforts to helping people once they have a problem simply will not suffice. It won't effectively combat the side effects of the $50 billion drug trafficking generates for organized crime each and every year. It won't prevent or deter the lost productivity and accidents that occur in the workplace from recreational drug use off the job. And let us not fool ourselves and others into believing that an employee's off-the-job drug use won't affect his job performance the next day. In just one of our States during 1984, economic losses attributed to substance abuse were estimated to total $6.4 billion.

As to the practical side of the controversy, it is alleged that the tests are costly and inaccurate. The truth is that the tests are imperfect but also that the testing industry and all potential employers should recognize how to deal with such a problem. The answer is simple. Never treat a positive result as an absolute. Verify any positive test and as my colleague has suggested use the information to help people not to hurt them. The press release accompanying the report suggests "the tests could run $100 per employee." I had my drug testing bill, H.R. 4636, evaluated by the Congressional Budget Office. They determined the average cost to be in the neighborhood of $15. It would be $45 if a secondary verification were needed because of a positive result. The cost to screen all new employees and randomly test one-third of the Federal employees with security clearances in any 1 year would be $41 million. Put that estimate in the context of multibillion-dollar annual losses due to drug use and you have the beginnings of a cost-effective strategy.

Drug testing is not a panacea. By itself, it cannot solve the drug problem. It will increase the effectiveness of our efforts to come to grips with the drug disaster. It is a positive step that leads by example. The willingness to submit to these procedures is not much different than the willingness to submit to a detailed physical examination. It seems to me that Federal employees are a concerned and positive force. Most of the ones that I encounter have a committment to public service. A suitable drug testing program carefully evaluated in the light of suitable information about its purposes and consequences is just another sign of professional commitment. I have made that commitment. It is a simple commitment. It does not play with words or base its priorities on minor inconveniences. Such a commitment says that all illegal drug use is intolerable and that demonstrating that you and those around you are drug free is a matter of pride and achievement.

SUPPORT TENANT MANAGEMENT OF PUBLIC HOUSING UNITS

HON. CARDISS COLLINS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, during debate on H.R. 1, the Housing Act, my good friend and colleague, Congressman FAUNTROY, offered an amendment that established a pilot program for resident management and maintenance of public housing projects. His amendment, which I voted for, is intended to encourage the management of public housing units by residents. This expression of support for "self-rule" comes at a time when tenants in housing projects are reeling from the lack of proper upkeep and maintenance in their buildings, and victimized by the lack of adequate security.

I must point out to my colleagues that the issue of self-rule is receiving tremendous support in the city of Chicago. The mayor, public officials, and residents of public housing units both in and around my district are behind this concept 100 percent. The residents of LeClaire Court, a public housing complex located in Chicago, has been given the go-ahead by the local housing authority to manage its units. Tenants have organized a core of residents from their 660-unit complex to manage the development themselves. Truly, this is an historic event for the residents of this southside housing project. They are to be applauded for taking the initiative!

Although this concept is new to the Chicago area, the successful management of housing projects by tenants has occurred in Boston, St. Louis, Washington, DC, New Orleans, and Louisville.

Since 1973, I have consistently fought to protect the vital interests of people affected by the full range of housing issues. To that end, I have vigorously supported all efforts aimed at maintaining a decent standard of living for all, by preserving existing housing units, and ensuring that the fair housing laws maintain their effectiveness. I have also taken the lead in promoting those issues of special interest to the people in Chicago by protecting residents of multifamily structures being converted to condo units, and by requiring HUD to provide for emergency repairs in low-income housing projects. In keeping with my efforts on this front, I urge my colleagues to support the goal of this amendment.

For the information of my colleagues, I have taken the liberty of attaching copies of editorials in support of "self-rule" which appeared recently in the Chicago Tribune and the Chicago Defender.

[From the Chicago Tribune, May 28, 1986]

LET RESIDENTS RUN PUBLIC HOUSING

Chicago Housing Authority officials have announced plans to give residents of the low-rise LeClaire Courts public housing project a chance to manage their apartment buildings. The happy results of similar experiments in other cities show the chances are good that the LeClaire residents will do a better job than the CHA, but only if they are given a real chance.

Details of how the LeClaire Court program will work have yet to be spelled out. But if the program is going to prove itself, CHA officials should grant the managerial responsibilities to its tenants. Relinquishing power over hundreds of thousands of dollars in work orders and contractors can be the most difficult step for public housing officials to make. But experience shows that tenant management does not get a fair chance until day-to-day operating decisions are turned over to the people who have to live with the results.

Residents of one St. Louis development saved their low- and medium-rise buildings from planned demolition. Tenants of a large Boston development brought theirs back from bankruptcy. Similar stories resulted from tenant management turnovers in Washington, D.C., New Orleans and Louisville.

Once their own leadership and energies were channeled into managerial responsibilities, the tenants did a more thorough job of screening prospective tenants and enforcing rules than the housing authorities. They also improved security, repopulated abandoned apartments, made architectural improvements and beautified the grounds.

LeClaire residents have spent the last three years organizing, researching and training themselves for this opportunity. They have earned a chance to prove themselves and to raise the hopes of public housing residents everywhere.

[From the Chicago Defender, June 2, 1986]

SELF-RULE IS GOOD FOR LECLAIRE RESIDENTS

Self-rule. It's a magic phrase for responsible, mature people. It means a level of independence that allows individuals to set their own rhythm and pace of life. And thanks to an understanding between the Chicago Housing Authority Board and the residents of Leclaire Courts, self-rule has been granted to the subsidized housing project.

This is a very important move since such an experiment is happening in only 12 areas around the nation. It shows that Chicago can be a leader in innovative approaches to solving special social problems. The city is also making a positive statement about its opinion of the people who live in the 615-unit townhouse complex of LeClaire Courts.

This effort has not come easily and will not be carried out without problems. But we, like city and CHA leaders, feel that the residents of the Courts can do the job well. Their leaders have the qualities necessary to spearhead such a bold venture. Experience shows that.

For example, the LeClaire people worked diligently for two years to get the chance to manage their own housing complex. Their efforts culminated in a decision for self-management and a $1 million capital improvement fund. Such results took commitment, endurance, patience, fine negotiation abilities and a myraid of other positive attributes.

The way they conducted themselves surely had a lot to do with the final OK being given. In fact, from the reported goings-on at the meeting in which the self-management status was formally conveyed, it was apparent that the residents had impressed a number of people of stature.

Mayor Washington hit the nail on the head when he said, "We are very proud of what you are doing," in exercising "that most sacred privilege in a democratic society, the right of self-determination . . . You'll make your whole neighborhood proud of you."

In the process of making others proud of their accomplishments, the residents will undoubtably be faced with many types of problems. That happens when an organization has the right to hire, fire, schedule repairs and collect rent. But the people of Leclaire won't be alone. The city will help them with sewer problems and the leaders will get at least three months of training from the National Center for Neighborhood Enterprise, a self-help organization based in Washington, D.C. Such support is very necessary.

The move is also a fine way to permit residents to make repairs which many claimed were taking too long to complete prior to the institution of self-rule. Now they don't have to go to the CHA. They can go directly to the carpenter, plumber, or other repairperson and get the job done to the tenants' satisfaction.

We wish the individuals of LeClaire Courts the very best of fortune and trust that they will prove to be excellent in their new responsibilities.

COMMEMORATING THE 45TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE RESTORATION OF UKRAINE'S INDEPENDENCE

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, on June 30, 1941—some 45 years ago—Ukrainian underground forces in the city of L'VOV broadcast over radio the declaration of restoration of independence and the establishment of a Ukrainian free state.

This radio broadcast from the West Ukrainian capital signaled the restoration of Ukraine's independence for the first time since 1921. But, again Ukraine's independence was to be tragically short lived and costly.

Over the course of the next 4 years, the Ukrainian underground led by the Organization of Ukrainian Nationalists [OUN] and the Ukrainian Insurgent Army [UPA], conducted a campaign of civil disobedience, sabotage, reprisal and resistance warfare.

In 2 years time, the German military occupation of the Ukraine was disintegrating. In its place, the Soviet Union attempted to reestablish its authority over the Ukraine. But, the struggle against external control over the affairs of the Ukrainian people continued in this instance, as it had in every other instance. Military resistance continued into the 1950's and a fierce and tenacious nationalism persists to this day.

We cannot forget those millions of Ukrainians who remain ensnared in the Soviet police state. It is our responsibility to remind our fellow Americans, and the world at large, of Soviet aggression shortly after the first proclamation of Ukrainian independence in 1919; of the Soviet genocide commonly referred to as the famine of 1933–34; of Soviet mass murder committed during the German invasion of the Ukraine in 1941; of Soviet invasion following the declaration of restoration of independence and the defeat of the Germans in the mid-1940's; and of relentless Soviet hegemony since that time.

On the occasion of the 45th anniversary of the restoration of Ukraine's independence, let us take pride in the worthwhile contributions Ukrainian Americans have made in the development of this great Nation.

At the same time, let us be reminded of the injustice and repression that continues to burden the Ukrainian people. Theirs is a struggle to achieve freedom and dignity. Our task is to keep faith with them in the achievement of this worthy goal.

SOUTH AFRICAN DETAINEES

HON. WILLIAM H. GRAY III

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call my colleagues attention to the deplorable arrest and imprisonment practices now prevalent in South Africa. Not only are charges and a trial no longer required, but the South African police no longer even have to account for those whom they have indeed thrown in jail.

It is not difficult to imagine the stress and trauma which these conditions inflict upon those South Africans who have had loved ones disappear with no way of knowing whether they have gone into hiding, are in a South African prison, or have indeed been killed.

The Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, Amnesty International, the World Council of Churches and other monitoring groups express their profound gratitude to those black South Africans who, at enormous personal risk, are getting to the outside world information on the thousands who have been thrown into South Africa's jails—at least 3,000 since the state of emergency was imposed just 2 weeks ago. No charges have been laid, no trial dates have been set, and there is a 10-year sentence or a $8,000 fine awaiting anyone who reveals either names or numbers.

Mr. Speaker, below are the names of a small number of South Africa's voiceless, invisible political prisoners. They cannot even be heard in South Africa, much less this country. Our voices are heard around the world however, and I urge my colleagues to continue to speak out forecefully against apartheid and on their behalf.

H.R. 4060, COLA RESTORATION

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, one of the great strengths of our political system is the fact that Americans have a refined sense of what is fair and equitable. It is this very fact that is so attractive to those who live in political systems that are arbitrary and self-serving. However, we have recently seen an aberration to the American perspective that all people should be treated fairly and equitably. For some unknown reason military, postal and Federal retirees have been singled out to bear the burden of balancing the budget. These retirees who have sacrifice so much to serve their country have been denied a cost-of-living adjustment.

In view of the fact that Social Security and veterans' benefits were protected from cuts, I believe that all Federal retirees should be afforded the same protection against inflation. During a period, when these retirees should be enjoying the fruits of their labors, they are instead confronted with unnecessary financial worries. In H.R. 4060, there exists a vehicle to correct this injustice. This legislation, which I have cosponsored, would guarantee a full cost-of-living adjustment in fiscal year 1987 for retired military, postal and Federal employees.

On June 24, 1986, the Congress reaffirmed the commitment our Government had made to all Federal servants by passing H.R. 4060, thus bringing equality and fairness back to the Federal retirement system. It has always been my belief that these benefits must be protected because of the many sacrifices Federal employees have made to ensure the future and freedom of our country.

I thank my colleagues for their efforts in getting this legislation passed.

THE OPPRESSION OF TRANSYLVANIAN HUNGARIANS AND ROMANIA'S MOST FAVORED NATION STATUS

HON. BERNARD J. DWYER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. DWYER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, for a great many years, a number of my colleagues and I have attempted through various means to share with this House our concerns about the human rights abuses by the present Government of Romania against its national minorities, particularly the 2,500,000 ethnic Hungarians who reside principally in the Transylvania region. We have used "Dear Colleague" letters and concurrent resolutions and, as usual, Members of this body have responded to the pleas.

There is no question about the commitment of Congress to rectifying the suppression of human rights in Romania, particularly of the national minorities. Hungarians resident in Romania comprise the largest national minority in Europe outside of the Soviet Union and are a special concern of mine.

To date, efforts to engage the Romanians in discussion about the status of the Hungarian minority have met with no success. This is ironic, because they have been willing to discuss emigration matters, as well as the situation involving the fundamentalist Protestant denominations.

The Romanian Government argues that any concessions to nationalist minorities would result in the dismemberment of Romania. They maintain that abuses are claimed only by "Hungarian irredentist emigres," who what to return Transylvania to Hungary.

This red herring has been effectively used by the Romanians to prevent full discussions between our representatives and theirs. At one point, the Romanians were actually reported in the New York Times to have "threatened" to withdraw from their MFN status if Congress "interferes" with their sovereign rights toward the minorities.

Consequently, nothing has been accomplished by Secretary of State Shultz' visit in December, nor in the subsequent talks between State Department Counselor Derwinski and Romanian Ambassador Gavrilescu in Washington or Ambassador Kirk and the Romanian Foreign Ministry in Bucharest.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, the administration is requesting the continuation of the Most Favored Nation trade status for Romania for fiscal year 1987. The litany of abuses of human and religious rights in Romania is even more extensive than that of national minorities. One must only remember the bulldozing of Orthodox and Baptist churches, the beating and imprisoning of priests and ministers, and the continued abuse of those desiring to emigrate to the United States and elsewhere. Even without these offenses, however, the abuse of national minorities alone would be sufficient ground for the revocation, or at least the suspension, of their MFN status.

In the last decade, the situation for national minorities has seriously deteriorated. In "Human Rights Violations in Romania," Dr. Z. Michael Szaz relates disappearances, murders disguised as suicides, and the beating and jailing of many Hungarians in Romania. He reports that almost half of the arrests and more than half of the house searches between August 1984 and August 1985 were directed at national minority citizens. He also relates the gradual elimination of all higher education courses in Hungarian and limits placed on such courses in secondary schools.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot in good conscience allow the administration's request for the extension of Romania's MFN status to go by without bringing these abuses to the attention of the Congress. We must have meaningful talks and real concessions, not the least of which would be the end of the brutality against the hungarian minority.

As you know, H.R. 3599, of which I am a cosponsor, would suspend Romania's MFN status for 6 months. That legislation, Mr. Speaker, may be our most reasonable approach to force the Romanian Government to reexamine its policies and its relationship with its own ethnic minorities.

THE CHERNOBYL ACCIDENT STUDY ACT

HON. SAM GEJDENSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced legislation to require the Nuclear Regulatory Commission [NRC] to conduct a comprehensive study of the Chernobyl nuclear accident. Although I remain convinced that American nuclear technology is superior to Soviet nuclear technology, it is clear that there is much that we can learn from the Chernobyl accident. A balanced and rational evaluation of the accident could reveal information that we could use to make U.S. nuclear plants even safer than they are now.

I am very disturbed by the tendency of the nuclear industry and some NRC officials to immediately conclude that the Chernobyl accident has absolutely no relevance to the operation of U.S. nuclear plants. This conclusion is at best premature and at worst dangerously wrong.

Immediately following the accident the nuclear industry embarked on an extensive public relations campaign which asserted that, unlike U.S. reactors, the Chernobyl reactor had no containment structure. After the advertising campaign was over we found out that Chernobyl did in fact have a containment structure consisting of 1 to 2 feet of steel backed by concrete 6 to 8 feet thick.

It is also important to note that even the best containments in the United States are not designed to totally contain the radioactivity from a meltdown. Containments are designed to harbor radioactive steam resulting from a pipe break.

Recently, Victor Stello, the Director of Operations at NRC, said, "We see nothing coming out of this accident to suggest we need to change." I am very troubled by this statement. Instead of rushing to dismiss Chernobyl, NRC should be working hard to evaluate its implications for the United States. I am afraid that without explicit direction from the Congress NRC will fail to address the hard questions raised by Chernobyl.

To that end, I have introduced legislation to direct the NRC to conduct a comprehensive investigation of the implications of the Chernobyl accident for safety at U.S. nuclear powerplants. Included in the bill is a provision for an external review of NRC's conclusions by former NRC Commissioners, to ensure that the investigation is objective. The comments of the reviewers will be printed in the final NRC report on the accident.

I have directed the NRC to pay particular attention to the evacuation issue. NRC regulations only require evacuation planning for a 10-mile zone surrounding each nuclear plant. The fact that the Soviets evacuated an 18-mile area around Chernobyl suggest that 10-miles might not be adequate. I am also concerned that many U.S. reactors use a steam suppression system that is very similar to the one at Chernobyl. The NRC must find out whether or not the Chernobyl accident revealed any serious deficiencies with this system. Chernobyl can also provide us with a great deal of information on what effect the radiation released has had on the population surrounding the plant.

The NRC is required to submit the study of the Chernobyl accident to Congress and the President no later then 1 year after the enactment of the bill. The bill authorizes the NRC to use up to $1.2 million of the funds currently appropriated to it for research purposes to conduct the study. The study will not result in any additional cost to the Government. The NRC currently spends over $100 million per year for regulatory research alone.

Over the years we have become increasingly complacent about the safety of nuclear power. Chernobyl has been a rude awakening. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this legislation so that we can learn all we can from Chernobyl in order to prevent a serious nuclear accident from ever occurring in the United States.

THE IRA EQUITY AND RETENTION ACT

HON. ROBERT E. BADHAM

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a resolution expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that not only should the income tax deduction for individual retirement accounts be retained but the contribution limit for nonworking spouses should be extended to a full $2,000.

In 1981, individual retirement accounts were revised in order to supplement Social Security and to improve individuals' prospects for a secure and prosperous retirement. Because Social Security is not intended, nor is it adequate, to meet all retirement needs, it is essential that the Federal Government continue to encourage the use of the IRA's, as they have proven extremely effective in developing private savings devoted to retirement needs. In fact, over the last 4 years, individual retirement accounts have produced additional, badly needed savings for the Nation's economy by encouraging a rise in individual savings of more than $200 billion. That is $200 billion of savings that might not have been accumulated otherwise.

It is clear that IRA's have served as an effective savings tool for all individuals, especially those in the middle-income bracket. Therefore, it is essential that Congress do all in its power to provide additional incentives to encourage even further savings. It is my belief that the IRA contribution limit for nonworking spouses should be raised to $2,000. This increased contribution limit would encourage increased capital formation and productivity as well as enhance retirement security for couples. Further, a nonworking spouse contributes just as much to the Nation's economy and society as the working spouse. Is it fair to deny the nonworking spouse the same opportunities to provide for equally needed and deserved savings for retirement security?

With the conference on tax reform legislation to begin when we return from the recess, I urge my colleagues to join me now in sponsoring the IRA Equity and Retention Act in order to preserve the IRA and make it fair to all Americans who want to provide for their own financial security in their retirement years.

MILITARY CHAPLAINS FAITH BALANCE ACT

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I call attention today to the bill, H.R. 1875, the Military Chaplains Faith Balance Act, of which I am a cosponsor, to urge their support of this legislation.

In principle, Mr. Speaker, religious freedom is a basic right of all humanity. In practice, however, it is a right which unfortunately continues to be violated in parts of the world. As a member of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Human Rights and the Helsinki Commission, I am well aware of the systematic denial of religious freedom which some authoritarian regimes practice against their citizens. Having had the opportunity to study these violations of a fumdamental human right, I am all the more concerned that we in the United States continue to protect that right to the best of our ability.

Yet in our great Nation which has, above all others, protected the rights and freedoms of its citizens, some may be surprised to learn that there is currently an imbalance in the representation of various religious faiths among chaplains of the Armed Forces as compared to the representation of those faiths among members of the Armed Forces as a whole.

Certainly, this imbalance does not suggest a lack of commitment to the right of individuals to freely practice the religion of their choice. At the same time, I feel that it is an issue which should be addressed.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Congressman BORSKI for introducing his bill, H.R. 1875, directing the Secretary of Defense to increase the representation of underrepresented faiths among Armed Forces chaplains. Once again, I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this meritorious piece of legislation.

AN ARTISTIC DISCOVERY: CHRISTOPHER WEBB

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to present to my colleagues Mr. Christopher Webb, the winner of the Artistic Discovery competition in the 21st Congressional District of Ohio. His outstanding entry, entitled "Robin," demonstrates superior artistic talent for a person of such tender years.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to have Christopher represent my home district in the Artistic Discovery competition and ask that the following article detailing the accomplishments of this young man be inserted in the RECORD.

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer, June 15, 1986]

SENIOR'S WINNING PORTRAIT OPENS DOORS FOR HIS FUTURE

(By Timothy Puin)

Christopher Webb may one day think of "Robin" as the turning point in his career. The John Marshall High School senior has won the Artistic Discovery competition in the 21st Congressional District for "Robin," his pastel portrait of a teen-age girl.

His work bested 52 other entries from six high schools, and Webb said the achievement confirmed his desire to be an artist.

"I'm starting to see myself as having a better chance at doing something, now that I'm getting this attention," he said. "I like the attention, and I want to get more."

"Robin" has assured Webb plenty of exposure. Last week, "Robin" and other outstanding works of 21st District art students were displayed at the Malcolm Brown Gallery in Shaker Heights.

Webb's pastel has been shipped to Washington, D.C., where it will be displayed with other winning entries from across the country. The works will hang for a year in the corridors of the Capitol.

The office of Rep. Louis Stokes, D-21, of Warrensville Heights, is paying Webb's way to Washington, where later this month the student will attend a reception in honor of the winners.

The competition was initiated five years ago, and this is the third year Stokes' office has participated. The 21st District includes Shaker Heights and Heights high schools, as well as other schools with strong art programs. But for the second straight year, a John Marshall student has won.

John Page, chairman of the school's fine arts department, sees the school's success as a product of hard work. "I think that basically we work a little harder at it," he said.

Page said Webb was a hard worker.

"He's industrious," he said. "He wants to work. He has the interest and the ability."

Webb said he had thought about being an artist since seventh grade. "I've always liked to draw, and I've gotten a lot of encouragement from teachers and my family," he said.

He said he transferred from John Adams in the 11th grade, to join John Marshall's commercial arts program.

Page is the only teacher in the program, which takes up four school periods a day for two years. There are 17 participants in the program.

Webb said he planned to attend the Pittsburgh Institute of Art in the fall, because of the school's two-year program and high job placement rate.

"I want to be successful," he said. "I want to do something that people can look up to, especially in my family."

THE GREATER LOS ANGELES WORLD TRADE CENTER AT LONG BEACH DAY

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to all the people who were and still are involved in the development and construction of the Greater Los Angeles World Trade Center at Long Beach. On July 9, 1986, the Greater Los Angeles World Trade Center at Long Beach Day, ceremonies will be held at the future site of the World Trade Center to mark the official groundbreaking.

On a 12.7 acre site in the heart of Long Beach's central business district at the intersection of Ocean Boulevard and the Long Beach Freeway, the Greater Los Angeles World Trade Center at Long Beach, when completed, will contain 2.2 million square feet of commercial space and a major hotel and will have a total value in the vicinity of $500 million. The World Trade Center, however, is not just an office complex. It is designed specifically to encourage and enhance world trade in the Long Beach/Los Angeles port complex area. At present, the companies, organizations, unions and representatives of foreign nations that are involved in the trade at the twin Ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach have their offices scattered throughout southern California, from the seacoast to the mountains. The World Trade Center will call attention to our overseas trade, while providing a focal point for the industries involved in that trade and creating service firms and facilities to serve these industries. Additionally, the design of the World Trade Center has been the product of cooperative work by some of the world's leading architects and designers, and the plan, which involves innovative techniques and the latest in telecommunications technology, is evidence of the quality of the work that went into the design.

As many of my colleagues know, in recent years the shift of our overseas trading patterns has sent more trade to our west coast than our east coast. The Ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach have handled some 60 percent of our west coast trade, and have become the hub of trade with the Pacific Rim and the Pacific gateway to the United States. Arguably the largest port complex in the United States, the Ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach have experienced tremendous growth and expansion in recent years, and the construction of the Greater Los Angeles World Trade Center at Long Beach is yet another symbol of the dedication and devotion that the people in the South Bay Area feel towards accommodating and enhancing the needs of world trade in southern California.

It is with great pride and delight that my wife, Lee, joins me in saluting all the people from the Ports of Long Beach and Los Angeles, from IDM/Kajima, the developer, and all the other people whose contributions of time, energy and hard work have made the groundbreaking of the Greater Los Angeles World Trade Center at Long Beach a reality. We look forward to seeing their hard work come to fruition with the completion of all the various phases of the World Trade Center.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE DEFICIT

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that we have just completed the omnibus trade bill of 1986, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an excerpt from a recent "Dear Abby" column provided to me from my constituent R.J. Riggles of Ventura, CA, regarding the problems with our international trade deficit.

DEAR ABBY. I am sending you an article I clipped from an American Legion magazine. If you print it, our trade balance might improve, which would be a great service for our country. Thank you.

ROY B. in Huntsville, AL.

"ONLY IN AMERICA

"He drove his German car made of Swedish steel and interior of Argentine leather to a gasoline station, where he filled up with Arab oil shipped in a Liberian tanker and bought two French tires, composed of rubber from Sri Lanka.

"At home, he dropped his Moroccan briefcase, hung up his Scottish tweed coat, removed his Italian shoes and Egyptian cotton shirt, then donned a Hong Kong robe and matching slippers from Taiwan.

"More comfortable now, he poured a cup of hot Brazilian coffee into an English coffee mug, set a Mexican place mat on an Irish linen tablecloth atop a Danish table varnished with linseed oil from India. Then he filled his Austrian pipe with Turkish tobacco, lighted it and picked up a Japanese ballpoint pen with which he wrote a letter to his congressman demanding to know why the United States has an unfavorable balance of trade."

IMMIGRATION AND THE AMERICAN DREAM

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, as we approach the Fourth of July and the celebration of the 100th anniversary of one of our greatest symbols, the Statue of Liberty, it is important to remember what the many immigrants who have come to this country represent and what they have contributed to the United States. In this month's Psychology Today, Mario Cuomo, Governor of New York, has written an essay on the meaning of immigration of America which I would like to share with my colleagues.

[The essay follows:]

THE AMERICAN DREAM AND THE POLITICS OF INCLUSION

(By Mario M. Cuomo, Governor of New York)

"Our society must resist those who would close our doors to future immigrants"

With all the high points and low points, expansions and contractions this astounding country of ours has experienced in the last 210 years, one theme in our history has been constant; one thread has tied together more than two centuries of striving: the struggle to include.

For the past 210 years we have taken the unprecedented boast of our Declaration of Independence—the promise of equality, life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness—and struggled to extend it to every American. That challenge and opportunity have always been there, driving events in period after period of our history. It is there in the first lines of the Declaration of Independence—in the idea that governments are created to secure those basic elements of what we now call the American dream for every citizen. This might be called the "politics of inclusion."

It is politics that never divides but unites; that never rejects but embraces; that never stoops to playing one side against another—group against group, state against state, region against region. The politics of inclusion rejoices with those who have earned success but is forever taking up the cause of those who are not yet included—the outsider, the immigrant, the oppressed. It is forever reminding those of us who already possess some share of the American dream that the dream is not yet fulfilled, the promise of our founding fathers not yet complete, until everyone has been included.

What I have discovered is that each individual's effort to fulfill the American dream is essentially the story of millions of Americans, whether they came here by way of Plymouth Rock or Galveston, Ellis Island or the Los Angeles airport. It was, in some ways, my own story too. And that makes me marvel at this amazing place, America, all over again. Like millions of others, I am privileged to be a first-generation American. My mother and father came to this country more than 60 years ago with nothing but their hopes—without education, skills or wealth. The opportunity given them here to lift themselves through hard work enabled them to raise a family. My mother lived to see her youngest child become chief executive of one of the greatest states in the greatest nation in the only world we know.

Like millions of other children of immigrants, I know the strength that immigrants can bring. I know the richness of a society that allows us to enjoy a whole new culture without requiring us to surrender the one into which our parents were born. I know the miraculous power of this place that helps people rise up from poverty to security, and even affluence, in the course of a single lifetime. With generations of other children of immigrants, I know about equality and opportunity and unity, in a special way.

I don't think the view of America from South Jamaica, Queens, the New York City neighborhood where I grew up, was much different from the view available in any of the hundreds of neighborhoods throughout the country where immigrants of every nationality began their pursuit of the American dream. I would guess that in each place there was, and is, the same aching to belong—the sense that we could be a part of its place, if we wanted to work hard enough, and the knowledge that indeed we would have to work very hard because our people weren't born to this place, this land. And I think I know how hard it was and still is, for children going to school where the dominant language was not the language of their home, where the words sounded hard-edged and tight compared to the rolling, rounded rhythms of their father's and mother's tongue—whether that language was Italian, Spanish, Russian or Chinese.

I think I know, because that language sounded so different for me from the world of words of South Jamaica's "Italian blocks," where passion, pride and powerlessness all lived together, and people talked with their hands and hearts.

And I know how, from time to time, all this can be challenged by the misguided, by the shortsighted and the unkind, by contempt that masks itself as humor, by all the casual or conscious bigotry that must keep the American people vigilant. We have heard such voices again recently: Italians are not politically popular, they say. Or Catholics will have a problem. Or more generally, he has an "ethnic problem."

We hear the familiar word "wop" again. "We often-times refer to people of Italian descent as 'wops,'" one public figure recently proclaimed unabashedly. Now, given the unbroken string of opportunity and good fortune provided me by this great country, I might simply have ignored these references. I could easily have let the words pass as inconsequential. But the words took on significance because they were heard far beyond my home or my block or even my state. They were heard by others who remembered times of their own when words stung and menaced them and their people.

Cruel words that wound an entire people raise a question about our fundamental system of American values. Are there really so many who have never heard the sweet sound of reason and fairness? Do so many not understand the beauty and power of this place that they could make of the tint of your skin, the sex you were born to or the vowels of your name an impediment to progress in this land of opportunity?

I don't believe most Americans share in this divisive point of view, so I publicly requested a response to the voice of division. "It is the voice of ignorance," I claimed, "and I challenge you to show me otherwise." In no time at all the answer came back from the American people. As if in unison, people from across the nation responded the same way: "Of course it's wrong to judge a person by the place where his forbears came from. Of course that would violate all that we stand for, fairness and common sense. It shouldn't even have been brought up. It shouldn't even have been a cause for discussion."

I agree. It should not have been. But it was. And the discussion is now concluded, with the answer I was sure of and the answer I am proud of as an American, the answer Abraham Lincoln would have given: You will rise or fall on your merits as a person and the quality of your work. All else is distraction. Lincoln believed, with every fiber of his being, that this place, America, could offer a dream to all people, different from any other in the annals of history. It was a place more generous, more compassionate and more inclusive than any other. No one better understood our sturdiness, the ability of most of us to make it on our own given the chance. But at the same time, no one knew better the idea of family, the idea that unless we helped one another, there were some who would never make it.

One person climbs the ladder of personal ambition, reaches his dream and then turns—and pulls the ladder up. Another reaches the place he has sought, turns and reaches down for the person behind him. It was that process of turning and reaching down, that commitment to keep lifting people up the ladder, that defined the American character, stamping us forever with a mission that reached even beyond our borders to embrace the world.

As individuals, as a people, we are still reaching up, for a better job, a better education, even for the stars. What other people on Earth have ever claimed a quality of character that resided not in a way of speaking, dressing, dancing or praying, but in an idea? What other people on Earth have ever refused to set the definitions of their identity by anything other than that idea?

No, we have not learned quickly or easily that the dream of America endures only so long as we keep faith with the struggle to include. We cannot rest until the promise of equality and opportunity embraces every region, race, religion, nationality and class, until it includes "the penniless beginner" and the "poor man seeking his chance."

We reached out—hesitantly at times, sometimes only after great struggle—but always we reached out, to include impoverished immigrants, the farmers and the factory workers, women, the disabled. To all those whose only assets were their great expectations, America found ways to meet those expectations—and to create new ones. We provided the opportunities for generations of hardworking people to move into the middle class and beyond.

We created a society as open and free as any on Earth. Always, we have extended the promise. We have moved toward our declared purpose as a people: "to form a more perfect union," to overcome all that divides us because we believe the ancient wisdom that Lincoln believed—"A house divided against itself cannot stand."

Step by step, our embrace grows wider, our beliefs stronger. What do we believe? We believe most of all in mutuality; the sharing of benefits and burdens; a recognition that we are—all of us—bound to one another in need and in opportunity. I reject the preaching that we must accept new limitations—that America can no longer afford to include everyone. And I reject the belief that what was possible for the Cuomos and the families of newcomers 10 generations before them is no longer possible now.

I reject the idea that America has used herself up in the effort to help outsiders in, and that now she must sit back exhausted, watching people play the cards fate has dealt them. It would be a desecration of our belief and an act of ingratitude to end the struggle for inclusion because it is over for some of us. We have no right to be content, to close the door to others now that we are safely inside.

We must, instead, continue to live the truth, to go forward, painful step by painful step, enlarging the greatness of this nation with patient confidence in the ultimate justice of the people.

MARY McKINNEY OF SAN FRANCISCO MAY BE THE OLDEST LIVING PERSON

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to salute a remarkable resident of San Francisco whose longevity deserves recognition. Mary "Mamie" McKinney recently celebrated her 113th birthday at a wonderful birthday party I had the privilege of attending. She is the world's oldest documented living person.

Mamie grew up in Oakland and became a dancer in the theater there. She can remember camping out on Twin Peaks for 2 weeks after the Great Earthquake of 1906. At the time she was married to James McKinney, whom she has outlived by more than 40 years. Although she has survived her peers and has no children, her extraordinary vitality and love of life have attracted friends of all ages.

One of the many lessons we can learn from Mamie is that a supportive atmosphere contributes greatly to the well-being of the elderly. Mamie's good health is a tribute not only to modern medical care, but to her environment.

All seniors should be able to enjoy life as Mamie does, but social support and access to quality health care are not always there. Today the elderly comprise the highest number of the poor in this country, yet there is a constant struggle between this administration and the Congress on what our priorities should be.

When Mamie was born, Ulysses S. Grant was President. There was no Social Security or Medicare, and women did not have the right to vote. Mamie has seen this country come a long way during her 113 years, but we clearly have a lot further to go before the quality of Mamie's later years is the norm for our senior citizens rather than the exception.

At her birthday party Mamie said, "I loved to dance. I still love to dance," and I hope she keeps on doing just that. We have benefited from her wisdom and high spirits. I feel privileged to have met her and I look forward to her 114th birthday.

FAIRNESS IN COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENT PROTECTION

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to commend the House of Representatives for the positive stand it has taken to promote fairness and equity in retirement security for our Nation's elderly. With the approval of H.R. 4060, the House has demanded that our Nation provide the same 1987 COLA protection to Federal, military, and railroad retirees as it provides for those retirees covered under the Social Security system.

Perhaps the most important element contributing to retirement security is protection against the erosion of purchasing power provided through indexing retirement benefits. This security, however, has since 1976 been under prolonged legislative attack for those individuals who are covered under the civil service retirement system and other retirement systems, excluding Social Security. Inflation does not discriminate between groups of senior citizens; neither should inflation protection.

The most recent assault on non-Social Security retirement systems was the enactment of Public Law 99–177, otherwise known as the Gramm-Rudman Balanced Budget and Deficit Reduction Act. This measure eliminated the 1986 COLA for Federal, military, and railroad retirees that was scheduled to be paid in January 1986 annuity checks. Moreover, the Gramm-Rudman measure jeopardizes the payment of the COLA for these individuals for the next 5 years as well.

Without COLA protection, the value of the annuity is reduced for the many individuals who have served their Nation in the civil service, the military, and otherwise. Not only does the denial of the COLA's undermine the financial security of these retirees, it endangers the integrity of these retirement systems.

The guarantee of an annual COLA serves the interests of management, labor, and the public by promoting an efficient Government workforce and providing for financial security for workers in their retirement. These earned retirement benefits are among the most important economic assets of older persons in our society. Indeed, for many they constitute the only asset.

For this reason I applaud the House of Representatives for taking action today to remove this inequity. With the passage of H.R. 4060, the House has called for justice and equity to prevail in offering 1987 COLA protection to Federal, military, and railroad retirees in the same manner as Social Security.

TRIBUTE TO RETIRING EDUCATORS OF COVINA UNIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICT

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I am here before my colleagues to give special recognition to the retiring educators of the Covina Unified School District being honored by the Covina Unified Education Association.

The Covina Unified Education Association is the professional organization of Covina educators who work together toward improving the teaching profession. They make the public aware of the problems facing education, and seek solutions through the political process in order to benefit our children, community, and country.

This year, the association honored 11 of their fellow educators. As educators, they have dedicated themselves to enhance the lives of children. These individuals have committed themselves to our children, so our children can become the future educators and leaders of our Nation. They have retired this year, but they leave behind them a very profitable and distinguished legacy.

Lois G. Atherton received her B.S. in zoology/botany from Louisiana State, her M.A. in education administration from Azusa Pacific, and her graduate credits from USC. Lois taught adults for 15 years. Previously, she taught seventh and eighth grade math and science.

Naomi Bartholomew has spent 25 years instructing children of all ages. Naomi attended college in Wheaton, IL, received her B.A. from La Verne University, her M.A. in social science from Azusa Pacific, and was voted "Teacher of the Year" by her students.

Stuart Bates has spent 38 years in various positions at Covina High School. Stuart received his B.S. from Cal Tech, his teaching credentials from the University of Redlands, and his M.S. from the University of Southern California. Stuart has also dedicated his service to our country as a member of the Naval Reserve for 27 years.

June Forrester has been an educator for 27 years. For all of her teaching career, she has taught first-grade children. June received her B.S. from Ohio State University.

Carmen Garcia received her B.A. degree at Helena Herlihy Hall in Mexico City and her M.A. from the University of Mexico. Carmen has instructed the youth of the community for 45 years. She has shown dedication, patience and compassion to her children. She will be missed.

Elizabeth Gracza has dedicated 30 years of her life to education and has done a job worth recognition. Elizabeth received her B.S. at the University of Buffalo and has earned graduate credits from both the University of Buffalo and Claremont.

Lois T. Hartnett has taught for 22 years subjects such as English, drama, and business education. Lois graduated from the University of Idaho. Her college career was highlighted by becoming a Phi Beta Kappa.

Paul Hontz has taught English for 33 years at various schools. Paul received his B.A. at Houghton College in New York and his M.A. from Bucknell University in Pennsylvania.

Jan Overton received her B.A. from Baker University in Kansas, her M.A. in education from Whittier College. She has also taken courses at UCLA, USC, and the California State University at Los Angeles. Jan has spent a total of 39 years in education.

Floyd Roenicke has been an educator for a total of 35 years and he has served in many capacities. Floyd received his B.A. from Whittier College and his M.A. from Cal State Los Angeles.

B. June Yarnell received her B.A. and M.A. from Cal State Los Angeles. June has instructed for a total of 35 years. June is a member of Delta Kappa Gamma and Delta Phi Upsilon.

Mr. Speaker, I rise before you and ask you to join me in giving recognition to these fine individuals who have dedicated so many years to education. These fine people are the epitome of complete dedication and hard work. I ask my colleagues to join me in thanking them for a job well done and wish them the best for the future.

SECRETARY BENNETT COMMENTS ON CITIZENSHIP EDUCATION

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend to my colleagues the remarks made by William Bennett, Secretary of Education, on the important subject of citizenship education. He praises the National Education Association for this endeavor in this area of education, and I found his remarks exceptional:

[From Education Policy Insights, April 1986]

CITIZENSHIP EDUCATION: A GIFT FROM THE NEA

(By William Bennett, Secretary of Education)

I would like to praise the NEA for one of the most ambitious publications it has produced to date. It is a document worth noting for its general theme, as well as for many of its particulars.

It is worth noting for its general theme because it presents us with a vision of a significant dimension of life which we hear a lot about in our schools, but about which we often lack a view steady and whole. That dimension is citizenship.

In recent months, I have spoken much about the importance of nurturing citizenship in our young people. I have said that it is important that our young people develop an appreciation of their country, that they recognize why this nation is unique, and why it is worth defending. I have said that citizenship education is a necessary function of our schools, necessary for our children and necessary for our country.

In many quarters what I have said about citizenship education has been well received. I cannot claim that it is an original idea. It is, in fact, among the goals that one of our greatest presidents identified as fundamental to education. Thomas Jefferson, in his Rockfish Gap report, said that, among other things, education must inform students of their "rights, interests, and duties as men and citizens."

EDUCATING SCHOOL CHILDREN TO BE RESPONSIBLE CITIZENS

Despite this considerable precedent, however, there are some who question the notion of citizenship education. Some contend that education in citizenship amounts to little more than indoctrination. Others charge that citizenship education could not be effected without offending one or another of the various groups in our population.

But in the book I have in mind, the NEA has shown us otherwise. It is written for American schoolchildren in the explicit task of educating them to be responsible citizens, responsible members of American democracy. It accomplishes the task with remarkable balance and clarity. It does not brainwash, distort, or offend: it simply tells the truth.

I think it is particularly timely today to talk about this in light of the current dissatisfaction with some textbooks and other materials that deal with the topic of civics and citizenship. There are some things that do not recommend themselves to children's education, but occasionally we find things that do.

Here is a text that does. And just as some deserve criticism, this one deserves praise.

ITS SHARP SENSE OF AMERICAN FREEDOMS

The document I am referring to is called The American Citizens Handbook. It was first published by the National Education Association in 1941, and continued to be printed through 1968. I have the 1941 edition here with me today. This edition is particularly impressive since the circumstances of the war in Europe seems to have made especially sharp its sense of the importance of our American freedoms. Today, forty-five years later, this book retains remarkable strength and relevance.

The Handbook is divided into ten parts; they are as follows:

I. Your Citizenship in the Making;
II. Patriotic Selections, Poetry, and Song;
III. Heroes of American Democracy;
IV. The Flag of the United States;
V. Charters of American Democracy;
VI. Patriotic Pilgrimages and Shrines;
VII. What Everyone Should Know About Law;
VIII. The American Citizens Reading;
IX. Facts for Every Citizen; and

X. Citizenship Recognition Day.

THE DETAILS, THE WELFARE OF THE NATION

Now, within these chapters there is an enumeration and elucidation of many of the details of good citizenship. First, there is a firm reminder of the fundamental importance of citizenship education to the welfare of the nation. It appears on page 36 in an essay written by a former college president. He writes:

"We have a military preparedness challenge to face on a national front. We hope and expect that this is being given proper attention. This is the responsibility of professionals in another field. Shall we (educators), in our own professional bailiwick, do our job in the field of intellectual and moral preparedness so that this democracy shall have unity, a national goal, and a loyal citizenship which believes that law, equality, and justice are worth any necessary sacrifice?"

This is a strong statement of purpose. And the Handbook is no less sure of itself in answering questions of method. How are we to do our job in the field of intellectual and moral preparedness so that our students will know that the democracy they inherit is worth any necessary sacrifice? What kinds of things should we tell them? What principles should we urge them to cherish and what traditions should we teach them to respect? Allow me to outline for a few minutes the answers offered by the NEA in The American Citizens Handbook.

AMERICA FIRST

First of all, what should we be aiming for? What do we mean by good citizenship? Here we find a simple, eloquent explanation by a former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, in a section entitled, "What The Flag Means." He writes:

"It means America first; it means an undivided allegiance. . . . It means that you cannot be saved by the valor and devotion of your ancestors; that to each generation comes its patriotic duty; and that upon your willingness to sacrifice and endure as those before you have sacrificed and endured rests the national hope.

"It speaks of equal rights; of the inspiration of free institutions exemplified and vindicated; of liberty under law intelligently conceived and impartially administered. There is not a thread in it but scorns self-indulgence, weakness, and rapacity. It is eloquent of our common destiny."

That, I think, is a lesson of citizenship every American student should learn today, and one that we should not be afraid to teach.

THE GREAT DOCUMENTS

Now for a more specific question. What should students study in American history? In recent years this has been an issue of confusion and controversy in our schools. But here, in Part Five, "Charters of American Democracy," are the texts of certain documents: The Magna Charta, the Mayflower Compact, the Declaration of Independence, Washington's Farewell Address, the Gettysburg Address, Lincoln's Second Inaugural Address, the Constitution of the United States. Here is what the American Citizens Handbook says about the Constitution: "Every American should know its content. It is the greatest single document in the entire struggle of mankind for orderly self-government."

ROOTED IN RELIGIOUS BELIEF

Our Constitution and our democracy, did not emerge ex-nihilo. This too the NEA's The American Citizens Handbook understands, and teaches. Here is what it says in a section entitled "Religious Ideals, the Foundation":

"The American concept of democracy in government had its roots in religious belief. This ideal of brotherhood of man roots down into the fundamentals of religion. The teachings of the Hebrew Prophets and of Jesus Christ inculcate the idea of brotherhood. The growth of the idea gave us the concept of democracy in government. It ennobled home life. It emphasized the sacredness of human personality."

And The American Citizens Handbook contains the texts of a few documents indispensable to an understanding of the Judeo-Christian tradition. They include the Golden Rule, the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and 1 Corinthians 13. If I have sometimes sparked controversy by suggesting that the Judeo-Christian tradition is part of every American citizen's heritage, then I am pleased to say that I have the NEA—at least the NEA of The American Citizens Handbook—on my side.

I have often said that when it comes to teaching citizenship, we cannot afford to teach cultural relativism. We cannot afford to act as though all forms of government and all political traditions are equal. They are not.

POETRY AND SONG

How do we engage in the teaching of patriotism? How do we foster in our students a love for their own country? There are some answers in Part Two, "Patriotic Selections, Poetry, and Song." In addition to poems and songs, there is the "American's Creed." Let me read it to you:

"I believe in the United States of America as government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign nation of many sovereign states; a perfect union, one and inseparable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice, and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

"I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its Constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies."

TRUTH AGAINST INDOCTRINATION

Is material like this a means of indoctrination? No, there is a difference between indoctrinating and fostering love of country. That difference will always be clear as long as we simply give our students the truth about America—the truth about its achievements as well as its faults. How should we approach those truths? The Handbook sets the appropriate tone. Let me read to you from an essay written by a former Executive Secretary of the NEA:

"I thank God I'm an American. All may not be right with America. There is still with us some of the social injustice and inequality to the removal of which we dedicated ourselves as a young nation. But the fundamental human rights which are the essence of Americanism are still held sacred by our people and by our responsible leaders. We have all and much more than the Pilgrim fathers expected to secure for their posterity in the New World."

And just as our schoolchildren should know the whole truth about their own country, they should know that there are systems of government that cannot be morally sanctioned. Let me read again from the same essay:

"I am glad to have these rights guaranteed to me in the most sacred instrument of our government—the fundamental law of the land—so they cannot be taken from me by pretext or annulled at the will of some dictator. I count it one of the greatest of blessings that I can exercise these rights without fear of secret police, concentration camps, or exile from my country."

If we give our students the whole truth about our own record and the records of others, I believe they will never be embarrassed to stand up for our less than perfect America. And they will not be hesitant to address these imperfections that do remain.

COMMON SENSE, BASIC VALUES

What about the question of teaching values? How shall we talk about values? In this book is a statement of values which merits our attention. It manages to do easily and comfortably what many claim is an unmanageable task: it manages to come up with a consensus of values that is central to the American experience, that is not peculiar to one group or religion or another. Here in Part One is a set of moral precepts entitled "The Code of the Good American." Let me read parts of it to you.

I will control my tongue, and will not allow it to speak mean, vulgar, or profane words.

I will control my thoughts.

I will control my actions.

I will gladly listen to the advice of older and wiser people; I will reverence the wishes of those who love and care for me, and who know life and me better than I. I will develop independence and wisdom to think for myself.

I will try to find out what my duty is as a good American, and my duty I will do, whether it is easy or hard.

I will be honest, in word and in act. I will not lie, sneak, or pretend.

I will be loyal to my family. I will be loyal to my school. I will be loyal to my town, my state, my country.

There is nothing difficult about arriving at the basic values we must teach our children if they are to be good citizens, good students, good parents, good workers, and good neighbors. The American people know this. It is ingrained in their own common sense, and that common sense is manifested here in this Handbook.

SOUND TEACHERS

There are other manifestations of common sense here that speak to questions being asked about our schools. The question of teachers, for example. How are we going to ensure an adequate supply of teachers in the coming years? How are we going to ensure that they are the right kind of people for the job—people who know the subject matter, are sound of character, and who are interested in teaching the young? And how should we foster the honor and respect the profession deserves? One way would be to ask our students to read a selection in this book entitled, "The Future Teachers of America Pledge." Here's the pledge, from this NEA book, with the NEA's blessing:

Physical vitality.—I will try to keep my body well and strong.

Mental vigor.—I will study daily to keep my mind active and alert.

Moral discrimination.—I will seek to know the right and to live by it.

Wholesome personality.—I will cultivate in myself goodwill, friendliness, poise, upright bearing, and careful speech.

Helpfulness.—I will learn the art of helping others by doing helpful things daily in school and home.

Knowledge.—I will fill my mind with worthy thoughts by observing the beautiful world around me, by reading the best books, and by association with the best companions.

Leadership.—I will make my influence count on the side of right, avoiding habits that weaken and destroy.

These things will I do now that I may be worthy of the high office of teacher.

FAITH IN GOOD CHARACTER AND CITIZENSHIP

With respect to a host of important questions relating to citizenship, the NEA's American Citizens Handbook speaks with the kind of directness and wholeness of purpose that one often looks for in vain in many of today's textbooks and collections of materials. It speaks with a sense of confidence in purpose that contemporary educators are often unable to find. The handbook was written nearly half a century ago, and last published the year that today's high school seniors were born; but it contains lessons that our students need as much now as they did then.

Neither the 1941 edition nor the 1968 edition is a perfect book. There are selections in those books that ought to be done without, and others that might be added. And, of course, they are missing some important events. They are also missing some great documents. To the 1941 edition we would add Martin Luther King's, "I Have a Dream" speech, and to the 1968 edition his, "Letter from Birmingham Jail." For the student of 1986, this book would need to be revised, supplemented, and updated.

Nonetheless, The American Citizens Handbook is still remarkably fresh in its faith in good character and citizenship. Its riches are still unarguably relevant to issues facing the moden educator. What do we mean by good citizenship? What do we mean by values? What texts should our students be reading? I believe that many of the answers are here. If today we find that we need guidance about the principles of American democracy and citizenship, we can go back and look to this book to find them.

REVISE AND RE-ISSUE

Let me, therefore, make a proposal: Why doesn't the NEA reprint The American Citizens Handbook? They could reissue the book, or revise it or publish excerpts. And if the NEA is not interested, perhaps they would give permission to another organization to revise and reprint the volume. There are many private groups, I think, that would be happy to work independently or together with the NEA on this project. And we at the Department of Education would be happy to lend a hand. For the Handbook's enduring faith in American principles can offer guidance to students, teachers, principals, parents, and all citizens. This book does not belong on forgotten library shelves, and we would like to help make it available once again to the American people.

Some will say that the things in this book are not what we all believe now, that America is now a more complicated place. And they will imply, if not in their words then by their actions, that we can no longer expect to reach a strong consensus on the materials and methods we should use to prepare our students for citizenship.

Have we changed so much in the last half of the twentieth century? I think our changes have been, for the most part, changes for the better. Amidst those changes, however, we must be careful not to lose sight of the permanent qualities that have helped us come so far, the things that are honest, pure, just, and true. It is for the task of thinking on these things that we at the Department of Education would like Americans to have another look at NEA's American Citizens Handbook.

"CRACK"—EPIDEMIC IN NEED OF A CURE

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 1986

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill today that would impose harsh new penalties against drug dealers trafficking crack, a cocaine-based drug that is wreaking havoc on our Nation.

Newsweek ran a cover story earlier this month on crack. In it, they observed that crack is "creating enormous profits for drug traffickers, spawning crime and destroying thousands of lives—and it may yet surpass heroin in its capacity for social havoc."

Crack is made by heating cocaine with baking soda and water, and then allowing the paste to harden. Pieces are cut and sold as crack. This relatively new drug—it has only been available for about the last year—gives users an intense 5- to 20-minute high, and a person can become addicted to the drug after using it only a few times. In fact, crack is one of the most addictive drugs known to man. Law enforcement authorities report that crack use has spread to 17 major cities and 25 States. A single dose sells for as little as $10–$15.

Crack has been associated with lung damage, seizures, strokes, heart attacks, and death. It is also credited with one other side effect—crimes of violence. The New York Post reported the story yesterday with a headline that read, "Crack Plague Triggers Sharp Rise in Crime." The article went on to state that murder rose 16.9 percent from the first quarter of last year to the same period this year; robbery was up 19.3 percent; and assault was up 10 percent. Significantly, these figures come after an overall 4-year drop in New York City crime. Top New York police officials are quoted in the article as saying that the sudden jump in New York City crime is "due to the use of crack."

What are we doing about this crisis? Tragically, very little. Consider that under current law, a person must possess the equivalent of 15,000 doses of crack before they are subject to maximum Federal drug trafficking penalties. Suffice it to say that we won't have to worry about overcrowding in our jails as a result of that particular law. No, the crack dealer can do plenty of damage with far less than 15,000 doses of crack (the rough equivalent of 1 kilogram of the drug).

My bill recognizes this fact and would trigger maximum penalties for dealing in just a 15-dose amount of crack (1 gram), enough to get about five people addicted to the drug for life. These penalties would be 20 years in prison, or a $250,000 fine, or both, for a first time crack dealer; and double the penalty for repeat offenders.

My bill would also provide tough, enhanced penalties for crack traffickers who conduct business near schools, and who hire young people to do their dirty work—a common practice in the crack trade. It would also establish a maximum penalty of up to life imprisonment if a person distributes crack and it results in death.

Mr. Speaker, the simple fact is that our Nation's drug laws were not written with the crack crisis in mind—a crisis that has resulted from a very small amount of drugs being able to inflict devastating damage. My bill seek to modify those laws to ensure that the crack dealer is treated to swift and severe punishment—a punishment that fits the crime. Anything less will certainly ensure that the nightmare that crack has already become will be allowed to run its course, and the consequences will be catastrophic.

Acting with these facts, in mind, Mr. Speaker, I would invite my colleagues to join me as cosponsors of this legislation, and I would strongly urge that my bill receive the prompt and favorable consideration that it deserves.

At this time, I would like to insert the New York Post article, headlined, "Crack Plague Triggers Sharp Rise in Crime," as well as a full next of my bill:

CRACK PLAGUE TRIGGERS SHARP RISE IN CRIME

(By Anne E. Murray)

Crime in New York City rose dramatically the first quarter of this year and police official say the spread of crack is to blame for much of the increase.

The jump is "in large part due to the use of crack," said Deputy Chief James Trainor, head of the Office of Management Analysis and Planning in the Police Dept.

Statistics released yesterday show that murder is up 16.9 percent this year compared with the first three months of 1985, from 319 cases to 373.

Robberies showed the biggest jump of all—up 19.2 percent—going from 17,348 case to 20,701.

"If you conclude that drug usage leads to crime, then more drugs equal more crime," said Trainor, adding the increase "is giving us a great deal of concern."

The number can be deceiving since the 601,467 serious crimes reported in 1985 was 17.5 percent lower than the peak year of 1981, when 725,866 serious crimes were reported.

Total crime in the city up to 1985 was in a decline for four years, but is slowly rising, following a nationwide trend, Trainor said.

Trainor said he believes a "healthy percentage" of the murder increase now is due to crack-related feuds between drug dealers though numbers are unavailable.

"What's happening out there is a lot of turf fights . . . cheating" over crack, the new smokeable form of cocaine, Trainor said.

As for robberies the chief said arrests of those over 21 for robbery since January have jumped 45 percent, and said it's "definitely related to crack."

To combat the crack plague, the Police Dept. has formed the 101 crack squad and beefed up the Street Crime Unit 32 percent. It is also reassigning foot patrols and rookies.

In order to more closely track crack crime, the department has ordered all cops to note every crack arrests citywide on their reports.

The information will be fed into a computer, which will allow the crime analysis unit to do the first statistical surveys of the crack epidemic.

The figures show a total increase in all crimes tracked of 8.4 percent, or 11,415 more crimes reported than last year's 135,508 in the first quarter.

In other categories, rape was the only decline, down 12.8 percent, which police officials could not explain, although they noted it is not a drug-related crime.

Assaults climbed 10 percent and car thefts 5.1 percent. Burglaries, up 4.5 percent, and larcenies, up 8.2 percent, could also be crack-related, Trainor said.

In order to reduce crack crime, enforcement is "only part of the answer," the chief said.

"You have to reach for the young kids," before they're addicted, he said. "The only way to turn this thing around is through education."

H.R. 5103

A bill to amend the Controlled Substances Act and the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act to provide more effective criminal penalties for violations involving cocaine, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENT INCREASING CRIMINAL PENALTIES RELATING TO BASE FORMS OF COCAINE.

(a) CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES ACT AMENDMENT.—Section 401(b)(1)(A) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 841(b)(1)(A)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i), by striking out "other than a narcotic drug" and all that follows through "identical thereto;" and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(2) by striking out clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(ii) 1 gram or more of a base form of cocaine;".

(b) CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES IMPORT AND EXPORT ACT AMENDMENT.—Section 1010(b)(1) of the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 960(b)(1)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A), by striking out "other than a narcotic drug" and all that follows through "identical thereto; " and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(2) by striking out subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) 1 gram or more of a base form of cocaine;".

SEC. 2. ADDITION OF COCAINE IN ANY BASE FORM AS A SCHEDULE I CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE.

Schedule I of section 202(c) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 812(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(d) Cocaine in any base form.".

SEC. 3. CRIMINAL PENALTY FOR MANUFACTURE OF CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE IN OR NEAR SCHOOLS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 405A of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 845a) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by inserting "manufacturing or" before "distributing"; and

(2) in subsection (b), by inserting "manufacturing or" before "distributing".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The section heading for section 405A of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 845a) is amended to read as follows:

"MANUFACTURE OR DISTRIBUTION IN OR NEAR SCHOOLS".

SEC. 4. PENALTY FOR CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE VIOLATION RESULTING IN DEATH.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part D of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 841 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATION RESULTING IN DEATH

"SEC. 416. Notwithstanding any other provision of this title or title III, any person who violates either such title may, if the violation results in the death of another person, be sentenced to imprisonment for any term of years or for life.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for part D of title II of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"Sec. 416. Penalty for violation resulting in death.".

FLORIDA POWER & LIGHT CO., RECEIVES EDISON AWARD FOR QUALITY IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, my constituent, John J. Hudiburg, chairman of the board and the chief executive officer of Florida Power & Light Co., testified at the June 25, 1986 hearing before the Science, Research and Technology Subcommittee of the House Committee on Science and Technology.

The subcommittee has held a series of hearings on "Strategies for Exploiting American Inventiveness in the World Market Place."

Florida Power & Light Co., is the fifth largest electric utility in the country. It has been active in pursuing a total quality program for the past 5 years, and has shared this information and experience with State and local governments, as well as representatives of over 300 U.S. businesses. FPL is recognized as one of the leaders in quality improvement programs in America.

Earlier this month, Florida Power & Light was honored with the Edison Award, the electric utility industry's highest honor. They were awarded this because of their excellence in implementing their Quality Improvement Program.

I am pleased to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a copy of Mr. Hudiburg's testimony before the subcommittee:

TESTIMONY OF JOHN J. HUDIBURG, CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD AND CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER, FLORIDA POWER & LIGHT CO.

Mr. Chairman . . . it's my pleasure to be here today, along with others who share a common vision, to talk about quality of American goods and services . . . and, the concept of a national award for outstanding implementation of corporate quality programs.

"American quality" . . . it has the "ring" of historic precedent . . . of founding principles like "freedom" and "land of opportunity" . . . but somewhere along the line the U.S. reduced the concept to rhetoric.

Unlike "Lady Liberty", we have no monument to American quality. But we need to build one—and give it a similar level of reverence—if we intend to recapture our competitive standing in the world marketplace. I believe a legislative effort is the best, and perhaps the only way, to accomplish this goal and give it lasting and meaningful esteem.

Before we take up that possibility, allow me to provide a little background, a few examples of how quality works at my company and a brief status report on the "state of the quality concept" in business today.

With all due respect to those who had the foresight to recognize a good thing, embrace it, and make it work to their advantage—the concept of quality control was not invented in Japan.

I have great respect for the Japanese TQC system. However, the basic idea for this system was conceived in the U.S. by men like Edwards Deming and Joseph Juran . . . exported for lack of interest at home . . . manufactured in Japan . . . and, when it met with much success . . . returned as an import.

Thanks to the success of the Japanese, quality improvement programs have become a proven business strategy. Recognizing that American products were being overwhelmed by foreign competitors, major U.S. corporations began adopting similar programs in the '70's and '80's.

As a result, customer-oriented, quality management processes were rejuvenated in the United States, and American know-how was applied (as we're apt to do once we identify a good thing) to improve and refine the processes.

Or, as Winston Churchill once noted: "Americans can always be counted on to do the right thing, but only after they have tried everything else."

So today, many of the Nation's businesses and industries are hard at work on programs designed to bring about a renaissance of American quality.

The incentive for quality improvement programs is great for a number of reasons. For the—the Commerce Department's most recent estimates suggest that some seventy percent of all American-manufactured products are either current or prospective targets for foreign competition.

At Florida Power & Light Company, for example, our quality improvement program has moved beyond the quality circles concept—or quality improvement teams as we call them—to a phase we call policy deployment.

The team or "circle" concept, if you're not familiar with it, brings employees together to discuss problems and opportunities of their own choosing. This beginning phase also provides employees with a formal process for determining the steps that can be taken to solve the problem, or make the most of the opportunity . . . and more importantly, it provides them with a process for management approval and implementation of their plan.

I can tell you that the results of this type of approach are phenomenal.

Our employees have been very enthusiastic about the team concept from the beginning. Today we have more than seventeen hundred QIP teams companywide. That's eight thousand of our employees—or more than sixty percent of our work force—thinking about . . . talking about . . . and doing something about quality.

Our quality improvement teams have come up with thousands of problem solutions. I will illustrate the wide span of solutions with two examples—an interoffice mail procedure that achieved a ninety-three percent reduction in incorrectly addressed mail and resulting overtime . . . and a record setting, thirty-eight day, refueling of our St. Lucie nuclear plant—about one half the normal time and ten days faster than FPL's previous record.

The results of these and other quality improvements team efforts have documented savings to FPL customers in the millions of dollars.

The second phase of our quality improvement program, called policy deployment, is equally important as it provides us with a structure for communicating management direction, setting strategic objectives and developing projects to meet those objectives.

At FPL it is a process where "breakthroughs" on a few selected issues are achieved through concentrated organizational efforts and resources.

Last year we also introduced the third and final phase of our total quality effort called quality in daily work.

The key to quality in daily work for our people is to learn and utilize the proven problem-solving techniques of our quality improvement program and then apply them to everyday work.

There is no question in my mind, that the recognition Florida Power & Light received earlier this month from the Edison Electric Institute for "excellence among America's energy companies" will go a long way toward perpetuating the enthusiasm our people have for the program and the kind of results it can earn.

I might add that the award is not an award for quality—but a "peer" award for excellence in programs for service—FPL just happened to be selected as a recipient of the award this year on the basis of our quality improvement program.

While our goal is quality, the true test for FPL, and for others, will be customer satisfaction.

All this is by way of saying that American industry, FPL included, is beginning to understand that improved quality in goods and services, and improved productivity go hand-in-hand. A commitment to excellence in manufacturing and services is essential for the well-being of the U.S. economy and society.

We believe that a national quality award would help stimulate this process, for the pride of recognition, and for the resulting competitive edge of greater profitability.

We also believe that everyone—winners, near winners and beginners—will benefit from the existence of the National Award Program I would propose. Criteria, once published, can serve as a benchmark, as well as a hallmark of achievement.

In Japan, the Deming price for outstanding statistical quality control contributions, is the most prestigious achievement a company can earn.

A close look at its objectives has provided us with an understanding of what our award must consist of, if it is to be equally meaningful:

Number one: It must be prestigious.

To achieve the maximum prestige the award should be limited to just a few a year and should be presented by the President. While I believe the President should be the presenter, clear direction from Congress via legislation will insure that the award will be continued regardless of the politics of future administrations.

Number two: It must be self-funding.

A funding foundation should be established. Moreover, public acceptance will be far greater if the companies applying for the award foot the bill for the consulting services of the evaluators or judges, rather than the taxpayer.

Number three: It must be earned.

By that I mean that the criteria must be rigorous . . . requiring not only a written response to published criteria, but also a site validation visit by a panel of qualified judges.

In order to meet these three important musts . . . the entire program must also be administered properly and by a "body" designated by the legislature.

There exists today a number of organizations established to serve the Nation's industries as quality program consultants, including the American Society of Quality Control, the Juran Institute and the American Productivity Center. Their contributions to our progress are immeasurable and their willingness to administer, and even fund the award, is both generous and logical.

However, I believe a government commission should be established to set policy for the award. It could select one of these other quality groups to administer the award. This joint committee could be determine the criteria for the award, and for the judges and oversee the administration of the funding. I believe the appropriate organziation exists in the American Society for Quality Control.

Most major U.S. Corporations are active in the ASQC, while members of the Juran Institute, the American Productivity Center and others maintain active ties to it.

Mr. Chairman . . . we would like to see the phrase . . . "They just don't make 'em like they used to . . ." disappear from the American vocabulary.

Over the years, consumers have uttered those words more and more as American products seemed to offer less and less in terms of quality.

But for those who think care and craftsmanship went out with the Frigidaire and came back with the Toyota, there is good news—the times are changing and so is the attitude toward quality in America.

The truth is, in most cases Americans are probably making things "better than they used to . . ." The pride of "Made in America" is being rediscovered in a revival of quality—quality of products as well as service.

I believe that it's time to encourage, recognize and reward that effort.

Thank you for listening and for the opportunity to appear here today.

MEESE'S POWER GRAB

HON. JACK BROOKS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, last month's issue of the New Republic featured an excellent article entitled "Meese's Power Grab," which clearly and succinctly chronicled an extremely disturbing constitutional confrontation provoked a couple of years ago by the administration. In short, the executive branch refused to implement and enforce a law which had been passed and signed by the President.

As the article points out, the episode did not receive very much attention in the press during its occurrence. It did not, however, escape Congress' notice. The Government Operations Committee, on a bipartisan basis, issued a report in 1985—"The President's Suspension of the Competition in Contracting Act is Unconstitutional" (H. Rept. 99-138)—and the House Judiciary Committee voted to cut all appropriations from the Attorney General's office until the executive branch agreed to comply with the law.

I commend this article to my colleagues and applaud its authors, Murray Waas and Jeffrey Toobin, for their fine work.

[From the New Republic, May 19, 1986]

MEESE'S POWER GRAB

(By Murray Waas and Jeffrey Toobin)

(Murray Waas, a Washington writer, wrote "The Soul of a New Machine Politician" in the March 10 issue. Jeffrey Toobin, an editor of the Harvard Law Review, wrote "Enduring Insults" in the same issue.)

Congress passes a bill. The president signs it into law. But his administration decides it doesn't entirely like the bill. So the attorney general—without even going to court—declares part of the bill unconstitutional, and orders federal agencies not to comply with it.

A federal district court rules that the bill is constitutional. The attorney general, hauled before the House Judiciary Committee, says that he's still going to forbid the government from obeying its own laws. "The district court does not have the ability to set a national precedent on the constitutionality of the law," the attorney general tells the startled representatives. A congressman asks, "What if an appellate court held the law constitutional?" The AG hedges: "I think we would have to review it."

The Judiciary Committee votes to withhold all appropriations from the attorney general's office—including money for salaries—until he agrees to enforce the law. Meanwhile, the federal district court orders the administration to stop flouting the law. Faced with the court order and the threat to his own paycheck, the attorney general backs down. The constitutional crisis is over.

This all happened last year—the final chapter was written just a few weeks ago—yet the episode went virtually ignored by the press. Since 1803, the year of the great case of Marbury v. Madison, it has been one of the uncontested maxims of American democracy that the judiciary—and the judiciary alone—has the power to declare statutes unconstitutional. Until, that is, the Constitution met Ed Meese.

The tale begins in July 1984, when President Reagan signed the Deficit Reduction Act into law. One obscure provision of the larger bill was called the Competition in Contracting Act (CICA), which was designed to save money by curbing the abuse of no-bid government contracts. Specifically, CICA strengthened the role of the comptroller general, the largely unknown figure who is currently embroiled in another constitutional contretemps—the dispute about Gramm-Rudman. One of the comptroller general's jobs has been to hear the complaints of would-be federal contractors who think that another company has gotten a sweetheart deal. This is not a trivial problem. Of the $168 billion in government contracts awarded in 1983, about two-thirds were single-source contracts with no competitive bids. Unfortunately, by the time the comptroller general could look into a suspicious contract, it was usually too late to stop it. CICA permits a potential competitor to challenge a deal by filing a protest with the comptroller general. The filing of a protest—and here is the key part—freezes the contract until either the comptroller general makes a decision on the protest or the head of the government agency involved certifies in writing that the contract can't wait because of "urgent or compelling circumstances which significantly affect the interests of the United States." In other words, a disappointed contractor can force the government to give him a fair hearing before the deal is already cooked against him. The comptroller general has 90 days to settle the matter.

Defense contractors—and their chief patron in Washington, Caspar Weinberger—were livid when CICA was proposed, and lobbied hard against it. But CICA's congressional advocates—chiefly Democratic representative Jack Brooks of Texas and Republican senator William Cohen of Maine—got CICA attached to the Deficit Reduction Act, figuring that Reagan would not veto the whole bill because of one irritating provision. They were right; Reagan signed the bill on July 18, 1984.

But when he signed the bill, Reagan issued a statement saying he was approving CICA under protest and "instructing the Attorney General to inform all executive branch agencies as soon as possible with respect to how they may comply in a constitutional manner." Translated, that odd phrase meant that Reagan was telling Attorney General William French Smith to order federal agencies not to comply with the law. In mid-October the Justice Department released its internal finding that CICA was unconstitutional. Then on December 17 budget director David Stockman officially ordered all federal agencies to ignore the law. Coming with no fanfare in the week before Christmas and the month after the president had won a landslide victory, the order generated little notice or controversy. House Appropriations Committee hearings on the matter in March 1985 attracted little notice.

Also largely ignored was a March 1985 holding by federal district judge Harold A. Ackerman of Newark New Jersey, that CICA was constitutional. (The plaintiff was a company called Ameron, which had lost a bid to clean and repair the sewers at West Point and went to court to force the comptroller general to investigate). Three weeks later Meese was before the Judiciary Committee announcing not only that he thought Ackerman was wrong, but that in his opinion the judge did not have the authority to decide the constitutionality of the law! The New York Times didn't even run a story on Meese's testimony, possibly because it came the same day as President Reagan's visit to the Nazi cemetery at Bitburg.

In a May 20 ruling, Ackerman said Meese's position "flatly violates the express instruction of the Constitution that the President shall 'take care that the Laws be faithfully executed.'" Shortly thereafter, at the instigation of chairman Peter Rodino, the Judiciary Committee threatened to cut off Meese's funding. Meese, in turn, capitulated, and Stockman's order was rescinded. The law was once again the law. Ackerman's orders were affirmed in full by the Third Circuit Court of Appeals on March 27, 1986, in a frankly incredulous opinion by a conservative Nixon appointee, Leonard I. Garth.

Besides the inconvience it might cause to fat defense contractors, what exactly bothered the administration about this law? The Justice Department does not object to the automatic stay provisions of CICA—only to the fact that the comptroller general has the power to lift the stay. According to the administration, this is an executive function and the comptroller general is an officer of Congress; therefore, giving him this function violates the separation of powers. This is exactly the issue now in front of the Supreme Court in the Gramm-Rudman case. The scandal here, though, is not the administration's position on the executive-legislative separation of powers, but rather its trampling of the separation of powers between the executive and the judicial branches.

Presidents have disputed the constitutionality of law many times. But until Ronald Reagan, no president has ever asserted the right to ignore a law he thinks is unconstitutional, let alone the right to defy a court ruling that a law is constitutional just because he happens to disagree. Until Ed Meese came along, the universal assumption was that you must obey the law until some court rules it unconstitutional—not that you can disregard a law even after a court has ruled it unconstitutional, unless perhaps that court is the Supreme Court. (And Meese has never directly conceded that even the Supreme Court can overrule his opinion about a law's constitutionality.)

Testifying before a congressional panel, Deputy Attorney General D. Lowell Jensen attempted to justify the administration's order that agencies should ignore the CICA law by saying that it was designed to force a prompt court test of the law's constitutionality. But that is nonsense. The way to test a law is for one of the affected parties to challenge its enforcement, not to block its enforcement without a court challenge. The Justice Department wasn't choosing an unorthodox method of getting a court test. It was denying that it needed a court test. As Judge Ackerman put it in his opinion, "The action of the executive defendants in this case seems to be one designed to avoid a judicial resolution."

There is a genuinely tough constitutional question here: Can the president ever refuse to enforce an enacted law because he believes that it's unconstitutional? What if Congress passed an appropriations bill that was necessary to keep the government functioning but also contained a provision banning all black people from the Capitol grounds? If a president signs the bill to keep the government running, what's he to do? Sanford Levinson, a law professor at the University of Texas, believes defiance might be appropriate if the statute would "significantly infringe individual liberties or some fundamental values." Others disagree, saying the better route is to arrange for the law to be violated immediately and allow a court—the designated branch of government for such decisions—to strike it down.

But certainly—certainly—CICA was not the place for the executive branch to make a stand. It is almost too fitting that this administration, so stingy in its view of the breadth of constitutional protections for minorities, the press, and criminal defendants, decided to force a constitutional confrontation on behalf of its favorite oppressed group: defense contractors.

But this episode may be less an attempt to rewrite the Constitution than an ordinary power play. The Reagan administration might like to have a constitutional line-item veto, but even Meese could not have seriously thought that his action was legal. Lowell Jensen, who defended this brazen assault on the Constitution, has been nominated for a federal judgeship. Senators might ask him about it during his upcoming confirmation hearings.

LT. MARK POHLMEYER, U.S.N.

HON. WILLIAM J. COYNE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, recently Lt. Mark Pohlmeyer, a native of Castle Shannon and a graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, died as a result of a mid-air collision off the northern coast of California. At the time of the flight he was conducting a low level navigational flight.

The members of the Pohlmeyer family have a tradition of serving this country. Lt. Mark Pohlmeyer has a twin brother, Lt. Paul Pohlmeyer, also a Navy jet fighter pilot and also an Annapolis graduate. The brothers have an older brother, who graduated from the Naval Academy 6 years before their graduation and who is presently a lieutenant commander in the Naval Reserve. Their father is a Navy veteran of World War II.

Mr. Speaker, at a time such as this we should pause to reflect on the debt of gratitude this country owes to the men and women who are serving on active duty in the military defense of their country. Their service in the cause of peace demands that they be ready to defend us. A necessary part of their readiness demands constant training. This tragic event reminds us of the fact that their constant readiness is filled with danger.

Mr. Speaker, our deepest sympathies go out to the Pohlmeyer family.

At this point, I include two articles, one from the Pittsburgh Press and one from the Pittsburgh Post Gazette.

OFFICER LOVED FLYING, ACCEPTED RISK

(By Michael A. Fuoco)

Castle Shannon natives Mark and Paul Pohlmeyer were identical twins in spirit as well as in appearance.

Both graduates of the U.S. Naval Academy, they chose the high-risk occupation of flying jet fighters because, their parents said, they loved their work.

On Tuesday, the inherent danger of their profession was manifested when Mark's jet collided in mid-air off the northern coast of California with a plane piloted by a student he was training.

Navy spokeswoman Phyllis Schimo said evidence found at the scene by the Coast Guard convinced them that neither Mark, 29, nor the other pilot, Lt. j.g. Brian D. Myers, 25, of Las Vegas, Nev., survived the collision.

At the time of the crash, which occurred during a low-level navigation flight, Paul was in Hawaii after a temporary assignment in the Philippines. He had been planning to begin a vacation with his wife yesterday.

At the Pohlmeyer family home at 900 Bockstoce Ave. last night his parents—Jack A. and Lou Pohlmeyer—and their eldest son, Jack, 35, of Chicago, struggled with their pain and sadly recalled the love and friendship the twins shared and the accomplishments they had achieved.

"Anything they did, they did well," Mrs. Pohlmeyer said, fighting back tears. "They were always together. For 29 years they were never separated . . . They were more than just brothers, they were best friends."

Mark, nicknamed "Mo," and Paul, nicknamed "Po," excelled at Keystone Oaks High School, both graduating with highest honors in 1975 after being standouts in football and wrestling.

They continued their wrestling careers at the Naval Academy and graduated in 1979. Their brother, Jack, who's now a lieutenant commander in the Navy Reserve and a pilot for Delta Airlines, graduated from the academy six years earlier.

The twins, both lieutenants, were assigned to Lemoore Naval Air Station, 45 miles south of Fresno, Calif., where they lived together. Mark, who was single, was best man when Paul married Carol Obremski, also of Castle Shannon, last March. After the wedding the three shared a house at Lemoore.

While stationed in California, the brothers traveled the world together, completing two eight-month tours of duty attached to the aircraft carrier Enterprise.

Mark was attached to attack squadron 122, training new pilots in the A-7E Corsair II light attack bomber—the jet he was teaching Myers to fly when the collision occurred. Paul, who is attached to Flight Attack Squadron 127, is involved in adversary training—flying Skyhawk jets in maneuvers that might be employed by enemy pilots.

"They both knew it was a high-risk occupation," said their father, a Navy veteran of World War II, "but they loved doing it."

Both brothers were nearing the end of their Navy tours of duty but were considering extending their time, Mrs. Pohlmeyer said. "They liked it so much," she said, sobbing while glancing at a picture of the twins in flight suits. "They hadn't made up their minds . . . but they were talking like they wanted to stay."

Their father said he's unsure whether Paul will continue to fly fighters.

The family will leave today to attend a memorial service tomorrow at Lemoore. Another memorial service will be held at 7:30 p.m. Monday at Hamilton Presbyterian Church, Baptist and Hamilton Road, Whitehall.

The family has suggested that memorial contributions be made to a fund to be established in the name of Mark Pohlmeyer through the U.S. Naval Academy Alumni Association, Class of 1979, Annapolis, Md. 21402.

NAVY CRASH KILLS SHANNON NATIVE

(By Douglas Root)

When twin Navy pilots Mark and Paul Pohlmeyer were reassigned to a California naval base after two seven-month stints on an aircraft carrier in the Mediterranean, their Castle Shannon parents were relieved.

With so much instability in that part of the world, Jack Pohlmeyer said yesterday, there was constant worry that his 29-year-old sons would be assigned to combat.

That is why the death Tuesday of Mark, after his fighter plane collided with another in his squadron during a routine exercise, was such a shock to a family in which three sons became fighter pilots.

"If it just wasn't out of the blue like this," Jack Pohlmeyer said. "One minute you think they're both doing fine—that nothing is going on that could make you worry—and then something like this happens."

Navy officials are investigating what caused the collision that killed Lt. Pohlmeyer and Lt. j.g. Brian D. Myers, 25, of Las Vegas, while they flew along the Northern California coast.

Terry Sinclair, commander of the Coast Guard base near Trinidad, Calif., said a search operation began almost immediately because another jet and a 210-foot cutter were operating in the area where the accident occurred. He said rescuers fought 20-foot waves to recover human remains and some wreckage.

Phyllis Shimo, a spokeswoman for Lemoore Naval Air Station, which is about 15 miles south of Fresno, said the two pilots were flying A-7E Corsair II fighter bombers on a low-level navigation flight. No further information on the crash will be available until the investigation is complete, probably within the next two weeks, she said.

Pohlmeyer said his twin sons never seemed to tire of each other's company, from their days on the wrestling team at Keystone Oaks High School, to their fast-paced lives as Navy pilots based in Southern California.

Even when Paul married last year, the brothers continued to live together in a house they owned near the naval air station.

Pohlmeyer said his sons shared similar interests and were attracted to careers as Navy pilots through his oldest son, Jack, 35, of Chicago, now a pilot for Delta Airlines.

The twins followed their older brother to the Naval Academy, were wrestling teammates there and graduated in 1979. They completed their aviation training in 1980 and were allowed to serve together in the same fighter squadron during their overseas assignment on the carrier USS Enterprise.

Both men had been assigned to the Lemoore base for more than a year. Paul in an adversary squadron and Mark as a flight instructor. Ms. Shimo said that if the base had been involved in armed conflict, the brothers would not have been allowed to serve together.

"They had their own lives but they were very close—almost as friends," Pohlmeyer said.

Mark is survived by his mother, Lou, in addition to his father and brothers. Pohlmeyer said the family will leave today to attend a memorial service at the base.

A local memorial service is set for 7:30 p.m. Monday at Hamilton Presbyterian Church, Baptist and Hamilton roads, Whitehall.

A RATIONAL POLICY ON ADOPTION

HON. JOE SKEEN

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Speaker, I introduced legislation on June 12, 1986, which will provide vital information needed to formulate a rational policy on adoption and will assist the Federal Government in assessing the impact of Federal adoption programs. H.R. 5029 will require each State to furnish the Secretary of Health and Human Services detailed information concerning the number of adoptions that occur each year and the characteristics of the parents and children involved in the adoption process.

Although the States have primary jurisdiction over adoption, the Federal Government funds several adoption-related programs. These include: the adoption opportunities program established by the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978 (Pub. L. 95–266), the Adoption Assistance Program established by the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act of 1980 (Pub. L. 96–272), and funding for adoption services under the Adolescent Family Life Act of 1981. Accurate data could tell us how successful these programs are in moving children out of foster care and into permanent homes.

A terrible human price is paid when children grow-up in unstable home environments. Additionally, the American taxpayer pays a steep price. In 1980, this country expended $272 million for AFDC-Foster Care payments. In 1984, this figure escalated to $422 million. Yet, as millions and millions of taxpayer dollars continue being spent, we rely on a voluntary reporting system which cannot provide basic information on the number of children adopted.

Given the voluntary system for collecting information on adoption, it is impossible to ascertain how many children are adopted in this country. This occurrence has created a desperate need for numerical data on the incidence of adoption in America. In order to assess the impact of Federal programs and to allocate limited Federal funds, national adoption and foster care data gathering must be established.

Since 1975, no Federal report on adoption in the United States has been issued. Legitimate public policy formation has been stifled as legislators, other policymakers, adoption agencies, social workers, biological and adoptive parents and health professionals have been without statistical insight into this critical issue.

In 1978, during the establishment of the adoption opportunities program under Public Law 95–266, Congress specifically required the initiation and operation of a national adoption and foster care data gathering and analysis system utilizing information gathered by the States. In 1984, Congress reauthorized the program and reaffirmed a policy of permanency for foster care children. Obviously, the voluntary system which now exists is inadequate in providing critical information on the incidence of adoption.

The Voluntary Cooperative Information System is operated by the American Public Welfare Association with funding assistance from the Office of Human Development Services of the Department of Health and Human Services. The VCIS system is limited to data on children placed for adoption by child welfare agencies. The most recent VCIS report acknowledges that the data "should be considered as rough national estimates."

In 1984, the Assistant Secretary for Human Development Services called for the formation of the Adoption Information Improvement

Workgroup. One of their strongest recommendations included the implementation of an annual nationwide adoption information system.

H.R. 5029 would address that concern by amending part E of title IV of the Social Security Act to require States to furnish, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services to publish, statistical data relating to the incidence of adoption. The legislation requires specific information to be obtained from each State, including: the total number of adoptions finalized each year, the age, sex, race, and handicap status of the adopted children, whether the child was placed for adoption by a private agency, public agency or independently.

The bill is not designed to compile a list of children now waiting to be adopted. Data shall be reported in statistical form only and the need for confidentiality will be recognized. Language included in the bill explicitly states that there is no intent to authorize or require the collection or release of information that identifies by name or address any party to an adoption.

Furthermore, States are allowed sufficient time to establish their adoption reporting systems after enactment of the legislation. States will have flexibility as to how they collect the data.

Regarding funding, H.R. 5029 does not place a heavy burden on the States. Matching Federal funds for the data collection would be provided by title IV–E of the Social Security Act. Approximate costs would include $1 million annually for all of the States, as well as $1 million to be spent by the Federal Government. Relative to the $497 million spent by the Federal Government in fiscal year 1985, this is a small price to pay for gathering such crucial information.

The National Committee for Adoption, Aid to Adoption of Special Kids [AASK America] and the North American Council on Adoptable Children strongly support this legislation.

UNITED STATES DEPENDENCY ON JAPANESE INDUSTRY

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, a problem of the utmost importance has arisen. It is the United States dependency on Japanese industry. Japanese industry is currently supplying a majority of the high-tech parts for U.S. weaponry. The United States is in a sense being held captive by its heavy reliance on imported Japanese technology. The United States must wean itself from Japanese high-tech weapons components and start depending on American industry for such parts. The idea of having a foreign country supplying integral defense components is itself a breach of national security. By ending this dependence, the domestic supply and supremacy of U.S. weapons would be assured. I commend this article to my colleagues.

Thank you.

U.S. DEPENDENCE ON JAPAN FOR PARTS WORRIES PENTAGON

(By Michael Schrage)

America's most sophisticated weapons are rapidly becoming dependent on components imported from Japan—a development that has touched off debate inside the Pentagon over what, if anything, should be done about it.

Defense industry sources are particularly concerned about the Strategic Defense Initiative—or "Star Wars"—system, where Japanese high-technology companies now outstrip U.S. defense contractors in several key technologies vital to the development of such a system.

While U.S. companies are able to do most of the SDI systems design work, the cheapest and most reliable hardware—ranging from lasers to new materials—is produced by the Japanese. For example, the Japanese have become the world's dominant supplier of computer memory chips—a key element in many electronic-based weapons systems.

"It's a matter of fact that the Japanese have taken the technical lead in many of these key technologies . . .," Said Hewlett-Packard Co.'s materials research laboratory director, Robert Burmeister, who serves on a National Academy of Science panel on electronic components.

"Japan today has the technology base to be a major supplier to the SDI," said Richard Reynolds, director of the defense sciences office at the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, who added that the Pentagon now can buy advanced technology from Japan not yet available from U.S. suppliers. "In some cases," he said, "you either buy from Japan or you don't get it."

This has raised serious policy concerns over whether the Pentagon should dramatically shore up this nation's high-tech manufacturing base—potentially a very expensive undertaking—or whether it simply should buy the best technology at the best price from a close ally.

Three high-level commissions are examining the military's growing reliance on overseas electronics: a newly formed Defense Sciences Board Task Force on Semiconductor Dependency; a panel of the Pentagon's just logistics commanders; and a National Academy of Science Electronics Components Committee, which is expected to release a report next month asserting that "there is a very large and increasing dependence on Japanese components."

"There's no doubt that—because of cost and quality considerations—many defense groups are already buying from Japan," said Harvey Nathanson, a Westinghouse research director who leads an industry group pushing for increased defense funding for electronics materials research. "The question has got to be, is that good for us in the long term? A lot of the technologists are more concerned about the Japanese ascendancy. The 'equipment at the best price' procurement types aren't worried.

Largely through its strength in commercial electronics, Japan has rapidly become a strategic supplier of defense technologies to the Pentagon. Pentagon expenditures for defense electronics approach $56.5 billion a year, according to the Electronics Industries Association.

The Nakasone government in Japan has been encouraging the transfer of the country's advanced electronics to the U.S. military, and top Pentagon officials have welcomed increased participation by the Japanese.

"The change in the electronics has been the most striking and significant in the past few years," said Jacques S. Gansler, a deputy assistant secretary of Defense for material acquisition during the Ford administration and now a defense industry consultant.

Currently, there are no good estimates on what percentage of defense electronics components are produced overseas. However, House Armed Services subcommittee staff feels that roughly 80 percent of the military's silicon chips are manufactured in Asia.

Meaningful estimates of Japanese content of U.S. defense electronics are further complicated because U.S. contractors do not always have to disclose where the components for their electronics systems were originally made.

"There's no question that what the [Pentagon] needs to do is recognize the 'dual economy' that exists in the defense industry," asserted Gansler, who serves on the National Academy of Science panel. "We have large prime contractors providing systems, and we don't pay attention to the lower tier [of contractors] on which these systems are dependent. So we have this awkward system where the lower tiers are disappearing and going offshore; their significance isn't recognized.

"While we focus so much of our resources on the prime-contractor level, the real advances [in technology] often come from these parts and components."

In addition to volume supply, Japanese companies recently have begun to provide "critical" components for such weapons systems as missiles and electronic-warfare devices, according to Pentagon and industry officials.

Exacerbating that situation is the fact that, in some areas, Japanese companies have become the sole providers of high-quality, low-cost key electronics materials after winning price wars with American companies.

After Monsanto Co. dropped out of the market three years ago, for example, the United States no longer has a domestic supplier of "float-zone" silicon—a special kind of silicon used in fabricating high-power electronic switching devices that would be indispensable for space-based weaponry. Japanese companies are the key U.S. defense suppliers.

Japan's dominance in the computer memory-chip market means that "we are captive of the Japanese in this commodity," said former assistant Defense secretary Robert Cooper, "but that's no worse than saying our Navy is captive to the supply of foreign oil."

Japanese companies also enjoy significant cost, quality and technical advantages in the production of gallium arsenide computer chips—chips capable of processing data far faster than conventional silicon chips. The Defense Department has publicly identified gallium arsenide as a critical technology for the SDI. Japan provides the bulk of the Pentagon's gallium arsenide, according to defense electronics sources.

According to former Defense undersecretary of engineering Richard DeLauer, Japan also leads the United States in computer-chip packaging and fiber-optic technology.

Consequently, key U.S. electronics defense suppliers are pushing the Pentagon to invest more heavily in domestic suppliers and to reexamine procurement policies. They argue that the United States already is being hurt technologically by its dependence on Japanese high-technology materials.

"Even now, the Japanese are preselecting the quality of the silicon they ship," said Westinghouse's Nathanson, "In some Westinghouse plants, we're finding it difficult to get the [more advanced] silicon wafers [for power device production]. They themselves are now using higher order material than they're willing to ship us."

However, Nathanson concedes, and several defense industry sources confirm, that prime U.S. defense contractors are becoming more reliant on Japanese companies to do the actual production work for systems components because of potentially superior manufacturing and price performance.

"This trend towards 'teaming up' with the Japanese is going to continue," asserts former Defense undersecretary William J. Perry.

That poses potentially awkward procurement situations for the SDI because leading advocates such as Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard N. Perle and SDI program director Gen. James Abrahamson have assured that the program will seek low-cost suppliers.

"We're trying to get the best technology at the lowest cost," said Perle, who added that he expects Japan to participate in the SDI.

However, most technology experts agree that, if the Pentagon is serious about obtaining the best high technologies at the most reasonable cost, most of the component production will be done offshore by Japanese high-technology concerns—unless there are specific policies designed to minimize foreign involvement.

WILL DIPLOMACY CHANGE?

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I placed into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article suggesting the time had come to review the Vienna Convention of Diplomacy. In an age where some embassies are only arsenals, perhaps we should look at the implications of diplomatic immunity.

The Lincoln Star recently published a thoughtful piece on this issue. I would ask my colleagues to read it and give it some thought. Is the century-old Vienna convention regulating diplomatic activities still valid in its current form?

[From the Lincoln (NE) Star, June 9, 1986]

DIPLOMACY RESTS ON SHAKY GROUND

International diplomacy rests on the shaky ground of national integrity and that presents certain risks. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger discussed the subject in a speech before the American Bar Association.

"Embassies are used as terrorist arsenals and planning centers," Weinberger said, "and so-called 'diplomats' actually plan and orchestrate murder and bombings in the nations hosting them. . . . Surely we can preserve the good purposes of the doctrines of sovereign and diplomatic immunity without cloaking terrorists in those privileges."

More hope than certainty is found in Weinberger's words, and justifiably so. Diplomatic immunity is anchored in mutual trust and certain trust will never be found there.

An interesting history might well be written with such diplomatic relations as its focal point. We suspect that it would show a new disregard of integrity among many nations of the world in this latter quarter of the 20th century.

Diplomatic posts have served since their inception as centers for questionable as well as honorable activities. Such posts are the successors to traveling ambassadors who carried messages of one country to another in much earlier days.

As the need for communications throughout the world expanded, nations began stationing ambassadors or diplomats permanently in those countries with which they frequently needed such contact.

The key thing in this is that the diplomat is the personal representative of his government. It is not the embassy or its staff but the government it represents that sponsors the violence of which Weinberger spoke.

Thus, diplomacy is no more than a reflection of the values of the government behind it. That diplomacy is being compromised today because of the violence which is symbolic of so many regions of the world and the resort by many nations to extremes in the pursuit of their objectives.

Nations of the world which have little regard for the dignity and sanctity of life are not going to be bothered by the high ethics of diplomatic representation. Rather, they are going to exploit that representation, just as they exploit any opportunity they see for the advancement of their twisted thoughts.

The "good purposes of the doctrines of sovereignty and diplomatic immunity" will not find salvation until all nations subscribe to reasonable values and that day is a long way off. Meanwhile, nations with integrity and human decency can only persist in their ways, with the conviction that time is on their side.

THE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM OF THE GREATER PHILADELPHIA COUNCIL, AFL-CIO

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, May 7, 1986, Mr. James J. Mahoney of Philadelphia, PA, testified before the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control on behalf of the Greater Philadelphia Council, AFL-CIO.

In his testimony Mr. Mahoney told the committee, which I have the honor to chair, about the Assistance Program in Philadelphia. The program is a unique approach to the identification, care, and treatment of alcoholism and drug abuse that joins the resources of management and labor with the participation of city and State government in fighting these personal and related economic problems. The committee has noted the disheartening volume of individuals who abuse drugs and alcohol. We have also obtained estimates of the staggering economic costs of this abuse. For example, a study by the Research Triangle Institute of North Carolina concluded that drug abuse cost $33 million in reduced productivity in 1983.

Since Mr. Mahoney's testimony highlighted what seems to me to be a practical and realistic approach to effective treatment of job-related alcohol and drug abuse problems, I offer excerpts from his statement for the benefit of my colleagues and their constituencies. The employee Assistance Program in Philadelphia may well be an example of what can be developed in cities, companies, and unions throughout this country. I invite my colleagues to look into the Assistance Program and see how its tenets might serve their communities—the program's address is 1225 Vine Street, Philadelphia, PA 19107 (215) 665-1730.

Excerpts from Mr. Mahoney's statement follow:

Our country is engaged in a war the like of which it has never encountered before. It is a war not fought with guns or rockets and yet the death toll is greater than any other in which our country has been involved. Our enemy is not merely some foreign power, but rather a cadre of malignant forces both within and outside of our own nation's borders. And the fighters are not conscripted soldiers or fanatical terrorists, but street corner dealers, manufacturing plant profiteers, foreign drug exporters, contraband farmers, school yard dealers, suburban distributors: and—some 50 million Americans who finance the enemy through their purchase of marijuana, cocaine, heroin, amphetamines, LSD, MDMA and the other chemicals which foster the cancer of addiction

Concerning the most effective means of engaging the enemy and winning this war, the Greater Philadelphia Council of the AFL-CIO has some definite opinions. These opinions are based upon our understanding of the available research, and our own experiences with a project we initiated over a year ago which is known as the Assistance Program.

This brings me to the work of the Assistance Program. Philadelphia is like most other large metropolitan areas in our country, and as such, it is faced with the same problems of modern urban life. Relative to this testimony is the problem of drug abuse. Philadelphia has a drug problem. Not a greater problem than other comparable cities—but a very serious problem nonetheless. In response to this problem, the Greater Philadelphia AFL-CIO Council sought to gather support from various sectors of the Philadelphia health care and business community by forming an Employee Assistance Program—the Assistance Program. Support for the Assistance Program comes from the Greater Philadelphia Council of the AFL-CIO, Greater Philadelphia Blue Cross and Blue Shield, the Philadelphia First Corporation (many of the CEO's of Philadelphia's largest companies) and the United Way of Southeastern Pennsylvania, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the City of Philadelphia.

Since its 1 year inception, the Assistance Program has conducted 68 supervisory training programs for area companies on how to deal effectively with the problem of substance abuse in the work place. Over 8,327 calls for assistance have been handled by the Assistance staff. 2,978 individual counseling sessions have been provided. And 628 individuals have been helped into treatment for alcohol and/or drug related problems.

The literature on Employee Assistance Programs is vast, and therefore I will not replicate it here. In brief, however, I might mention that employee assistance programs are predicated on the idea that: a) some individuals will seek out help voluntarily if they are given an opportunity to do so confidentially and b) when an individual's job performance is harmfully affected by drug use, labor and management can work together to help the employee deal effectively with his drug problem. Successfully run employee assistance programs exist all across America, and they are effectively reducing the substance abuse among the work force in a way that communicates that the company cares for their welfare—as well as the bottomline. It should be emphasized, however, that employee assistance programs are not just nice social welfare projects. Properly administered employee assistance programs yield an attractive return on investment generally within the first year of implementation. That is why most companies keep and/or expand their employee assistance program once they start one.

An employee assistance program can create an environment at work where some people will voluntarily seek out if they are having a problem. Still, however, there will be those individuals that are so locked in their addiction that they just don't believe they can stop using drugs, and so they remain undercover. The employee assistance program will get through to this individual by training his/her supervisor to document the inevitable problems in job performance. Through proper documentation, mandatory referrals to the employee assistance program can start the individual on to the road to recovery.

REVIVAL OF FTC VIGOR REQUIRED

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting in the RECORD a recent Washington Post article on inadequate consumer protection enforcement by the Federal Trade Commission.

One aspect of the erosion of Federal protection for consumers is the continuing pressure for special interest legislative exemptions from FTC authority. One such exemption is currently in issue in the conference consideration of FTC reauthorization legislation. The Senate but not the House bill would exempt advertising from the FTC's authority to issue industrywide rules dealing with unfair practices. The authority to prohibit unfair practices is especially necessary for the FTC to deal with advertising that might encourage dangerous or unhealthy activity by young people or others, involving products such as tobacco, alcohol, or dangerous toys.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when unfair and deceptive advertising is on the rise, we should be acting to strengthen rather than weaken the FTC's ability to protect the public from advertising abuses.

TEN MOST MISLEADING ADS SELECTED: CONSUMER GROUPS CHARGE FTC HAS FAILED TO PROTECT PUBLIC

(By Martha M. Hamilton)

Consumer groups yesterday picked 10 advertisements—including ads for the Audi 5000-S and Arby's Roast Beef, a mailing by Household Finance Corp. and an advocacy ad by the Committee for Energy Awareness—as the year's most misleading.

The groups also denounced the Federal Trade Commission, which they said is falling down on the job of protecting consumers from deceptive pitches by advertisers.

The Center for Auto Safety complained that Volkswagen's Audi ads made light of the Department of Transportation's crashworthiness testing program in an ad that depicts car crashing into barriers. "At Audi, we also concentrate on going around them," the narrator notes.

"It was not intended to make light of any safety-related program," said Volkswagen of America spokesman Tom McDonald. He said the ads were designed to emphasize the car's superior ability "to avoid an accident situation, which is what we build into an Audi."

The Center for Science in the Public Interest said an advertisement for Arby's Roast Beef misled consumers by advising consumers to "go for the lean," despite the fact that its Super Roast Beef sandwich contains "the equivalent of 5 teaspoons of fat." An Arby's spokesman said that the ad campaign, which has been discontinued, was centered on a lean roast beef sandwich, which is lower in fat.

The Consumer Federation of America criticized a direct mail campaign by Household Finance Corp, in which the company sent unsolicited $1,500 checks during the Christmas shopping season. The checks, which bore the notation "not valid after 12/25/85" became an automatic loan at a rate of nearly 22 percent, according to the group.

A spokesman for Household Finance Corp. could not be reached for comment yesterday.

The Safe Energy Communication Council said that an advertisement by the U.S. Committee for Energy Awareness was misleading because it referred to coal and nuclear electrical generation as "home grown" energy. More than 48 percent of the uranium delivered to U.S. utilities is imported, the group said. A spokesman for the Committee for Energy Awareness said that the statistic is wrong and that almost all of the uranium used in nuclear plants is domestic.

Other ads listed by critics as misleading were an ad for a doll called "Upsy Baby" by Kenner Products, which the Consumer Affairs Committee for Americans for Democratic Action said misrepresented the degree of difficulty in getting the doll to operate properly; advertisements by Phillip Morris Cos., Inc. for Virginia Slims, which the National Women's Health Network said attempted to associate smoking with healthful activities such as tennis, and an advertisement for Colt 45 malt liquor, which drew criticism for linking alcohol and sexual performance.

FTC officials, who filed a complaint yesterday accusing R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Inc. of deceptive advertising, said that the agency is active and effective in cracking down on deception in advertising. "The FTC is continuing to bring cases against major advertisers as well as smaller advertisers who are running national advertising campaigns," said Lee Peeler, associate director for advertising practices at the FTC.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO LAURENCE D. CARNAY, M.D.

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. Laurence D. Carnay, who will be honored as the outgoing president of the board of directors of the Long Beach Children's Clinic at their annual meeting and installation of officers on July 11, 1986.

A native of New York City, and a product of their public school system, Dr. Carnay has an impressive education and professional background. In 1962, he received a bachelor's degree in chemistry from Hamilton College. He then went to the Cornell University Medical College where he received his M.D. in 1966. During his time at both Hamilton and Cornell, Dr. Carnay was the recipient of three special fellowships.

Following his graduation from Cornell University Medical College, Dr. Carnay served as an intern at the Presbyterian St. Luke's Hospital in Chicago, a resident in pediatrics at the New York Hospital, and a fellow in child neurology at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in New York. Dr. Carnay also served a tour of duty as a lieutenant commander with the U.S. Public Health Service.

In July of 1973, Dr. Carnay moved to California, where he accepted a position as an assistant professor of pediatrics and neurology at the UCLA School of Medicine. He left that position in 1974 to become medical director of both the Los Angeles Neurological Center Medical Group, and California Computerized Diagnostics. He still serves in these positions, while also working as the chief of staff of the Pioneer Hospital in Artesia, CA, and as a clinical assistant professor of neurology at the University of California at Irvine, and an examiner for the American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology.

In addition to his impressive and tireless professional work, Dr. Carnay serves as a member of the board of directors of the Children Foundation for Health Care, and is a member of the following professional organizations—the Biophysical Society, Child Neurology Society, American Academy of Neurology, Western Society for Pediatric Research, American Academy for Cerebral Palsy, and the Los Angeles Pediatric Society. Dr. Carnay has also given generously of his time in his service as the president of the board of directors of the Long Beach Children's Clinic. While he is the outgoing president, I am sure that his positive influence will be felt in the activities of the children's clinic, and in his work with so many fine health-related organizations throughout southern California.

It is with great pride that my wife, Lee, joins me in honoring Dr. Laurence D. Carnay for his exceptional professional and volunteer activities, and in wishing Dr. Carnay, his wife Janet, and their children, Erica and Jill, continued success and all the best in the years ahead.

THOUSANDS MORE DETAINED IN SOUTH AFRICA AS SOUTH AFRICA INCREASES REPRESSION OF ANTI APARTHEID ACTIVISTS

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, in South Africa on June 12, 1986, a state of emergency was declared covering the entire country. This action adds to previous restrictions on public gatherings. It has resulted in the arrest of hundreds of church and community leaders as well as severe restrictions of the press. It authorizes incommunicado detentions, which can be made without charge or trial. It is a blanket extension of the authority of the police, army, railway police and prisons service to use force as they please, with total immunity from civil or criminal responsibility.

Last year during the less draconian state of emergency, almost 8,000 people were detained, including over 2,000 children under the age of 16. The daily death toll tripled, and torture of detainees was widespread. This year, the emergency powers granted to security forces are broader, and anger in the black community has deepened, making expectations of worse abuses and violence entirely realistic.

This is regrettable and ill-timed action on the part of the South African Government. I fear, as do many of the human rights monitoring groups in South Africa, that it will only inflame the already heated atmosphere in the black community.

In spite of the extreme penalties faced by those who distribute names of alleged detainees, The Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, Amnesty International, the World Council of Churches and other monitoring groups have received lists of names which have been consolidated by the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law. The South African Government will not, of course, verify the accuracy of this list, leaving open the possibility that hundreds may disappear.

Because of the extremely dangerous situation in South Africa at this time, I would like to stress the importance of the gesture made by those who have risked such a great deal to provide alleged detainees with some measure of recognition. These emergency restrictions are inflammatory and cause hardship to many whose chances for redress are nonexistent. The interests of human rights can best be served by wide recognition of the plight of the estimated 3,000 detainees and public expressions of sympathy for those without legal recourse. We hope that the South African Government will soon come to its senses, release these prisoners, and lift the state of emergency.

The following are the names of some who are believed to have been detained.

BILINGUAL EDUCATION REGULATIONS

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday my colleague, the ranking Republican member of our committee, JAMES JEFFORDS, joined me in a bipartisan letter to the Department of Education expressing concern over regulations published on June 18, 1986, for implementation of the amendments enacted in 1984 for the Bilingual Education Act.

We are concerned with the timing of the regulations relative to their implementation. This late date is certain to cause problems for local school officials by requiring them to respond while most of the key personnel are in summer recess. This delay is due to the administration's own slowness in meeting its timetable for issuing regulations.

These regulations call for new parental and teacher consultations over provisions of the programs, and, during the summer, many of these individuals will not be available. In addition, there are new provisions in the regulations which were not part of the proposed regulations issued in November 1985. These additions are in violation of statutory provisions of 20 U.S.C. 431 and 5 U.S.C. 553. School districts would be subject to requirements they have not seen nor been given an opportunity to comment upon.

Furthermore, under section 431 of the General Education Provisions Act, these regulations cannot become effective immediately. There is a mandatory, statutory waiting period of at least 45 days for review by Congress of the regulations, and our congressional schedule may cause further problems with the dates for the regulations to become effective.

Finally, we realize that these new regulations have positive aspects to them, and eventually may help to strengthen the local programs. However, for the reasons stated above, the Secretary may be jeopardizing any substantive improvements by creating procedural and administrative errors. We think that Secretary Bennett will agree that the programs should not be subjected to litigation because of hasty action.

We have asked the Secretary to postpone using these regulations until they have had ample public comment. In the meantime, we have recommended that the Department use the general program regulations for the Department of Education, the EDGAR regulations, as a basis for awarding new grants for school year 1986–87.

This is a vital issue addressing the practical viability of these programs. It transcends politics or philosophy. That is why we have taken this bipartisan step. Due to its importance, I am placing a copy of our letter to Secretary Bennett in the RECORD. I urge all of my colleagues to contact the Department of Education and support our effort.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR,
Washington, DC, June 25, 1986.

Hon. WILLIAM BENNETT,
Secretary, U.S. Department of Education, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY BENNETT: Pursuant to the authority of Sec. 431 of the General Education Provisions Act, the Committee on Education and Labor has carefully reviewed the Final Regulation on bilingual education published by the Department on June 18, 1986. We would like to call to your attention a number of practical and legal problems relating to this issue, separate from any objections we might have to the substance of the Final Regulations.

We are concerned with the timing of these regulations relative to their implementation in Fiscal Year 1986. This concern is heightened by the fact that only seven weeks before some school districts begin classes for the 1986–1987 academic year, no bilingual education grants have been processed or applications received. This situation seems to be solely caused by the Department's plan to apply these June 18 regulations in this academic year.

We strongly recommend that you reconsider the implementation of these regulations for the upcoming school year. School districts are now in summer recess. At this late date, it will be difficult, indeed, for Superintendents and others to construct program applications for this coming year based upon current regulations with which they are familiar. It will be practically impossible for them to do the same with a new set of rules, which are substantially different.

Additionally, these regulations call for new teachers and parental consultation requirements at the local level. Such consultations cannot be held until parents and teachers return at the end of the summer.

Finally, under Sec. 431 of the General Education Provisions Act, these regulations cannot become effective immediately. There is a waiting period of at least 45 days, which means that the regulations cannot possibly become effective until the beginning of August. Furthermore, under the same statute, if Congress takes certain recesses (one of which is currently scheduled for sometime in August), the effective date of the regulations would be postponed until the middle of September.

We also note that the statutory provisions of 20 U.S.C. 431 and 5 U.S.C. 553, relating to the requirement that the Department publish regulations for comment, have been violated. The Final Regulations published on June 18, 1986 contain substantial quantities of new material. If the Department intends to change its initial proposal to such an extent, we believe that it should publish the regulations as a new proposal, and submit them to further public scrutiny and comment.

We recognize that Bilingual Education is an areaa in which many people have strong feelings. These regulations do have positive aspects which will help strengthen the programs. However, for the reasons stated above, any major substantive program improvements may be jeopardized by creating administrative and procedural barriers if these new regulations are implemented. We know that you will agree that these programs should not be subjected to future compliance problems by hasty action. For this reason, we ask that you immediately begin to process and approve applications for the 1986-1987 academic year based upon the EDGAR regulations and that any new regulations be made applicable to the 1987-1988 academic year. Further, given the new material in the regulations, we suggest that they be promulgated for comment.

Sincerely,

AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS,
Chairman.
JAMES M. JEFFORDS,
Ranking Minority Member.

THE SPIRIT OF AMERICAN LIBERTY

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention to a truly inspirational essay written by an eighth grade student from the 45th District of California. Julie Russell was asked to write an essay on the woman she admires the most. The woman Julie chose was Lady Liberty. I think that Julie captures the spirit of American freedom. Julie's essay won first place in a contest sponsored by the American Association of University Women in the south bay area of San Diego.

As I read Julie's essay, I asked myself, how many other people, young and old, have found hope and solace in the eyes of this woman. As we embark on the 100th birthday of the Statue of Liberty, we can be reminded of the meaning and the values that she holds through the thoughts and words of this fine young lady, Miss Julie Russell.

A DISTINGUISHED WOMAN I ADMIRE

(By Julie Russell)

She came from France in 1884, to represent the friendship between France and the United States. She was the symbol of a free government, "Liberty" for all. Within her, we find the meaning of freedom and the high ideals of every free man. Through her no man can be imprisoned, at least, not in the mind. This great woman, of whom I speak so highly, is the Statue of Liberty, properly named, Liberty Enlighting The World.

The Statue of Liberty has lived for a hundred years, and in those years she has given hope to the suppressed, the hungry, the disabled and the wishful. She has given what no other woman has or can even hope to give.

She has watched immigrants come into Ellis Island. She has seen some accepted into the United States and some turned away. She has seen war, death and disease The Statue of Liberty has also seen birth, love, and happiness. Through the good and the bad times, her eyes have always shone with hope and love, and above all, the dream of freedom.

In her, you can almost feel what our forefathers were thinking of and wishing for, when they so valiantly fought in the Revolution. What every American wanted: freedom and the right to govern one's own life, the right to believe in what you want to, to have no dictatorship but stand as one with your countrymen.

Many come to view her beauty, to see her, to feel all of what she feels and what she represents. She represents a proud woman, holding in her right arm a great torch, raised high into the air, in her left, she holds a tablet bearing the inscription of 1776, the date of the Declaration of Independence, and at her feet rests shackles, representing over-thrown tyranny.

I admire the Statue of Liberty because she stands for everything I believe in. One cannot help but admire her, she came from afar and offered only friendship. We accepted her into our hearts and every American fell in love with her. She mended strong differences between France and the United States. Since the first time she set foot upon American soil she has done nothing but good.

She has withstood the strife and stress the world has set upon her. However, nature has taken a toll on her once great beauty. She is presently undergoing a face-lift, a touch up of the outer surface. Her inner beauty remains unscathed. We shall always remember her and what she stands for, she is the heartbeat of America. On the day of July 4, 1986, her beauty will again shine. She is the Statue of Liberty, and I will always admire her, because she is the past, present, and future.

INCLUSION OF PERSONS WITH COMMUNICABLE DISEASES UNDER REHABILITATION ACT IS INAPPROPRIATE

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of myself, Mr. DORNAN, Mr. SILJANDER, and Mrs. BENTLEY to introduce a bill which will reaffirm the intent of Congress with respect to whether individuals with contagious diseases may be considered handicapped pursuant to the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and therefore receive the protections of that law. Although I firmly believe that the legislative history of the act indicates that Congress did not intend to include persons with "contagious diseases" in the definition of "handicapped," some State courts have interpreted similar State statutes differently. To avoid such erroneous decisions in Federal court, I am introducing this legislation.

The Supreme Court will decide this question in October of this year when it decides the case of Arline versus The School Board of Nassau County. The school board is appealing the district court's decision that tuberculosis is a "handicap" and that persons infected with this and other contagious diseases are protected by the antidiscrimination provisions of the Rehabilitation Act. Should the Court affirm the district court ruling, diseases such as hepatitis, AIDS, and the plague could be the subject of affirmative action suits.

The inclusion of persons with communicable diseases under the Rehabilitation Act is inappropriate because such persons do not meet the three-pronged criterion for coverage. First, the Rehabilitation Act requires "handicapped individuals" to sustain a "physical or mental impairment that substantially limits major life activities." Since persons with a contagious disease may or may not be limited in their major life activities, they should not be automatically covered.

Second, the act requires that "handicapped individuals" be "otherwise qualified" and meet all of a program's requirements "in spite of their handicap." This statutory requirement has been interpreted in case law to mean that employment of a handicapped person must not "endanger the health and safety of others." It is difficult to imagine a situation in which a person with a communicable disease would not endanger the health of colleagues merely by their presence on the job.

Third, the act requires that employers "reasonably accommodate" handicapped persons provided that the accommodation does not place an "unreasonable burden" on the employer. In the case of contagious disease, protective garments and barriers would have to be provided to isolate the infected person and protect the health of the noninfected worker. The expense and inconvenience of such action places an unnecessary and inappropriate burden on the employer and reaches far beyond the bounds of what may be considered "reasonable accommodation."

While it is apparent on the face of the statute that "contagious diseases" were never contemplated for inclusion within the definition of "handicapped" as it relates to the affirmative action employment provisions, legislation is needed to respond to the erroneous interpretation of some State courts of similar State statutes modeled after the Federal law. For example, the Florida Commission on Human Relations ruled in January 1986, that the Broward County government illegally discriminated against a man with AIDS when it fired him. The commission held that AIDS is a "physical handicap" and therefore AIDS victims are protected by a Florida law prohibiting employment discrimination. In a similar incident, a Virginia patent draftsman with AIDS is suing the D.C. employer who fired him based on a Virginia law protecting disabled persons from discrimination. In another case, a Virginia doctor with AIDS is suing the Fairfax City Health Clinic which terminated his employment for discrimination against the handicapped. This handful of cases illustrates the misapplication of the law as applied to persons with communicable disease.

When Congress amended the Rehabilitation Act in 1978 to exclude alcoholics and drug users, it was responding to a ruling by the Attorney General that alcoholics and drug users were "handicapped" pursuant to the Rehabilitation Act. A similar situation exists with respect to infected individuals and Congress must again take action to affirm what the legislative history indicates, that persons with contagious diseases are not handicapped and should not be covered by the affirmative action provisions of the act. The legislative history of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 never references contagious diseases but does indicate that Congress intended to preserve public safety at all costs.

If the Court sustains the district court's ruling, then it is possible that the Federal Government, or any employer receiving Federal assistance may be faced with affirmative action suits. Such a result is absurd in that it would require our Federal law to, on the one hand, exclude persons with contagious diseases from entering our country under U.S. immigration law while requiring Federal employers to practice affirmative action in hiring these persons. The legislation I am introducing would permit Congress to reaffirm its intent and preserve a law which was intended to protect truly disabled persons.

UNITED STATES WILL NOT TOLERATE INJUSTICE ANYWHERE

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert for the RECORD an article which appeared on June 20, 1986, in the Washington Post, entitled "Passage of Anti-Pretoria Sanctions Marks Milestone for Hill Veteran."

Mr. Speaker, Representative RONALD DELLUMS has always been an outspoken leader in the area of human rights for people throughout the entire world.

On Wednesday, June 19, Representative DELLUMS led the fight to pass his legislation in the form of a substitute to H.R. 4868, which called for a trade embargo and complete divestment by U.S. companies and citizens, of their holdings in South Africa.

The passage in the House of this legislation is monumental in itself, for it is the first time that divestment legislation has ever been passed by either side.

Mr. Speaker, on June 19, the United States made history by sending a very clear message to the South African Government as well as to the rest of the world—particularly the other important trading countries of Great Britain, West Germany, and Japan—that we will not tolerate injustice anywhere it exists. We will not tolerate conditions that parallel the way Jews were treated in Germany in the thirties and forties.

During that time, people and governments commonly pleaded ignorance to inhumane conditions and atrocities committed against Jews, Slavs, and gypsies. Today we live in an era of communication satellites—which makes direct transmission of events possible from anyplace in the world at any time. We cannot use the excuse of ignorance.

Mr. Speaker, it is important that we realize the Senate must follow the leadership of the House. They must act now.

DELLUMS: EXONERATION IS HIS—PASSAGE OF ANTI-PRETORIA SANCTIONS MARKS MILESTONE FOR HILL VETERAN

(By James R. Dickenson)

To Rep. Ronald V. Dellums (D-Calif.), the House passage Wednesday of his stringent economic sanctions against South Africa was "a shot heard 'round the world." But he also views it as personal "exoneration" from the judgment that he is a moral gadfly and maverick who is out of the mainstream of power in the House.

The House astonished itself and many observers by passing Dellums' bill calling for a trade embargo and complete divestment by U.S. companies and citizens of their holdings in South Africa. It was the first time that divestment legislation has been passed by either house, and Dellums' version was far more stringent than the bill most observers expected to be passed.

In an interview yesterday, Dellums described the action as a major blow to apartheid that can't be undone or turned back. He also views it as a refutation of the belief of many—which is "personally painful" to him—that he is just another flaky politician from Berkeley.

" 'Berserkely,' a lot of them call it," he said, smiling ruefully.

"Yesterday's action was the shot heard 'round the world, that was heard in Pretoria," he continued. "We haven't simply altered the debate on apartheid, we've changed the environment. Whatever the dynamics of that moment, its effect can't be changed.

"Whatever comes out of the Senate and conference has to be stronger. We've opened new possibilities because we've moved the fear barrier back. We politicians live with a multiplicity of fears."

This view was shared on both sides of the aisle in the House.

"Yesterday, the House went to Ron Dellums; Ron Dellums didn't go to the House," said Rep. Jim Leach (R-Iowa). "Bill Gray went to the House, but the House went to Dellums."

Leach was referring to a more moderate sanctions bill sponsored by Rep. William H. Gray III (D-Pa.), chairman of the House Budget Committee and one of the House's most influential insiders. It was expected to pass but was never voted on because of the surprise call-up and passage of Dellums' bill, which was the designated substitute for Gray's.

Passage of his bill was a personal milestone for Dellums, 50, a veteran of nearly 16 years in the House.

"This is the highest point of my political life, the most significant and personally rewarding," he said. "It's been a long journey to this moment."

His next most satisfying moment was his presentation of the alternate military budget in 1982, which proposed reducing spending by more than $50 billion and canceling several nuclear missile programs. It got only 55 votes, about a third from the Black Caucus.

In many ways, Dellums is a paradox.

He is still the outspoken liberal he has always been, but his colleagues now see him as one of the most gentlemanly, considerate, even courtly members on Capitol Hill. They also value him as a "moral force for reordering priorities," in Leach's words, but think he's "too liberal to be in the mainstream."

Dellums, however, finds that the role of moral-outsider-gadfly leaves a lot to be desired.

"I came here not to project my personality but to project ideas, to lift the level of debate above rancor and personal attack," he said. "We're talking war and peace, life and death, man, and if you carry controversial ideas in a controversial personality, how can you ever get anything done?

The problem, he contends, is that he came to Congress during the counterculture revolution of the 1960s and the anti-Vietnam war protest and became the personification of Berkeley and all it symbolizes.

"My humanity got lost in the process," he said. "It has been personally painful to be considered just a gadfly, a maverick, a strong speaker, but outside the mainstream of power. What yesterday was about is that people have to see me in a serious way. This has been an exonerating factor."

He denies that he has just been an "off-the-wall voice."

"I introduced the first divestment bill 16 years ago," he recalled. "Did I come to the country or did the country come to me?"

When he first came to the Congress, Dellums seemed to be challenging its very legitimacy and that of the leadership, holding unofficial "hearings" on Vietnam war atrocities and racism in the military. Over the years, however, he's mellowed.

His seniority entitled him in 1983 to become chairman of the military construction subcommittee, and he surprised his colleagues by his considerate dealings with them and his skill at managing legislation.

Dellums said that on Wednesday, he could sense momentum for his bill building during the day.

"Members, including Republicans, would come up to me and say, 'Ron, I wasn't with you last year but I am this time.' I could also tell from the spectrum of people who were asking for time to speak on its behalf, including a greater number of Republicans. I knew we were gaining but not necessarily that we'd win."

As floor manager of the bill, Dellums had 30 minutes of debate time to mete out to his supporters.

"I don't like to give a colleague just a minute or 30 seconds to speak," he said. "But there were so many I had no choice. When [Rep. Charles E.] Bennett [D-Fla.] got up to speak, I had to fight back tears because I knew where he was coming from."

After the voice vote by which the measure passed, Dellums expected its opponents to call for a recorded vote.

"I sure wasn't going to ask for it but I was astonished that no one else did," he said. "I guess it was because they realized that if they did they'd have to account for their votes."

A staff aide speculated that conservatives who oppose sanctions wanted a bill so tough that the Republican-controlled Senate would balk at it. He also contended that the House leadership didn't want to chance defeating Dellums' measure because that would look like the House was backing down.

"They blundered into principle," he said.

THE SILVER SPRING MONKEYS

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, the National Institute of Health [NIH] appears to be blantantly disregarding the will of the House in regard to the plight of the Silver Spring monkeys. I joined 253 of our fellow colleagues in a letter to Dr. James Wyngaarden requesting that the 15 primates be transferred to a sanctuary in San Antonio, TX. House Concurrent Resolution 351, now cosponsored by 120 Members, expressed a sense of Congress against the outrageous refusal by NIH to transfer the monkeys to Primarily Primates, Inc.

Yet, NIH is attempting to maneuver around the pending congressional resolution in an underhanded transfer of the primates to Delta Regional Primate Center, a research facility with a deplorable reputation.

In 1979, Delta lost a primate contract and resultant Federal funding because of an excessive, 85 percent-mortality rate of primates in 1 year at one facility. In 1980, the mortality rate of primates at the center was 57 percent, still considered extremely high. Finally, in 1985, more Rhesis monkeys died from accidents within the facility than from experiments, totaling 300 monkeys. This year, Delta has reported violent behavior in the breeding colony where they are proposing to place the 15 Silver Spring primates. This is hardly what I would call a sanctuary or sanctuary-like surroundings for primates who have lost use of limbs as a result of IBR experiments.

Those of us who signed the letter to NIH and who sponsored H. Con. Res. 351, were sincerely asking for the release of the monkeys to a "real" sanctuary. One where they could live their lives peacefully and at no cost to the taxpayer. In this most recent move by NIH, it seems the Federal agency has justified what the animal community has felt all along: Compassion and humane treatment of these living creatures has somewhere, somehow been overlooked and ignored by an entire research community.

NIH, we ask you to reconsider and transfer these animals to a true sanctuary.

TRIBUTE TO 40 HISPANIC CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR RECIPIENTS

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I would like my colleagues to join me in recognizing the 40 Hispanic Congressional Medal of Honor recipients. These men valiantly displayed their courage on the battlefields in order to protect their fellow Americans at home. With their dedication to the ideals embodied in the United States, our Nation would not be as important in the world today.

Hispanics have played an integral role in this Nation's illustrious history. Hispanics bravely fought against the British during the American Revolution. Hispanics were among the first defenders of the Alamo. And, Hispanics were the most decorated ethnic group of World War II.

We should consider these 40 inidividuals as role models to be respected and admired for their actions demonstrating their ability to act above and beyond the call of duty.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to recognize the following heroes for their committment to the betterment of the United States of America; Pvt. Bruce Anderson, U.S. Army; Sgt. John P. Baca, U.S. Army; Ordinary Seaman Phillip Bazaar, U.S. Navy; M. Sgt. Roy P. Benavidez; Sgt. Jose Calugas, U.S. Army; Anthony Casamento; Pfc. Mike Colaillio, U.S. Army; Capt. Reginald B. Desiderlo, U.S. Army; Sp4c. Daniel Fernandez, U.S. Army; Pfc. Fernando L. Garcia, U.S. Marine Corps; Sgt. Macario S. Garcia, U.S. Army; L/Cpl. Emilio A. De La Garza, Jr., U.S. Marine Corps; Pfc. Edward Gomez, U.S. Marine Corps Reserves; Pfc. Harold Gonsalves, U.S. Marine Corps Reserves; Pfc. David M. Gonzales, U.S. Army; Sgt. Alfredo Gonzales, U.S. Marine Corps: Sgt. Ambrosio S. Guillen, U.S. Marine Corps; Cpl. Rodolfo P. Hernandez, U.S. Army; Pfc. Silvestre S. Herrera, U.S. Army; L/Cpl. Jose Francisco Jiminez, U.S. Marine Corps; 1st Lt. Baldomero Lopez, U.S. Marine Corps; Sgt. Jose M. Lopez, U.S. Army; Pfc. Carlos James Lozada, U.S. Army; Cpl. Benito Martinez, U.S. Army; Pvt. Joe P. Martinez, U.S. Army; Pvt. Jose B. Nisperios, U.S. Army; Pfc. Eugene A. Obregon, U.S. Marine Corps; Seaman John Ortega, U.S. Navy; Pfc. Manuel Perez, Jr., U.S. Army; Pfc. Cleto Rodriguez, U.S. Army; Sgt. Joseph C. Rodriguez, U.S. Army; Capt. Euripides Rubio, U.S. Army; Pfc. Alejandro Renteria Ruiz, U.S. Army; Sp4c. Hector Santiago-Colon, U.S. Army; Pvt. France Silva, U.S. Marine Corps; FM2 Telesforo Trinidad, U.S. Navy; Pfc. Jose F. Valdez, U.S. Army; Maj. M. Sando Vargas, Jr., U.S. Marine Corps; Sgt. Ysmael R. Villegas, U.S. Army; and 1st Sgt. Maximo Yabes.

PCB'S ARE HAZARDOUS TO YOUR HEALTH NOW

HON. FRANK McCLOSKEY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced legislation which will assure the American public that we are truly concerned about the health of our people and the environment. It will show them that we do not just pass laws without concern for how they are administered. It will reaffirm that, while we do allow our agencies to handle the day-to-day tasks of carrying out the law, we do not adbicate our oversight of the important policy decisions related to implementing our legislative intent.

One such concern of mine is an apparent bureaucratic time warp involving the cancer-causing material, polychlorinated biphenyls, commonly known as PCB's. This material was banned in the late 1970's, after it was found to be associated with liver cancer, respiratory disorders, and birth defects. At that time, Congress passed the Toxic Substances Control Act to regulate the treatment, storage, and disposal of PCB's. EPA recently announced that it intends to consider regulation of PCB's under the more strict and stringent rules of RCRA. Included would be the very important consideration of the unreasonable risks associated with the location of any facility which treats, stores, or disposes of the material. However, the process could take more than a year. In the meantime, Unison, a subsidiary of Union Carbide, is completing construction of a plant in Henderson, KY, directly across the Ohio River from my district in Indiana, which will separate PCB's from a solvent which itself purportedly contains toxic materials already listed under RCRA.

EPA has stated that it has no control over the siting of this plant since it is regulated under TSCA which supposedly has no specific siting criteria and that it is primarily a local issue. What is alarming about this situation is that this plant is being constructed close to the Ohio River which is the primary source of drinking water for several communities, and on the New Madrid Geological Fault. If RCRA criteria were applied, no permit would have been issued until there was a determination of whether the site constituted an unreasonable risk. This would have taken into consideration the potential for flooding, the geological conditions, and possibly related matters such as population density. It is my understanding that EPA should be promulgating other specific siting criteria in the very near future. Why wait when the potential hazards have already been determined?

This amendment will rectify the time warp between final listing of this dangerous chemical under RCRA and present determination of the risks it poses to our environment and the health of our citizens. It merely requires that siting regulations in RCRA be applied to any facility which treats, stores, or disposes of PCB's. The potential risks of PCB's are known today; let us act today so that tomorrow we will not have to apologize to our children and grandchildren with the lame excuse of bureaucratic redtape.

DR. EDWARD FERRAND

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to invite my colleagues to join me and the people of New York in honoring Dr. Edward Ferrand who is retiring from city government as the assistant commissioner of the New York City Department of Environmental Protection.

Dr. Ferrand has dedicated more than 20 years to public life and environmental protection. During this time he has held many positions of leadership with such esteemed bodies as the National Academy of Sciences and the New York Academy of Medicine. Recently, he was appointed president of the New York Lung Association. He is recognized as being one of the top environmental scientists in city government.

Dr. Ferrand is more than a talented scientist who has dedicated his life to a cleaner and healthier environment. He is a unique civil servant who has always made every effort to be accessible to the people and communities of New York and to supply information and technical assistance to concened citizens on issues affecting the urban environment. My constituents and I, like all New Yorkers, have benefited enormously from the sound scientific expertise and analysis Dr. Ferrand has so often provided.

Before my election to Congress in 1976, I served in the New York City Council as chair of its Environment Committee. In that capacity, I came to rely on Dr. Ferrand and his wealth of knowledge in constructing some of the fundamental environmental laws of our city. His assistance was invaluable in developing key provisions of our city's air pollution code.

My respect for Dr. Ferrand has only increased with the passage of years. In 1982, the U.S. Department of Agriculture [USDA] planned to fumigate a warehouse, located in the congressional district which I represent, with a toxic gas. The Department, however, failed to notify the surrounding residential community of its plans and was about to proceed without proper safety precautions. I contacted Dr. Ferrand for assistance and requested that he go on-site and make safety recommendations. As the result of Dr. Ferrand's efforts, substantial safeguards were developed, and the USDA agreed to implement them in all of its fumigation projects throughout New York City. This is but one example of the professionalism, commitment, and caring that Dr. Ferrand has demonstrated throughout his career. His initiative in dealing with the major environmental challenges to our urban areas will be sorely missed.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate Dr. Ferrand for his years of exemplary service to New Yorkers, and am pleased to report his good work to my colleagues. I hope that you will join me, my constituents, and such respected organizations as the Natural Resources Defense Council, the Environmental Defense Fund, the Brooklyn Lung Association, the New York Committee for Occupational Safety and Health, the Clean Air Campaign, and the New York Sierra Club in commending Dr. Ferrand for his numerous accomplishments and wish him success in his future endeavors. Successs for Dr. Ferrand undoutedly means success for all of us in the battle to protect the public's health and environment.

STATEMENT PRAISING THE PASSAGE OF H.R. 4060

HON. JOHN McCAIN

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, June 24, the House of Representatives passed an important piece of legislation, H.R. 4060, which makes a step toward correcting the inequities created by the implementation of the Gramm-Rudman budget mechanism.

Like a majority of my colleagues, I supported the Gramm-Rudman concept because of the obvious need to attack the deficit problem. I am very aware that correcting this problem will take sacrifice on the part of all Americans. However, I believe the law we adopted, as implemented, has unfairly singled out military retirees, their pensioned widows, retired Federal workers, railroad retirees, and certain others. These groups were singled out and temporarily denied receipt of the 3.1-percent cost-of-living adjustment increase that has been accorded to those receiving Social Security benefits, tier I railroad retirement benefits, and veterans compensation and pension benefits. I believe that excluding these groups from receiving their COLA increase is not only inequitable, but blatantly discriminatory.

The original language of Gramm-Rudman "suspended" these COLA's only until March 1, 1986. Unfortunately, the first sequestration ordered by the law did not restore them. Ever since it became clear that this mistake was being made, I have pushed for a legislative remedy. As a cosponsor of H.R. 4060, I was proud to support its passage earlier this week.

The bill, in its original form, prohibits the reduction or suspension by Presidential order or statute of any cost-of-living adjustment payable to civil service retirees during calendar year 1987. Under the amendment adopted by the House, similar treatment will be extended to recipients of military, Foreign Service, Central Intelligence Agency, disability, and tier II railroad retirement benefits.

As my colleagues know, both the Senate and House budget resolutions provide for cost-of-living adjustments. Therefore I do not expect future Gramm-Rudman sequestrations to affect the pensions of our retirees. It is unfair to single these people out to accept cuts that others are not asked to accept.

Finally, I would like to point out that this bill has bipartisan support; well over half the Members of the House are listed as cosponsors, and is endorsed by a number of important groups, including the National Association of Retired Federal Employees. It is an excellent piece of legislation which will correct a very inequitable situation, and I look forward to its passage by the Senate and approval by the President.

GRACE DAY

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, the time has come for this body to finally enact some of the recommendations of the Grace Commission.

Recent polls have shown, by overwhelming margins, that the American people want the deficit reduced through spending reductions, not tax increases. Given this attitude and the constraints of Gramm-Rudman, it is obvious that large cuts in domestic programs, some popular with the folks back home, are going to have to be made.

But while we consider these large reductions in Federal programs, we must also seize the initiative and implement some absolutely vital reforms as outlined by the Grace Commission.

For years now, the Grace Commission report has done nothing but collect dust on shelves all over Washington; this despite numerous studies showing that many of the recommendations would result in substantial savings. But now, due to the fine bipartisan work of the Grace Commission caucus, the time has come to find common areas of agreement and join in a serious effort to enact a comprehensive legislative package of Grace Commission recommendations.

I don't for a minute suppose that all the proposals we will be introducing today will be without controversy. But we must make the effort. The need for effective cost control and streamlined management has never been greater.

I am proud to be joining my colleagues on the Grace Commission caucus in helping to make today Grace Day. Our constituents deserve efficient Government. This is a chance to accomplish that. I therefore urge my colleagues to support the caucus' efforts on Grace Day and help enact the many cost-saving recommendations the caucus members will be introducing.

A TRIBUTE TO JACOB LAWRENCE, AMERICAN PAINTER

HON. JOHN MILLER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in the artist Jacob Lawrence, Washington State plays host to a national treasure, a treasure which the Seattle Art Museum will soon share with the Nation.

The new exhibition, Jacob Lawrence, American Painter, will go on display July 10, 1986, at the Seattle Art Museum and in September will begin a 15-month national tour. Featuring nearly 150 paintings spanning 50 years of work, this is the most comprehensive survey ever made of Lawrence's work, and his first major solo exhibition in more than a decade, when he was honored with a retrospective at the Whitney Museum of Art in New York.

As one of the Nation's most important artists of the 20th century, Jacob Lawrence, notes curator Bruce Guenther, has created a uniquely American vision, one that affirms the place of the individual in our society, brings honor to the struggle for independence and the value of hard labor.

I have long been a fan of Mr. Lawrence. From his depiction of the aftermath in Hiroshima to his portraits of American heros like Harriet Tubman and Frederick Douglass, the eloquence, passion and beauty of Lawrence's vision has allowed me and countless others to enter a world of sometimes infinite horror and always boundless hope. It is a vision, that I am proud to say is on display in some of the world's most famous art collections including the Whitney Museum, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Museum of Modern Art and the Vatican.

Lawrence began his career in a New York City settlement house. His medium: crayons. But his teachers at the children's center and later at the WPA Harlem Art Workshop saw the promise of a great talent in his vibrant, evocative city street scenes. That was 1929. By 1941, Lawrence's works were being exhibited in one of New York City's most prestigious art galleries to great and lasting acclaim.

Today, after many years touched by personal triumph ad tragedy, Lawrence is a full professor at the University of Washington where he continues to work and share the roots of his extraordinary vision with his fortunate students.

With these words, I can honor this great artist, but I cannot hope to convey the measure of his vision. If you are lucky enough to have the opportunity, go see Jacob Lawrence, American Painter. It will be an experience you won't soon forget.

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, the human rights situation has continued to deteriorate in Romania in the few months that I last expressed myself on this subject. Cultural and self-determination rights violations against the national minorities in the country, particularly against the 2.5 million Hungarians of Transylvania, and the blatant anti-religion campaign of the Ceausescu regime go on unabated. While the President has asked for another extension of most-favored-nation [MFN] status for Romania this month, he himself has expressed grave concern about the human rights record of that country, especially with regard to Christian believers.

The persecution of the national minorities, including the 330,000 Germans in the country, shows no sign of coming to an end and has steadily increased since 1982. Police brutality, murders, disappearances and prison sentences on trumped-up charges abound. Most of the 20,000 Bibles sent as a gift of the World Reformed Alliance to the Hungarian Reformed Church via government authorities were seized and crushed into toilet paper. Rev. Sandor Havadtoy testified to this in the House and Senate last year, bringing with him a roll of the toilet paper with 16 words or parts of words from the Bible published by the alliance. Catholic priests have been beaten so badly that one, Rev. James Cielik, had his hands broken and another, Reverend Geza Palfi, died of his injuries. Reverend Cielik's "crime" was that he would not reveal information received under the seal of the confessional while Rev. Palfi was murdered because he preached that Christmas should be a public holiday in Romania.

The cultural rights of the minorities, particularly the Hungarians, are either severely curtailed or remain nonexistent. Higher education courses in the Hungarian language, something which was commonplace as recently as 15 years ago, do not exist anymore. Hungarian TV and radio programs have been abolished, book production is steadily decreasing and many Hungarian authors are banned in Transylvanian theaters and schools.

A more harmful development is the emergence since 1983 of anti-Hungarian hate literature in Romania. Hungarians are depicted as exploiters, barbarians, murderers, and undesirable aliens from which the Romanians should rid Transylvania. The Ceausescu regime tolerates this outrage—perhaps even encourages it—in order to divert the attention of the people from the gross lack of electricity, heating and foodstuffs.

Under these circumstances, exposed in the State Department's 19th semi-annual report on the implementation of the Helsinki accords, April–October 1985, our Nation should demand substantial remedies from the Romanian Government if we are to continue granting MFN status to that country. The sufferings of the minorities and the nation of Romania as a whole should not be forgotten.

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE HIGHLAND RESTAURANT IN PITTSFIELD, MA

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to commend one of Pittsfield, MA longtime business fixtures for its half-century of operation. On May 11, the Highland Restaurant celebrated its 50th anniversary of providing fine food at reasonable prices to the good people of Berkshire County.

The restaurant was inaugurated in 1936 at its present location by brothers-in-law Dominick Sondrini and Angelo Balardini. However, the success of the establishment began long before its doors first opened.

In the early days, many afternoons witnessed the gathering of the "Lakewood Paisans," if for no other reason than to hash over the day's events. It was then that a network, a brotherhood that would bring charm to the restaurant, truly began. The Highland became an extension, a kind of meeting place for that brotherhood. In addition to the fine food and warm atmosphere, one could always find a discussion to participate in, a debate to join, or an opinion to hear.

As a young State senator, I myself stretched many a dinner hour into the wee hours of the morning, going toe to toe with my dear friend Angelo over the age-old Red Sox-Yankees dispute, he being a proclaimed fan of that other team from the Empire State. I especially enjoyed the annual awards banquet for the Pittsfield Restaurant Association, of which Angelo was president. I spoke every year, and every year you could count on roughly the same 100 local proprietors, sheepishly indulging in gourmet delicacies that only Angelo could orchestrate.

Situated in a central location, the establishment quickly gained a favorable reputation, becoming a haven for business people, lawyers, local political figures, and the all time great hero/athletes from every sport and stature. Countless were the topics discussed over a scallop sandwich or a bowl of pasta fagoli, and it was often said that the brick-faced, Fenn Street structure was the unofficial community boardroom where important local policy issues of the times were discussed. The weightiest of these discussions probably took place in the back corner booth, where at 12:15 each afternoon, the likes of Quirico, Scolari, and Cimini would place themselves.

Since that period, the operation has undergone a number of expansions and is presently run by Sondrini's son Rudy and his partner Leon Arace. They now can accommodate 135 hungry patrons at any given time. However, those qualities that made the Highland popular 50 years ago still hold true today. The traditions of speedy service and great food are still the attraction, and any weekday lunch hour will find the community's central figures exploring the finer points of pending issues.

I commend the restaurant not just for what it is, but for its adaptibility. It has passed the test of time as five decades of change have served only to increase its appeal.

Best of luck to the Highland Restaurant in Pittsfield, on its drive toward another 50 years of service to Berkshire County. Thank you Mr. Speaker.

AN ARTISTIC DISCOVERY

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, today we were proud to honor more than 200 young American artists. At the same time, in the Capitol people were protesting aid to the Contras, and throughout the world there continued to be other trouble spots. Yet we paused to cut a ribbon to open our Congressional Art Exhibition. And this was not as inappropriate as it seemed.

We spend a lot of time around here worrying about the affairs of States and of nations.

Sometimes we get so buried in our rhetoric that we forget whom we govern. We, as Members, represent millions of American citizens, and for our younger generation, especially, we have a responsibility to ensure that the United States remains a country of promise and of opportunity.

The arts alone elevate the human spirit; they highlight the common traits of people of all countries; and they ensure our legacy for future generations. It is, therefore, imperative that artistic opportunities are available for all our young people. What makes the arts so special to all of us here is that they belong to no political party. And in that bipartisan spirit, we are proud to celebrate the opening of this fifth consecutive Congressional Art Exhibition—the culmination of a joint effort by Members from nearly every State in the Nation.

Over 100 talented young artists gathered today with Members to officially open An Artistic Discovery—the national exhibition of winning artworks by high school students from 226 congressional districts across the country.

Many persons deserve our thanks for the success of today's opening. The entire exhibit is only possible through the tremendous efforts of the Architect of the Capitol George White and his excellent staff. Roger Stevens, Chairman of the Kennedy Center, Charlton Heston, currently appearing in The Caine Mutiny Court-Martial, Anthony Edwards and Meg Ryan from the movie Top Gun—all added a special dimension to today's ceremony.

Most importantly, Roger Smith and the General Motors Corp. demonstrated their commitment to this effort through their continued support over the past 3 years. General Motors has always been a leader in caring about the future of each generation through strong support for the arts and education. GM's national concerto competition and the "Best of Class" program—honoring academic excellence in high school seniors—are but two other examples of GM's dedication and support for the arts and education. GM's awarness of the importance of cultural endeavors is exemplified by their suport and involvement in all areas of the arts—music, theatre, museums, visual and performing arts.

The outstanding collection of paintings, drawings and prints will be on display in the Connon tunnel through May 1987. The exhibit brings together the activities of House Members who conducted local art competitions which involved thousands of high school students. In fact, over the 5 years of An Artistic Discovery, Members have conducted over 1,000 individual competitions involving over 60,000 students.

The success of An Artistic Discovery demonstrated the wonderful opportunity we have, as Members of Congress, to encourage the artistic talents of today's youth. The national exhibition of winning artworks is a tribute to the great creative spirit of young people throughout the country.

Congratulations to Members, students, teachers, family, and staff who helped to make our fifth annual Congressional Art Exhibition our best ever.

CONDEMNING ATROCITIES AGAINST THE BAHA'I COMMUNITY IN IRAN

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my indignation and outrage at the great atrocities being visited upon the Baha'i community of Iran by that country's fundamentalist Shi'ite government. Two brutal deaths in recent weeks have again highlighted this tragic situation.

Mr. Farid Behmardi, a prominent leader of the Baha'i community in Tehran, was subjected to prolonged beatings and torture in prison, and on June 10, 1986, was executed by hanging. His family was not informed of his death until after his body had been buried by government authorities.

Less than a month earlier, a Baha'i man and his 15-year-old son were dragged into nearby mountains by a Moslem mob where they were brutally attacked and thrown from a cliff. The mob assumed the two were dead and left them. Their bodies were discovered later by a passing car—the father was still alive, in critical condition but the teenage son was dead.

These are only the two most recent examples of the persecution of the Baha'is in Iran. Iranian Shi'ite religious leaders consider the Baha'is to be heretics and demand their conversion to Islam. As a result of official persecution of the Baha'is over the last 7 years, over 190 Baha'is have been put to death for refusing to renounce their faith. Some 750 Baha'is are presently in jail for refusing to convert to Islam and 5 are threatened with imminent execution.

The Baha'i faith professes the equality of races and of sexes, the harmony of religion and science, the unity of mankind, and of universal peace. In sharp contrast to this, the Baha'i community in Iran has been subject to severe persecution by individuals and by the government. All Baha'i institutions have been closed and their property confiscated, Baha'is have been denied access to jobs and schooling, and they have been publicly denounced in the press.

The United Nations Commission on Human Rights has repeatedly adopted resolutions condemning human rights abuses in Iran, specifically addressing the brutal treatment of the Baha'is. But when the issue was raised in the U.N. General Assembly and a monitor named to investigate the situation, the Iranian Government refused to cooperate.

The Government of Iran has sought to mask its vicious policy of persecution, discrimination, and genocide. Mr. Speaker, we cannot permit this to happen. The world must know that the Iranian Government is pursuing a policy of religious persecution and extermination. We have the responsibility to speak out against policies of systematic discrimination against individuals who seek only to profess their faith in their own homes without the risk of arrest and execution.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in condemning these heinous and vicious crimes.

THE 20th ANNIVERSARY OF THE FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, of the many things that distinguish our system of Government from others, few stand out more than our openness and democratic spirit. This July 4th we will celebrate the centennial of the great symbol of our democracy, the Statue of Liberty, as it enters a second century of bearing the torch of freedom. But there's another anniversary taking place that day, one less well known, though just as important and powerful in its meaning for our democracy.

Twenty years ago on July 4th, the Freedom of Information Act became the law of the land. By giving the public access to Government documents, the Freedom of Information Act has ensured more Government accountability than ever before. No other law has done more to limit the abuse of Government power. No other law has set such a high standard of Government openness. The Freedom of Information Act is a legislative tool to guarantee that ours is indeed a Government of, by, and for the people.

The real security of our Nation is the integrity of its institutions and the informed confidence of the people. When that integrity is questioned, confidence and trust erode. Nothing serves our Nation better than the truth; nothing damages us more than when our leaders try to conceal it. Only 12 years ago an administration that tried to hide the truth shook the foundations of our Government. And we all know what happens in a closed society, where truth is but a function of who has power. That is not the American way.

What the Freedom of Information Act does is to help keep our Government accountable and honest. As used by journalists, historians, lawyers, politicians, businesses, and public interest groups, it has exposed instances in which the Government has overstepped its bounds of authority. It has helped to reveal cases of Government mismanagement, waste, fraud, and abuse of power. It has enhanced the health and safety of American citizens. It has served the public interest.

The Freedom of Information Act is based on the fundamental principle that a free, democratic government has little to hide from its citizens. With the obvious exceptions of national security matters and other classified documents, government information belongs to the people. The Freedom of Information Act has served this purpose well. A 1985 House Government Operations Subcommittee study of the act showed that over 90 percent of the requests processed by Government agencies were granted in full in 1984. Whatever time and cost is involved in enforcing this act, the cost of not enforcing it—of having a closed Government and an uninformed citizenry—would be far greater.

So on this July 4th, I will salute two anniversaries—the centennial of the Statue of Liberty, and the 20th year of the Freedom of Information Act. Each, in its own way, is a testament to our free society.

THE STATE OF THE PHILIPPINES

HON. CECIL (CEC) HEFTEL

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, this is the seventh of an interesting 10-article series on the Philippines written by George Chaplin, the editor-in-chief of the Honolulu Advertiser. This installment discusses the general economic climate of the country and the present economic policies of the new Aquino administration.

President Aquino faces the difficult task of rebuilding the Philippine economy after the years of mismanagement and neglect. Mr. Chaplin's interview with Jose Conception, the Minister of Trade and Industry, discusses the current economic situation in the Philippines in light of promising trends to increase trade, deregulate the private sector, and promote tourism.

The article follows:

[From the Honolulu Advertiser, May 24, 1986]

PHILIPPINES ECONOMY: TURNING POINT?

(By George Chaplin)

MANILA.—Jose Conception, the minister of trade and industry in the Aquino government, is a large, bespectacled businessman (flour milling and agro enterprises) who helped organize Namfrel, the National Movement for Free Elections.

It was the 400,000 Namfrel volunteers who closely monitored the polls in the February snap election and provided the clearcut picture of fraud by the Marcos camp that led U.S. officials to urge the dictator's ouster.

In an interview, Conception talked about economics and politics.

Q: How do you see the country getting out of the economic crisis?

A: America saw on TV the courage of the Filipinos fighting for democracy. That gave the industrialized countries an extra dimension in seeing the Philippines as a good place to invest.

We're getting many inquiries from foreign investors. But we have problems—3 million unemployed, 800,000 entering the labor force each year, poverty all over the place, People have a high level of expectations now, but we can't meet these in a short time.

We're organizing People's Economic Councils throughout the country, inviting grassroots views, rather than working from the top down.

"There will be representatives from the Chambers of Commerce and from the various community sectors—from cottage enterprises to large businesses: the farm segment; labor; academic; civic, religious and professional groups: consumer groups; and the local financial community.

We're now post-testing this in nine provinces, but plan to be in all 74 provinces and 60 cities and ultimately in all municipalities throughout the country.

In Zamboanga I listened to the economic council, representing, among others, 10,000 to 12,000 Muslims who dive and collect coral. For the last eight years there's been a ban on export or coral—except for one firm run by a friend of Marcos who had the export monopoly.

The rest of the firms asked for export permits but couldn't get them. So they accumulated a 50-million peso ($2.5 million) inventory which they were not permitted to ship.

Within two weeks we arranged for them to get permits so they could export all that stored coral.

(Conception cited this as an initial success story of the councils, through which people will not only articulate their needs but participate in making decisions and implementing programs.

(Government in business: "Government has no business competing with the private sector in areas that it can handle well. In trade and industry, our role is supportive, not dominant.")

Q: What about government getting out of business?

A. We have a privatization program for government corporations. But first we have to get good balance sheets and do vibility studies (to indicate what can be sold as going concerns "at their true value" and what will have to be written off).

Amex (American Express International Banking Corporation) is (agreed in principle) to acquire 50 percent of a government bank (Interbank). We're going to do the same for many of our corporations.

(Conception has said that "instead of selling these to one or two individuals we would like to have as wide an ownership base as possible. One framework we are considering is to offer the equity 20 percent for the employees, 20 percent for the general public, 20 percent maximum for government and 40 percent for foreign investors, if any."

(Far Eastern Economic Review cites negotiations in progress between Indonesian interests and the Associated Bank and says, "there are reports that the Bank of Hawaii, which stopped negotiations with troubled Producers Bank in 1985, is now talking about an equity conversion scheme with the Commercial Bank of Manila (Combank).

("There is also talk that the cash-rich Pacific island state of Nauru is investigating, equity involvement as well, possibly with another government-controlled bank, Union Bank."

(When banks run by Marcos cronies ran into problems in recent years, they were bailed out by the Development Bank of the Philippines, and this put the government further into control of financial institutions.)

Q: How do you project the confidence of a stable economy?

A: I'm not disappointed at the level of display of confidence. We have organized task forces in 32 industrial sectors which will be self-regulatory, with minimal government intervention.

(In a recent speech he said that each task force would represent "a balanced group of the entire sector that makes up the industry, including small and medium companies," and that each sector "will be given the responsibility of formulating a 10-year industry development plan . . . so that we know where we are going and what problems we will face.")

Q: What about dismantling of monopolies held by Marcos associates?

A: They had many products. They had soap. They had sugar, where the entire trading had to be done through one agency, with producers not getting the correct price for their crop. Now sugar can be sold by the private sector.

They had copra, on which 7 million farmers depend. They could not export, so all had to be sold to the mills, 90 percent controlled by the monopoly, which set prices. By lifting the price control, a dealer can now export or sell to the oil mills, which will have to match the higher export price.

On wheat there was a national authority which would buy grain and sell to millers at a higher price. The difference was 5 billion pesos ($250 million), all at the expense of the consumer.

Almost every move of industry had been controlled by these monopolies, which we are dismantling.

Q: Where's capital investment coming from?

A: We have a $26.2 billion national debt, with an annual interest bill of $2.6 billion. We've looked at oil bills and the like—there's not much maneuverability. So we're doing a six-year reconstruction program, with major reform in agriculture, small and medium industry.

We want to reconstruct our obligations over 20 years, with a 10-year grace period, a sort of mini-Marshall Plan.

Interest rates for farmers have been 40 to 50 percent. How can they survive? We must find a delivery system to bring credit costs down. In steel, we want to look at raw materials all the way to tin cans and fabricated products. We hope within six months to have a total economic reconstruction plan.

Q: What about your overseas market?

A: We're asking the U.S. and other industrialized countries to give us greater access to markets for the next six years, a period of reconstruction.

For example, in the American garment market the Filipino share is 2.5 percent. If we look at Taiwan it's 17 percent, China 10 to 11 percent. Even Bangladesh has more than the Philippines. We fought in Bataan and Corregidor and we have two U.S. bases here, so it's hard for our people to understand. Our bilateral agreement on garments is up at the end of this year. I believe the American people will support a higher quota.

On sugar, we want to increase the U.S. quota. We realize sugar is a sunset industry, but we need a shot in the arm over the next three years. That will enable us to diversify to corn, vegetables, cassava. We can develop livestock.

Japan is a $3.8 billion market in garments. We export only $17 million there in apparel, because there's a quota.

Our greatest threat is that unless we can respond to the needs of the people, the revolution will be lost. There are Marcos people who want to destabilize. If the Aquino government cannot address problems, the Communists may make their move. If the government ceases to be responsive, there'll be great trouble.

Q: What about the complaints over appointments of Officers in Charge (OICs), replacing elected provincial and local officials?

A: By and large the decisions have been good. Minister Pimentel is undergoing a learning process. He made some appointments without consulting people in the area. Eventually, criteria evolved. I feel Pimentel is trying to do what's possible in his realm. There's political bickering, but what is important is the cabinet and the president made a decision that the OICs must resign 90 days before the election. They can't use their office to advantage and that should resolve the situation. President Aquino told me that any OIC not in line with the new spirit of reform will be replaced.

Q: You were the head of Namfrel.

A: The aim was to make sure that elections are honest. I favor new voters registered with photos. I favor a permanent list of voters, computerized to match fingerprints to help eliminate vote fraud.

We then would be ready for (the plebiscite on the upcoming constitution and the election of the Parliament and local officials). I want foolproof, honest elections, to make sure the people's interests will be protected.

(He said he's not a member of any party, but a non-partisan cabinet member, "reflecting the new breed.")

Q: What about the people, now that Marcos is gone?

A: Over the years Marcos has not allowed the people to talk. We tell them the future is now in their hands, that government will try to help, but decisions should be made locally.

The people here risked their lives against Marcos and felt that the U.S. was committed to free expression of the people, but the U.S. vacillated at the most crucial point. (He was talking about President Reagan's statement, later corrected, that there seemed to be equal election fraud on both sides. He also said he doubted the wisdom of Reagan calling Marcos, a former head of state, since he hadn't phoned Aquino until she'd been in office two months. He said that there's "a strong reservoir of good will toward the U.S." but Filipinos felt hurt by Reagan's closeness to Marcos.)

HOW TO MAKE ENTERPRISE AND INITIATIVE BLOOM

MANILA.—In a recent speech, Trade and Industry Minister Jose Conception discussed major policy directions:

"We believe it is important to provide a climate conducive to investments and serve the needs of potential investors."

"We will welcome foreign investment, but to supplement, not supplant local investors. In identified areas, we will allow foreign investments up to 100 percent, if the project intends to tap export markets. If the project will draw upon the domestic market, foreign investments will not be allowed beyond 49 percent."

"While we are putting emphasis on domestic trade as a sector whose potential for generating increased economic activity has been neglected, we will continue to have a policy of strong promotion of exports. We recognize the reality that we need foreign exchange receipts to pay off our debts."

"On price controls, we believe the prices are best left to be governed by the law of supply and demand. However, when there are distortions in the market and prices behave erratically, our policy will be to anticipate market distortions to seek to prevent them. Price controls do not work."

"We are setting up a government Price Monitoring Council, that will monitor 16 basic commodities whose prices are considered sensitive to the housewife's budget. The council will monitor not only prices but also inventories and raw materials on a 90-day basis so that it can anticipate and correct price problems before they happen."

Conception believes in as much deregulation of the private sector as possible since "enterprise and initiative bloom best in a climate of freedom." He wants to cut away bureaucratic red tape since "unnecessary procedures and restrictions not only hamper our objectives but also represent a cost factor in terms of waste, inefficiency and redundancy."

Because of massive poverty an unemployment, emphasis will be on favoring small and medium industries, labor-intensive industries and those located in the provinces. He believes that all transactions should be able to withstand "the test of public scrutiny."

On import liberalization, the ministry "is accepting the recommendations of the private sector and will refer to the International Monetary Fund those products that have been indentified for immediate liberalization."

For those products in a second category "that may be liberalized after the necessary safeguards are in place, we shall undertake to ensure that the measures against undervaluation, misdeclaration, dumping and smuggling are instituted and proven to work."

(Some of his other policies are covered in the article above.)

[From the Honolulu Advertiser, May 24, 1986]

MINISTER OF TOURISM: OPTIMISTIC OUTLOOK FOR BUSINESS

MANILA.—One bright spot on the economic front here is rebounding tourism, which had sagged from the top year of 1980, when a million visitors and business people arrived.

Last year the figure was down to 775,000 who spent $750 million. And this year's first quarter was off by 10 percent from '85. But now the hotel rooms (there are 12,000 in the "first class" category in Manila) are filling up again and in an interview the new Minister of Tourism Antonio Gonzalez and he hopes to soon get back to the one-million-a-year peak. he said tourism is reported third most important in the economy, after coconut and sugar.

The season is October, November and December, but many of those now arriving are business types and to the government that means the likelihood of renewed foreign investment. The executive vice president of the Mandarin Manila Hotel, Nigel Roberts, is quoted as saying "we are the first indicators of the foreign business community and the businessmen are certainly talking bullishly."

While Americans are currently the number one arrivals, these are mostly Filipinos coming back from visits or coming back to live after Marcos, coming back for good," said Gonzalez.

Japan is potentially the number one market, and there's also concentration on Hong Kong and Taiwan. For Americans and Europeans the Philippines "has to be one of three or four places to be visited, rather than a destination resort on its own."

"Our problem," said Gonzalez, "has been image. The local press tends to be sensational and a lot of people elsewhere feel there's great tension here. Even the Washington Post was lumping us with Afghanistan as a place not to visit. They were talking about the Sulu Archipelago, where you get about 15 people a year anyway."

He said there were certain areas of Manila where, because of economic conditions, he would advise visitors not to go, but added that he could give the same advice about parts of San Francisco, Los Angeles and some other U.S. cities.

Gonzalez, who is 47, is well acquainted with the U.S., where he was educated at Notre Dame, began work with General Tel in Santa Monica, then headed Far Eastern marketing for Del Monte Foods, and subsequently worked with Tupperware and Time-Life Books, before opening a business here.

He was a close friend of President Aquino's late husband, "Ninoy," and "during the election campaign, Cory"—whom he had strongly supported with banners in front of his Makati firm—"asked me if I was interested" in the tourism directorship.

Gonzalez is an attractive "go-getter" who seems intent on doing the job.

He quickly acknowledges his problems.

The Philippine Tourism Authority gets only $2 million a year for advertising and promotion of the beaches, golf courses, historical sites and sunshine, not to mention the friendly, gracious people of this island nation. His slogan: "Come celebrate the new spirit."

He has 3,600 people working in the authority "when I really need 700. I can't get rid of the surplus right away. We would increase the efficiency, but cause a social problem.

"We have a lot of '15-30s.' They show up on the 15th and 30th to collect their pay. We need to get rid of some of the top bananas."

Philippine Airlines (PAL) "can become a strong regional airline, but it has been mismanaged and is broke now. The basic attitude in such cases was to print more money."

The Tourism Duty Free Shops, Inc., with nine outlets in Manila and two in Cebu, has been sequestered by the government. It's a multi-million-peso enterprise owned by Bienvenido and Gliceria Tantoco. Gonzalez said "the family is close to Imelda and they got the business by presidential fiat."

He said it was "a very questionable operaton and inefficient. They reported $30 million in sales. They could take in $50 million. The firm should net 12 percent, keep three and turn over nine to the government. Instead the government has been getting four percent."

He said the Commission on Good Government has requested bank records and others, "but they are incomplete." The tourism authority proposed "that we run it until the issue a decided and we are now taking inventory." He said that he has been greatly helped in his efforts by Duty Free Shoppers, from their San Francisco office. It's still to be determined whether the authority should continue to run the business or let it out on bid.

The tourism authority has been given 38 Marcos vacation homes "and we will eventually sell them."

Gonzalez said he would like to see Corregidor redeveloped into a tourist attraction, but that "it would cost a couple of million dollars in Japanese, Filipino and U.S. funds. A visitor would get there by ferry from Manila."

Roads are needed to connect to "gorgeous beach areas. A visitor can have a good five-day stay in the Philippines—two or three days here, then a beach resort or Baguio" in the mountains.

A SALUTE TO GEN. CHARLES A. GABRIEL

HON. JOSEPH M. McDADE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, June 30 marks the end of a long and distinguished career for one of our Nation's finest leaders. Gen. Charles A. Gabriel, who has served as Chief of Staff of the United States Air Force since 1982, is retiring after 32 years of service, years marked by an outstanding combat record and a rise to the highest military ranks.

General Gabriel's career has been marked by excellence at all levels. He is a highly decorated combat pilot, having flown over 250 missions during the Korean and Vietnam conflicts. Less than a year out of pilot training, he downed two North Korean Mig-15's. He was one of a select few who, as junior officers, were handpicked to supervise and guide the first cadets assigned to the Air Force Academy at that institution's inception. After having assumed four-star rank in 1980, General Gabriel took over one of our Nation's most demanding military positions when he was named to the "double-hat" position of commander in chief of U.S. Air Forces, Europe [USAFE], and the commander of all Allied Air Forces in NATO. His tenure there was marked by the onset of the highly successful modernization of U.S. and Allied tactical air power, with the F-15 and F-16 fighters, among others, being added to the NATO arsenal.

My own experience with General Gabriel began in 1982, when he returned to the Pentagon and became Air Force Chief of Staff. He was appointed at a momentous time for the Air Force, since the service was in the midst of its largest and most comprehensive modernization in over 20 years. In my view, "Charlie" Gabriel was clearly the right man at the right time. He moved to make his imprint early, with a key decision to improve the way the Air Force plans to "fly and fight." Knowing that modern equipment alone could not deal with the increasing threats facing our combat forces, he took the lead in forging unprecedented agreements between the Air Force and its sister services for joint operations. Today, Air Force assets are an integral part of U.S. Navy sea control operations, and the Air Force and Army are breaking new ground in developing joint combat doctrine, strategy and tactics. Today, "jointness" is one of the favorite buzzwords heard in any discussion of improving U.S. military capability; but in terms of actual implementation, General Gabriel led the way in making joint operations a way of thinking and doing business within the military itself.

The past few years have certainly been controversial ones where the defense efforts are concerned, General Gabriel found himself with the somewhat uneviable task of presenting the case before Congress for many of the most hotly debated defense issues. Faced with very tough questions, he made a solid and convincing case for the B-1 bomber, the MX, and many other programs. He appeared four times before our Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, and impressed all of us with his cooperation, patience, and candor. I certainly benefited from his testimony, and I witnessed first hand the qualities that made his tenure as Air Force Chief of Staff an enormous success.

To General Gabriel and his wife, Dorothy, I express my deep gratitude for the many years of service they have given our country. We owe them a deep debt for their efforts over a lifetime on behalf of the security of our Nation.

RETIREMENT OF ELIZABETH PAPIRIO

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to mark the retirement of Mrs. Elizabeth "Betty" Papirio, assistant director of the Pittsfield Girls Club and to pay tribute to this outstanding member of the Pittsfield, MA, community.

Betty Papirio began her distinguished career at the Girls Club more than a quarter of a century ago, soon after leaving the staff of Camp Karu in the town of Washington. Since that time, Betty has worked with and come to know many of Berkshire County's young people and has truly distinguished herself as a swimming instructor, program director, and assistant director of the Girls Club.

Betty's contributions to her community have extended far beyond the Pittsfield Girls Club. In the many years since her marriage to Albert Papirio, she has served on the United Way's allocation committee and with the Sons of Italy in America, ITAM Lodge 564, as scholarship chairman for more than 7 years and charity board member for more than 10 years. She has also served with the American Red Cross as a CPR instructor, water safety instructor, director, and adapted aquatics instructor.

Today Betty continues to actively serve as a water safety instructor with the Red Cross, director of the United Cerebral Palsy Association, director at large and public relations committee member of the national organization and as director of Goodwill Industries. She is also a member of the Commission on Berkshire Women, member of the recreational advisory board and sits on the human services advisory committee at Berkshire Community College.

In addition to her community activities, Betty has been instrumental in the revitalization of the Pittsfield Girl's Club's summer camp at Onota Lake in Pittsfield. Her enthusiasm and intensity have earned her the respect of young and old alike.

As a staff member of the Girls Club staff, Betty has played a particularly active role in helping the Pittsfield Girls Club receive outstanding program awards from the National Girls Clubs of America in 1979, 1980, and 1984. She was a crucial link in the development of Project Acquaint, designed to increase understanding of handicapped persons, which won a national award in 1980.

I salute Elizabeth Papirio for an outstanding career as an educator, instructor, citizen and truly remarkable human being. Her departure from the Pittsfield Girls Club will leave a void that will be hard to fill.

More than a quarter century of service to the young and old of Berkshire County has certainly earned her a very special place of respect for many years to come. Her selfless dedication has enriched the lives of all she has come in contact with, and she will be sorely missed.

FAMILY DAY CARE HOMES IMPERILED BY INSURANCE LOSS

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, the national crisis in liability insurance continues to affect many of the most vulnerable, and valuable small businesses in America, family day care programs. Since two-thirds of all children in child care are in family day care homes, it is clear that this trend will adversely affect tens of thousands of children.

Last summer, the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families held hearings to determine the effect of this crisis on child care providers. Representatives from national child care and youth serving agencies, as well as family day care providers themselves, warned that if they could not find reasonably priced insurance coverage, they would close down, reducing the already inadequate supply of child care.

Now, these fears are being realized.

As reported in the Washington Post on June 21, 1986, following what appears to be a national trend, family day care homes in the D.C. metropolitan area are closing down, leaving families stranded with few child care options.

One provider in the District was rejected by 16 insurance companies before she made a decision to close down.

In Montgomery County, two family day care providers have filed suit against the board of directors of their condominium, who ordered the closing of their businesses. The Post reports that the board's decision was influenced by their insurance company, threatening to cancel the condominium's policy unless action was taken against the family day care homes.

The current child care supply is already too limited to allow this crisis to continue. As we learn of more family day care providers closing down, a study by the Metropolitan Washington Council of Governments reports that only 20 percent of the children in the area are receiving the child care they require.

In my own State of California, despite action by the State insurance comissioner to establish a voluntary Market Assistance Program, family day care providers are operating without protective coverage, or closing down, because insurance is still too expensive. This presents a serious problem, in my own district where 300 families remain on a waiting list for child care.

The situation is so serious in California that a new child care Insurance project has been established in San Diego to publicize the extent of the problem, and to lobby strongly on behalf of California's family day care providers.

There is action we can take to curtail the crisis. As a cosponsor of H.R. 4301, the Risk Retention Act amendments, I urge my colleagues to consider this legislation to make it possible for child care providers to more easily find and purchase insurance.

THE AMERICAN DAIRY INDUSTRY

HON. E de la GARZA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, in 1983, Congress passed legislation establishing the National Dairy Promotion and Research Board primarily as a marketing device to encourage the American public to consume more dairy products.

Twice since then, as required by this legislation, the dairy farmers of America have voted to contribute a share of their earnings to fund this effort.

This promotional effort was needed because the use of dairy products was on a downward trend.

There were a number of reasons for this downturn in dairy product sales. Our Nation has been on a fitness kick for several years and some feel dairy products have too many calories, heart specialists have warned about cholesterol problems, and some diet books downplay dairy product consumption.

Nevertheless, dairy products are without question one of the best nutritional sources for a healthy diet. And every day we are learning more about calcium's role in helping maintain healthy bodies, and dairy products are the major source for calcium for the majority of Americans.

In addition to the National Dairy Board, there are many dairy promotion groups around the country. This month, they are together observing the 50th anniversary of June Dairy Month. And their combined efforts now appear to be reversing the downward trend in dairy product sales for the first time in more than two decades.

Recently, the National Dairy Board held its board of directors meeting in Washington on the second anniversary of its beginning operations. In his report to the board, Chairman Ivan K. Strickler said:

"Looking back on our last year's efforts, I am quite pleased with the bottom line results. The National Dairy Board was created by Congress to increase the sale of dairy products. According to the preliminary findings, we are meeting that mandate and finding higher than anticipated increases in dairy product use.

"The 1983 farm bill that established the National Dairy Board projected that the increased advertising would push dairy product sales up by 2 percent. U.S.D.A. statistics indicate that, since the Board's inception, sales have surpassed that prediction.

"According to USDA, milk and dairy product commercial use totaled more than 131 billion pounds in 1985, 3.7 percent more than in 1984. And, in 1984, the same category totaled 126.5 billion pounds, 3.3 percent more than in 1983. The total increase during this 2-year period is 7 percent, or 8.6 billion additional pounds of milk and dairy products used commercially, the largest 2-year increase in memory."

I congratulate and commend the American dairy industry on this achievement and especially on its 50th anniversary of celebrating dairy month during the month of June.

On some 220,000 dairy farms across the United States, men, and women, and children have to work 365 days a year to provide our Nation with fresh, wholesome dairy products. In the dairy business there are no planting and harvesting seasons, no days off, no rest for the weary.

I hope that the American consumer will be persuaded by our friends in the diary industry that these products are some of the most wholesome foods available to us at reasonable prices, and dairy products will continue to grow in popularity.

JAPANESE REDUCE TRADE DEFICIT WITH FOOL'S GOLD

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to recognize the Japanese for their mastery of style over substance. In a scheme that even Michael Deaver would admire for its public relations ingenuity, that country has figured out a way to reduce its trade deficit with the United States, and thus ease pressure for trade reform, without actually buying more from us or selling less to us.

The Japanese Government is buying large amounts of bullion to mint coins to mark the 60th anniversary of the accession of Emperor Hirohito. The gold is bought in London but is routed through the United States on its way to Japan. This has no net effect on our worldwide trade balance but it lowers our $50 billion deficit with that country.

Japanese gold imports from the United States soared from 0.76 tons in April to 65.58 tons in May. The value of those imports was $722 million; if it continued for a year, it would knock about $8.5 billion off the bilateral trade deficit, with no actual benefit to American industry. That would be enough to shield them from the Gephardt amendment to the omnibus trade bill, which would mandate actions against nations that build up excessive trade surpluses through a pattern of unfair trade practices.

At the same time the Japanese are transshipping gold through our country, they are stonewalling us in the semiconductor negotiations. After promising us during consideration of the trade bill that they would negotiate seriously to resolve the legitimate complaints of our semiconductor industry, the Japanese are backing down, clamming up and continuing to ravage us with a range of market barriers and dumping violations.

Mr. Speaker, this incident should remind us all that treaties and agreements are worthless if they are not backed by honorable intentions. Duplications mercantilism is not worthy behavior for a world economic leader. There are too many problems in the world trading system—huge trade imbalances, crushing foreign debts, rising protectionism—for the Japanese to be playing little public relations games. I think the United States should expect better from an ally which professes concern over our trade problems. I hope the Japanese can deliver.

APPEAL FOR LIVES OF IRANIAN BAHA'IS

HON. JIM LEACH

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have received news today of the execution in Iran of another Baha'i, Mr. Farid Behmardi, and the pending execution of five other members of the Baha'i faith. It is imperative for Members of this body to join in issuing an urgent appeal to the Iranian Government on behalf of those five.

As the House knows well, the Government of Iran, in defiance of international human rights law on the freedom of conscience and religious practice, has been engaged in a systematic and bloody campaign of religious persecution against the Baha'is of that country. The Baha'is have faced execution, torture, and imprisonment. Their holy places have been desecrated and their spiritual leaders spirited away in the dark of night. With each new act of government savagery against these gentle and tolerant people, there has arisen an international storm of protest, joined by many Americans as well as the U.S. Government. All concerned citizens of the world stand in respectful awe of these people who dare persecution to worship according to their conscience.

I urge my colleagues today to join with the State Department and other concerned citizens and governments in protesting in the strongest possible terms the execution of Mr. Behmardi and in appealing to the Government of Iran to cease now its shedding of innocent life by sparing the lives of the five other Baha'is who face a similar fate.

A SALUTE TO CHICAGO POLICE COMMANDER ORVEL RICKS ON HIS RETIREMENT

HON. CHARLES A. HAYES

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute Chicago Police Department District Commander Orvel Ricks.

On July 10, 1986, after 29 years of honorable and distinguished service to the city, Commander Ricks will retire from his beloved police department. His long career has been one that all the residents of Chicago can look to with administration and thankfulness.

Promoted to the rank of district commander of the Gresham District in January 1981, Commander Ricks has contributed a lifetime of service which will not soon be repeated. After joining the department on July 1, 1957, Commander Ricks' thorough dedication to duty earned him consistent advancement through the ranks. He was appointed to detective rank in 1963, sergeant in 1970, lieutenant in 1977 and captain in 1986. In keeping with this team spirit, Commander Ricks undertook these advancements while also serving in a number of different police units. They include Grand Crossing, Hyde Park, Kensington and Gresham police districts. He has also worked in the organized crime, detective, internal affairs and auditing and internal control divisions.

Commander Ricks concludes his long and rewarding career in the service of the city of Chicago, with the warm regards and best wishes of many friends and acquaintances, both within and outside the Chicago Police Department. Mr. Speaker, I know you and the rest of our colleagues will join me in saluting Commander Ricks on his outstanding career and in wishing him much happiness as he begins his retirement.

A TRIBUTE TO JULIE KELLOG

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, the Emergency Shelter Program in Hayward, CA, will honor its's former executive director, Julie Kellog, at a testimonial dinner.

The board and citizens of Alameda County will publicly thank Ms. Kellog for her untiring commitment and dedication to the housing needs of displaced women and children. She justly deserves this tribute.

Through creative planning and innovative funding proposals, Ms. Kellog's accomplishments include remodeling and expanding the emergency shelter's capacity from 24 women and children to 40 women and children and purchasing land adjacent to the shelter to expand the child care center to accommodate 24 infants and 24 children, ages 2½ to 12.

Under Ms. Kellog's leadership, the shelter was remodeled to accommodate disabled clients. She managed, in an exemplary manner, the southern Alameda County domestic violence project which assists low-income individuals obtain temporary restraining orders under the domestic violence or civil harrassment laws.

Ms. Kellog was also instrumental in adding a housing search coordinator and job developer to the emergency Shelter to assist clients with housing and employment in the open market.

These are only a few of Julie Kellog's accomplishments and contributions to the Emergency Shelter Program which has served the needs of women and children in Alameda County. She is truly a woman of compassion and vision and I join her friends in saying thank you for all that she has done.

CONFISCATED PROPERTY FROM WORLD WAR II SHOULD BE RETURNED TO RIGHTFUL OWNERS

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, with the recent victory of Kurt Waldheim in the Austrian Presidential elections, it seems timely to remind my colleagues of the anti-Semitism which, regretably, still exists today. We must continue to fight against this unfair discrimination and rectify the damage it causes wherever possible.

Fortunately, for some Nazi war crimes, reparations are possible. The thousands of pieces of art work which were confiscated from Austrian Jewry by the Nazis during World War II is an example of this. After the allies made the Austrian Government responsible for the heirless pieces in 1955, little if anything, was done to find the rightful owners of these valuable pieces. It was only first in 1969 that the Austrian Government under the "1. Kulturgutbereinigungsgesetz"—First Cultural Objects Settlement Act—allowed some art works to be returned to their rightful owners. Unfortunately, Austria had made no new efforts to find these rightful owners until recently.

I am happy to report that in December 1985 the Austrian Government gave unanimous approval to a measure calling for Austria to return all confiscated items to the rightful owners. Even more encouraging is the fact that all unclaimed works will be auctioned off and proceeds will go to the well-deserving Nazi victims. The Austrians plan to return or auction as many as 3,000 coins, 3,000 books, and 600 paintings. These items include not only works which were stored in the former Carthusian Monastery south of Vienna, but also works located in Austrian government offices and embassies around the world. My only complaint about this Austrian move is that no mention was made of the works held by the Government in places other than embassies and the Carthusian Monastery.

In is my strong belief that these works should not be kept from their rightful owners who have suffered long enough. If a person can prove he or she is the rightful owner, justice must be done, and the property returned to him or her. It is comforting to know that Austria will abide with these basic, universally-accepted rights.

Returning confiscated art pieces and making every attempt to find the rightful owners is one small step that can be made to rectify past abuses. It seems especially appropriate that Austria, after its Presidential election and the still many unanswered questions about Waldheim's past, hasten its efforts to return these works. Certainly, this is a gesture of friendship which the Jewish victims of World War II and the United States will embrace.

A TRIBUTE TO CHRISTMAS HOLMAN

HON. DAN DANIEL

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, all of us in this body have flags flown over the Capitol from time to time. Sometimes it is done upon the request of a constituent, sometimes it is done in honor of a specific individual, group or event.

The flagpole used for this purpose is at eye-level with my office and often I muse on just whose flag is being flown, and why.

On June 17, such a flag was flown for a gentleman who resides in my district. This citizen has worked on a farm all his life, although he is retired now. He has raised a large family, and takes pleasure these days in teaching the young, in large part by recounting the past in ways which make it real to those who hear him.

This gentleman is not much of a traveler. He has left the State of Virginia only once, to visit the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

In all, his life has been eventful, but not the sort which creates headlines. Yet this is a remarkable man.

For in another 6 months, Mr. Christmas Holman of Buckingham County, VA, will celebrate his 109th birthday. He enjoys good health, and his special pastimes are listening to the radio and reminiscing about the past.

In honor of Mr. Holman a flag has been flown to be presented to the Central Virginia Community Health Center. It will be an inspiration to all who visit this facility, and a constant reminder of this fine gentleman in whose honor it was flown.

ROY ROGERS HONORED

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to a truly remarkable man, Roy Rogers, of Victorville, CA. Roy will be honored along with Sheriff Ben Clark of the Honorable AL MCCANDLESS' district at the Boy Scouts of America Distinguished Citizens Award Dinner this July 17 in San Bernardino, CA.

Roy Rogers has long been recognized as the romanticized version of the legendary Old West. For over half a century, he has been entertaining youngsters and grownups alike, maintaining a magnificent image of the complete all-around, all-time, all-American family.

He has provided us with clean, wholesome entertainment in musical westerns and television programs for many years, which are still enjoyed throughout the world.

Today, Roy Rogers is as much in demand as ever, and he is involved in a multitude of projects. The Roy Rogers-Dale Evans Museum in Victorville, CA, attracts thousands of visitors annually. There have been several offers from producers to present his life story in motion picture form for television.

Throughout his career, Roy Rogers and Dale Evans have represented honesty, decency, and faith in God and country. Wherever they appear, America's heart is with them. It is with great pride that I represent this outstanding couple in Congress, and today have the opportunity to recognize their many contributions to our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join with me, my colleagues, and the Boy Scouts of America Inland Empire Council in bestowing this year's Distinguished Citizens Award upon Roy Rogers, an inspiration to us all.

THE TORCH OF FREEDOM

HON. LAWRENCE J. SMITH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, on July 4, 1986, the torch that has guided millions of people to freedom will once again shine brightly in New York Harbor. After a lengthy restoration, paid for with contributions by the American public and American companies, the Statue of Liberty will again serve as a symbol of the American spirit, as it has done for so many people over the last 100 years.

The proper name of Miss Liberty is "Liberty Enlightening the World." She was a gift from France to the United States that was dedicated 100 years ago this October. Millions of people are expected to attend what is being hailed as the biggest party since the Bicentennial, when the Statue is rededicated on July 4. As part of the "Liberty Weekend" celebration, I am proud to be taking part in a special naturalization ceremony on July 3, 1986, at the Orange Bowl in Miami, FL. More than 12,000 people are expected to become new U.S. citizens at that time, which would make the ceremony the largest in our Nation's history.

This event will be part of the ABC Television Network's nationally broadcast celebration of "Liberty Weekend," which commemorates the 100th anniversary of the Statue of Liberty. Miami is one of five sites chosen to be part of the network's coverage. Through a satellite hookup from Ellis Island, U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren Burger will administer the Oath of Allegiance to the new citizens at the five selected sites.

These new citizens are the most recent Americans who will have a special attachment to Miss Liberty and Ellis Island. Millions of immigrants came to this country with nothing but the clothes on their backs and the burning desire for freedom in their minds. America gave these people the opportunity to rise as far as their dreams could take them. As a second-generation American myself, I can attest to the opportunities that this country gave me and my family. The Statue of Liberty is the symbol of this great opportunity. It has a unique place in my heart and the hearts of all Americans.

H.R. 4060: AN IMPORTANT STEP TOWARD EQUITY FOR ALL RETIREES

HON. MIKE LOWRY

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week, the House passed H.R. 4060, which would guarantee a 1987 cost-of-living adjustment [COLA] to beneficiaries of Federal retirement programs. As a cosponsor of this legislation, I would like to express my thanks and appreciation to Representative MARY ROSE OAKAR, the bill's prime sponsor, and to our other colleagues who have worked to make this good bill even better.

In its original form, H.R. 4060 applied to programs under the jurisdiction of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee's Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits. Thus, it would not have guaranteed a COLA for military retirees or for railroad retirees' tier II benefit. Fortunately, however, the motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 4060 includes a provision to include these other retirees as well.

This change is a very positive one, because the most important reason for passing this bill is to restore equity among retirement programs. The issue of equity is especially important to military retires. They are veterans just like the recipients of veterans' compensation and pensions. Yet those compensation and pension benefits are exempt from automatic cuts under Gramm-Rudman while military retirement COLA's are not.

Last year, when we debated the Gramm-Rudman legislation, I opposed it in part because of its inequitable treatment of different retirement programs. Under Gramm-Rudman, COLA's for military and civilian retirees will be targets for reduction or elimination each year through 1991. Yet Social Security is exempt from similar cuts. There is no justification for such discriminatory treatment.

The enactment of H.R. 4060 would deal with this problem in 1987. I hope that the House will also work to prevent cuts in the COLA's for future years as well. Earlier this year, my concern about equity led me to introduce H.R. 4368, a bill to repeal the provision of Gramm-Rudman that applies to Federal military and civilian retirement programs, effective with the beginning of fiscal year 1987 in October. This bill would exempt Federal retirement COLA's from future sequestrations required under Gramm-Rudman. The House vote for H.R. 4060 is a very positive step. I hope that we will also act to repeal the provision of Gramm-Rudman that creates the potential for future inequitable treatment of retirees.

ETTA VIRGINIA LUCK JONES, 100 YEARS AND GOING STRONG

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, July 5, 1986, Etta Virginia Luck Jones will celebrate her 100th birthday.

A child of Jerry and Lavenia Luck, Etta enjoyed the benefit of a strong parental commitment to education to support her as she sought to improve the quality of her life.

After attending the Westmoreland Public School in Danville, VA, she went on to graduate from the Virginia State Normal Industrial Institute and began her career as a teacher.

Her professional experiences included teaching at the third, fourth, and fifth grade levels, serving as principal of the Camp Grove School, and eventually becoming the first black supervisor of more than 40 schools in the State of Virginia.

After her marriage to Alexander Jones and the graduation of their eldest child from high school, the family moved to the District of Columbia in order to provide better educational opportunities for their children.

Today, Etta Virginia Luck Jones is the oldest living member of Mount Zion Pentecostal Church and the proud mother of 10 children, 15 grandchildren, and 12 great-grandchildren.

I call upon all the Members of Congress to join with me in saluting this wonderful woman for her numerous contributions to the lives of her family, neighbors, chuch, and friends.

CONCERN FOR PRIMATES UNDER NIH CARE

HON. FRANK HORTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, 15 primates are currently under the care and control of the National Institute of Health [NIH]. NIH took possession of these monkeys after they were removed from the research facility that was using them for neurological experiments and had caused them serious injury.

Two hundred and fifty-three Members of the House of Representatives, including myself, signed a letter to Dr. James B. Wyngaarden, Director of NIH, urging that he send the primates to a sanctuary in Texas. Dr. Wyngaarden was adamant in his opposition to congressional intent. Those of us in the House concerned about these monkeys were, and are, just as adamant, and introduced a Sense-of-the-Congress resolution, once again stating that the 15 primates be transferred to the Texas facility.

Now, after saying that he could not send the primates to Texas because he did not have the authority of ownership, Dr. Wyngaarden has moved them to the Delta Research Facility in Louisiana. This move was simply wrong. To do it behind the backs of Congress and all those concerned about these animals was uncalled for.

I hope that Dr. Wyngaarden will reconsider his tactics and will start to work with Congress, instead of working against us. For the sake of the 15 monkeys, this matter be resolved.

A TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM L. LOHMAN

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the contributions made by my constituent and friend, William L. Lohman, to the field of secondary education. Tomorrow Bill will be retiring after 27 years of service, the last 10 of which he served as the assistant principal at Pennridge High School in Bucks County, PA.

After completing 4 years of distinguished service in the U.S. Navy, Bill began his educational career as a social studies teacher and head track coach at Parkland Junior-Senior High School near Allentown, PA. In addition to the many awards he received as an educator at the school, his track team had four undefeated seasons and won a number of awards.

Seven years later, Bill accepted a position as a guidance counselor at Easton Junior High School. He quickly moved up to assume the role of assistant principal, and then principal of the school.

By 1972 Bill and his wife Doris had moved to accept positions in Bucks County. Bill became the guidance counselor at Pennridge South Junior High School, and Doris took on the position of coordinator-teacher of the art department at Quakertown High School. It was not long before Bill had established himself as a member of the Lion's Club and president of the local Parent-Teacher Organization. After 4 years he was named assistant principal at Pennridge High School, where he has been instrumental in helping many students stay in school and graduate.

It has been my pleasure to work with Bill on several occasions at Pennridge. He is a dedicated individual who combines a thoroughly professional manner with a genuine concern for the welfare of his students. I am proud to honor Bill Lohman as he retires, joining his wife Doris who retired in March after nearly 21 years of service as an educator. I wish them both a happy, healthy and well-deserved retirement.

HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES CONTINUE IN IRAN

HON. JOHN E. PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I am horrored to report the latest Iranian atrocities against members of the Baha'i faith.

According to information I have received, Mr. Farid Behmardi, a 46-year-old prominent Baha'i was executed by hanging in Tehran on June 10, after suffering prolonged torture. His family learned of the execution only after his body had been buried by the authorities.

I have also learned that five other Baha'i prisoners are now threatened with imminent execution, that a 15-year-old Baha'i boy and his father were stoned to death and two other Iranian Baha'is who had been held in prison were executed in early May.

The continued violence and prejudice against the Baha'is indicate continuing determination of Islamic authorities to break the will of the Baha'is. We must join together in a universal outcry to save the lives of innocent people.

The Iranians cannot continue to abuse the Baha'is and it is up to us to bring pressure on this corrupt government until the abuses stop.

TRIBUTE TO KENNETH CALLAHAN

HON. DON BONKER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, before we adjourn, I am submitting two statements about Kenneth Callahan for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. As one of the Pacific Northwest's greatest artists, Mr. Callahan's death is a great loss not only to the Northwest but to art lovers everywhere.

Both articles convey a sense of Mr. Callahan's personal warmth as well as his total commitment to art. He never ceased to wonder and remark on the world around him—a gift which kept him delving into new themes and ideas his whole life.

Mr. Bill Alpert of the Seattle Times recently recounted Kenneth Callahan's life and many contributions to the art world, and at this time I would like to have his article placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

KENNETH CALLAHAN NEVER LOST HIS SENSITIVITY TO WORLD OF NATURE

(By Bill Alpert)

Kenneth Callahan, one of the Pacific Northwest's best-known and most enduring artists, will be remembered not only for his powerful abstract images and landscapes but as a man of great humanity and spirit.

Callahan, who died Thursday in Seattle at the age of 80, was one of the Northwest's premier artists for more than 60 years, one who constantly reached beyond himself to explore new themes and ideas in his work.

His style is instantly recognizable: great masses of swirling snake-like shapes in characteristic browns, grays and tans.

Declining health caused Callahan to move to Seattle from Long Beach, Pacific County, two years ago, to the world of nature around him.

The walls of his studio are covered with pen and ink sketches of horses, one of his favorites subjects, and his wife Beth said that even toward the end of his life, he would sit at his window sketching passers-by.

Callahan gained national attention in September 1953 when a Life magazine article featured him along with artists Morris Graves, Guy Anderson and the late Mark Tobey. It was then that the so-called Northwest school with its muted colors and misty imagery was officially born.

This attention was both a blessing and a curse. On the one hand, it attracted notice—and buyers. On the other hand, it pigeonholed Callahan into a style from which he sometimes found it economically difficult to escape.

Always the practical man, Callahan embraced the attention which brought him firmly into the public eye. One of his early Seattle exhibitions was held at the Frederick & Nelson department store, and he held business sponsorship in high regard.

"The work of living artists should be part of the economic life of America," Callahan wrote in 1975 in Northwest Arts magazine, and his work is represented in local and national corporate collections.

One of his largest canvases, a striking study of red-colored horses called "The Gathering," dominates the lobby of Martin Selig's Fourth and Vine Building.

About 50 of his drawings and paintings can be found at Longacres, a result of his long friendship with racetrack owner and art patron Morris Alhadeff.

Although he was a curator at the Seattle Art Museum for 18 years, Callahan was never a favorite at the museum due to strained relations with SAM founder Dr. Richard Fuller and Callahan's unwillingness to adapt his work to the modernist trends of the times.

An 80th birthday retrospective at the Tocoma Art Museum last year, curated by the late Jon Kowalek, spanned two floors and pleased Callahan immensely. The Seattle Times called the show "awesome" and said it reaffirmed Callahan's conviction that "there's nothing a human could do that's of greater consequence than being a painter."

Callahan's hospitality was legendary. He was extremely social and had a great affection for people of all types, encouraging visitors and enjoying their presence.

The Kraushaar Gallery in New York featured Callahan's work every two years and in Seattle, the Foster/White Gallery in Pioneer Square often mounted large shows. His work had a substantial private following and is well represented in many of the country's major museums including the Guggenheim, the Metropolitan and the Museum of Modern Art.

Callahan was born in September 1905 in Spokane and spent his early years in Glasgow, Montana. He began painting as a teenager influenced by the great expanses of land and sky around him. He moved to Raymond, Pacific County, in 1918 and graduated from Broadway High School in Seattle in 1924.

In 1930, he married Margaret Macauley Bundy, a former editor of the Town Crier literary magazine, who died in 1961. Their only child, Brian Tobey Callahan, is a rancher in Burns Lake, B.C.

Callahan reveled in the outdoors. For many years he lived in a cabin on the Stillaguamish River near the town of Robe.

More recently, he could be found at water's edge in Long Beach, where the swirling tides and dramatic changes of light and mood found their way onto his canvases as symbols for the chaos, wonder and passion of life.

In 1964, Callahan married Beth Inge Gottfredsen of Denmark, who had nursed his first wife during her illness. Other survivors include two grandchildren, Claire and Sean, and two great-grandchildren, Benjamin and Robert.

At the request of the family, no services are scheduled. Memorials are suggested to the Seattle Youth Symphony and to the Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai B'rith.

DEMYSTIFYING JAPANESE MANAGEMENT

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my colleagues' attention to the reasons for the United States trade deficit with Japan. Many possible reasons have been proposed; among them are the comparatively high growth rate of the U.S. economy, the Third World debt crisis and the past strength of the dollar. However, one of the most glaring reasons is simply the lack of productivity among United States firms when compared to their Japanese counterparts. In fact, while United States productivity has increased from a growth rate of almost zero to about 3 percent within the past 3 years, Japan has sustained an 8 percent growth rate over a much longer period.

The source of Japan's superior productivity rate originates in the framework of fierce competition experienced among Japanese firms. From this atmosphere emerge those corporations with the best management ideas. Due to their innovative techniques these companies then become national and international leaders. The techniques utilized, however, are not confined to Japanese implementation but are feasible for American implementation as well. This fact has been shown in the successful borrowing by American companies of the Japanese perfected quality-circle and just-in-time methods.

The problem that exists is not only informing American companies of these methods, but more importantly, in developing an atmosphere for proper implementation of these techniques. Essential to this atmosphere is a laissez-faire, hands-off Government policy when dealing with business. If we continually regulate and restrict business with misguided policies and overburdening taxes, their cost of capital will be too high and U.S. competitive strength will be impeded. We should stop putting our corporations at a competitive disadvantage to their international rivals by meddling in their affairs directly and indirectly; we should let business be business.

Paul A. Gigot, in the January 6, 1986 edition of the Wall Street Journal, reviewed a book, "Kaisha, the Japanese Corporation," which I commend to my colleagues for insight into the issue of increasing U.S. productivity.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Jan. 6, 1986]

DEMYSTIFYING JAPANESE MANAGEMENT

(By Paul A. Gigot)

It is a potent symbol of America's relative industrial weakness that the most admired businessman in the U.S. these days is Lee Iacocca. Whatever his genius as a marketer, Mr. Iacocca could save his company only by pleading for quotas against foreign cars and for government loans to pay his bills. Our leading industrial icon is a corporate welfare case.

It wasn't always that way. Not too long ago Americans looked up to a different sort of industrial hero, someone like Soichiro Honda of Japan. Mr. Honda started making motorcycles more than 30 years ago, beat back some 45—that's right, 45—competitors, politely ignored Japan's fabled Ministry of International Trade and Industry when it said he shouldn't also make cars, and the rest, well, the rest may be parked in your driveway. Americans used to call that a Horatio Alger story.

This contrast may be too hard on Mr. Iacocca, who didn't get Chrysler into its original mess. Yet the contrast does illustrate an important and often ignored truth about Japan's economic success. Japan's "miracle," like Britain's and America's before it, was largely the product of creativity and enterprise by individuals and their businesses. Japan is no monolithic economic combine. The Hondas, Toyodas, Matsushitas and their corporate creations have had far more to do with building modern Japan than have bureaucrats or any mysteries of culture.

In "Kaisha, the Japanese Corporation" (Basic Books, 309 pages, $22.50), two American business consultants with long experience in Tokyo shine a microscope on this microeconomic success. James C. Abegglen and George Stalk Jr. illuminate a good deal not found elsewhere in the literature of Japanese management, which has more phony gurus than India. This is not just another book on the zen of building cars. It provides no succor for conspiracy theorists or Harvard professors who want to fashion a U.S. industrial policy. It offers instead an impressive and detailed insight into the methods that make the best Japanese corporations so formidable.

Notice that word "best." Conventional wisdom has portrayed "Japanese management" as a kind of national birthright that turns all Japanese companies into fierce samurai. This book shows what a stereotype that notion is, citing numerous examples that prove there are as many bad companies in Japan as anywhere else. The difference is that out of Japan's competitive crucible—remember those 45 motorcycle companies—emerge some superb corporations with better ideas. The methods of these best companies, most of which are adoptable by any company anywhere, are the substance of this book.

Take the kanban, or just-in-time, system of factory production. This isn't something that sprang magically from Japanese culture. It was developed in the 1950s by one man, Toyota's Taiichi Ohno, who wanted to build a system to make many different kinds of cars in small volume in the same way. He succeeded, gloriously. Toyota took some 20 years to fully develop kanban and modifies it even now. A few U.S. companies have tried to implement kanban solely as a way to reduce inventories, but Messrs. Abegglen and Stalk show in detail how it is also a way of changing the economics of manufacturing. Kanban can provide competitive advantages that are as revolutionary in their way as Henry Ford's Model T assembly line.

"Kaisha" also demystifies much of what has been attributed to Japanese management "style." Many advantages derive from policies that any American corporate management could follow, if it looked beyond the share price and high pay of the moment. Would American shareholders really object if U.S. managers refused to pay dividends, reinvesting earnings for faster growth and higher share prices in the long run? Or would American labor relations be so combative if U.S. executives, like Japanese managers, set an example for their workers by paying themselves modest salaries tied strictly to long-term performance? When Ford's Philip Caldwell and other Detroit big shots rewarded themselves with huge bonuses for the car-market revival a couple of years ago, it was a Japanese executive who said, in effect, "They haven't learned a thing."

"Kaisha" is mostly concerned with corporate competition, so it never systematically addresses the public policy issues in the U.S.-Japan struggle. It does suggest, however, that a government should act as a "facilitator" of business and growth, rather than as an enemy. Thus, U.S. antitrust policy has too often penalized efficient companies simply because they're also large (Japan's doesn't), while Japan aids capital formation by not taxing capital gains (the U.S. Congress recently voted to increase capital-gains taxes).

The best lessons in this book are, however, micro, not macro. They suggest that many American corporations, even ones long admired, such as Eastman Kodak and General Electric, will continue to be pounded by Japanese companies until they adopt some of those companies' more enlightened ways of working. If I were a U.S. manager trying to understand the anatomy of the Japanese racer breathing hard at my shoulder, I'd read this book.

EIGHTH ANNUAL FALL RIVER JUNIOR OPEN GOLF TOURNAMENT

HON. FERNAND J. ST GERMAIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to bring to the attention of my colleagues another example of how cooperation between a community's public-spirited citizens and its businesses can advance wholesome opportunities for our youth. Such an example is embodied in the Eighth Annual Fall River Junior Open Golf Tournament.

For 8 consecutive years, the members of the Fall River Country Club in Fall River, MA, have provided the full use of their golf course and their golf professional for this worthwhile event. Mr. Thomas Tetrault is the club's talented professional.

This event is designed so that boys and girls ages 12 to 18 can participate in the atmosphere of a real-life golf tournament. The tournament is sponsored by the Fall River Five Cents Savings Bank.

Over 176 youngsters participated in this spectacular event last year. They came from areas throughout New England with a few coming from Canada and even Europe.

Mr. Edward Keyes, a member of the country club who is also the golf coach at Bishop Connolly High School, spends much of his free time planning and conducting the tournament. It is largely his unselfish efforts that make it convenient for youngsters of various means to enjoy one of the true highlights of their young lives.

Mr. Speaker, the community spirit of giving here is not just confined to a once-a-year event. Throughout the entire year, Mr. Tetrault and his staff make golf clubs available at no charge to young boys and girls in the community who could otherwise not afford to participate in the game.

I would also like to bring due recognition to all of those who provide the resources, time and energy to assure that as many boys and girls who wish to participate can become active in the game of golf. I commend them and hope to encourage other country clubs and businesses throughout the Nation to follow this fine example. Such action will no doubt keep our youngsters out of trouble and in the proper direction toward a productive citizenship.

UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues in commemorating the 45th anniversary of the restoration of Ukraine's independence.

Our Ukrainian friends are well aware of the importance of June 30, 1941. It is a special day in man's struggle for freedom and self-determination. It was 45 years ago when in the predawn hours of June 22, 1941, Adolph Hitler launched his most ambitious and ultimately fatal project, the invasion and conquest of Eastern Europe to the Ural Mountains under a battle plan code named Operation Barbarossa. Had these Nazi plans succeeded, the world's history over the last four decades would undoubtedly have been very different. A primary factor in Hitler's defeat became evident 8 days after the invasion, when, on June 30, 1941, Nazi German forces were confronted with a heroic and unexpected stand by representatives of the Ukrainian National Liberation Movement and a provisional Ukrainian government. After several days of bitter street fighting between Ukrainian underground forces in the city of Lvov and retreating Soviet troops who were engaged in massacres of Ukrainian political prisoners, the underground seized the Lvov radio station in the west Ukrainian capital and broadcast the declaration of restoration of independence and the establishment of a Ukrainian free state. Hitler's response to this event precipitated the Nazi-Ukrainian war of 1941–44, which cost Ukraine between 7 and 8 million of her citizens. Its cost to Hitler was the ultimate destruction of Nazi Germany and the Third Reich.

The actions of the Ukrainian underground led by the Organization of Ukrainian Nationalists and its leader, Stephan Bandera, had taken the Germans by surprise and forced them to disclose their intentions and policies with respect to Ukraine and the other non-Russian colonies of the U.S.S.R. Besides proclamation of independence at Lvov, a national assembly was called and a provisional Ukrainian government with Mr. Yaroslav Stetsko as Prime Minister was established.

The reaction of the Gestapo to the Ukrainian proclamation of June 30, 1941, was swift and merciless. However, the imprisonment and murders and members of the Ukrainian Government and it's leaders by the Gestapo did not prove to be the deadly blow to the Ukrainian resistance the Germans had hoped for. These acts were followed by the barbarous policies of ruthless exploitation, oppression, and genocide against the Ukrainian population, which responded with a ferocious national liberation struggle led by a reorganized Organization of Ukrainian Nationalists.

With the collapse of the German war machine in the East, the Ukrainian National liberation struggle had culminated in the Ukrainian Insurgent Army becoming the third military and political power in Eastern Europe at the end of World War II. Instead of peace, however, the Ukrainians were forced to escalate their struggle in a new war against Soviet Russian imperialism whose military phase continued into the 1950's.

We Americans can sometimes forget how truly free we are. But millions of people around the world live every day under the subjugation of tyranny. The Ukrainian people have suffered years of harassment, discrimination, and brutality at the hands of their oppressors.

Yet, despite the endless suffering and persecution endured by the Ukrainian people, the true ideal of Ukrainian independence continues to live on in the hearts and minds of the Ukrainian people in their homeland and indeed, throughout the world.

This tribute today is our affirmation that the spirit of freedom is eternal. We have not forgotten, and we will not forget the day in 1941 when the people of Ukraine spoke with one voice in declaring their independence.

BUREAUCRACY OF DEATH

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, yesterday during our long debate on military aid to the Contras, not much was heard about the economic aid on its way to Central America, which was part of the Contra aid package.

Guatemala is a country which recently held elections for a civilian president. Guatemala stands to benefit substantially from this aid package. And Guatemala is a country where massive human rights abuses continue to be the rule rather than the exception.

President Vinicio Cerezo of Guatemala needs and deserves our support. He needs that support, not only to consolidate his government, but also to insure that the generals and colonels who have run Guatemala for decades become subordinate to civilian authority and to the rule of law.

We must face the question of how to use any economic aid we might provide to Guatemala to further President Cerezo's human rights goals rather than to promote further brutality and corruption. However, the bill we passed yesterday makes no provisions as to how economic aid can be used.

If any of my colleagues have doubts as to the enduring power of the military and death squads today in Guatemala, I urge them to read the following article from the New Republic:

BUREAUCRACY OF DEATH

(By Allan Nairn and Jean-Marie Simon)

On the surface, Guatemala, the largest country in Central America, appears placid. There are fewer houses ringed with sandbags than in Nicaragua, fewer armed men in the streets than in El Salvador, and six months ago the country elected its first civilian president since 1966, Christian Democrat Vinicio Cerezo. His administration has launched an anticorruption campaign and the country's first public-sector jobs program in more than a decade. But in this apparently hopeful atmosphere, union members, religious leaders, peasant activists, and other potential opponents of the Guatemalan military still face the constant threat of violence from their government.

In February Cerezo said that the country was experiencing a resurgence of political killings and noted that 69 cadavers, many of them showing signs of torture, had appeared during his first three weeks in office. In March the secretary of a Christian Democratic youth group was gunned down in his house along with his father and his sister. In April two refugees disappeared after they were dragged from a parish house where they were living under the protection of a Catholic bishop. In May, Victor Hugo Godoy, a member of the Congress's human rights commission, said that "it is very easy to recognize the same practices of years ago, including not just torture, but also the infamous coup de grace." On May 30 seven bodies appeared in one day on the streets of Guatemala City. Over the last six months, killings not attributed to combat or common crime have been running at more than 60 per month.

How to confront this ongoing terror is the primary challenge facing Guatemala's newly elected government. The victims are not killed by what is sometimes called "senseless violence" or by "the cycle of violence between left and right." They are killed by an efficient system of political terrorism. At the heart of this system is the intelligence apparatus of the Guatemalan military, known by its bureaucratic label, G-2. The G-2 is the unelected government of Guatemala that Vinicio Cerezo must find a way to control.

Cerezo is Guatemala's first chief of state in 20 years who would not order the killing of an unarmed civilian. He has a reformer's past and has survived three assassination attempts by the army he now nominally commands. But he serves at the sufferance of what is still the most murderous army in the Western Hemisphere. Although such estimates can't be precise, the archbishop of Guatemala, Próspero Penados, says that Cerezo holds 25 percent of the power. Cerezo himself claims 30 percent, and says that he will build from there.

From the start of his campaign, Cerezo pledged to limit the goals of his presidency. "My government will not plan social reforms," he stated bluntly, "because the army would oppose it." He promised to refrain from land reform and the prosecution of army officers for prior political murders. In return, he expected to be permitted to serve out his term, and said he would abolish the Department of Technical Investigations (DIT), a band of civilian thugs who killed and abducted on orders from G-2 and pillaged on their own account. The army agreed, and forged a tactical alliance with the man they had once reviled. The G-2, which is normally circumspect, even put the alliance on paper. Gerezo read us a confidential G-2 memo written before the December election predicting that the Christian Democrats would win "due to the links they have forged with the army, as well as with the United States."

Once in office, Cerezo fulfilled his campaign pledge. In a spectacular raid the DIT staff was apprehended en masse, It was the third time in Guatemala's last six administrations that this infamous corps had been purged. Almost 200 agents were fired, 400 were sent to a remedial police training course, and one was arrested on a weapons charge and subsequently released.

In the meantime, the military had taken steps to assure that its power could not be challenged by the new government. Four days before Gerezo's inauguration, the outgoing chief of state, General Oscar Mejia Victores, issued a series of sweeping decrees that stunned Gerezo's hopeful supporters. The measures narrowed civilian authority and legalized military control in the countryside, where the army is fighting a counterinsurgency war against a small guerrilla movement. One of the decrees created a State Security Council to handle apsects of national security that might fall under the jurisdiction of civilian Cabinet officers. Military officers serve on this council along with the civilian ministers, and their joint decisions are administered by the head of the council—who is required by the terms of the decree to be the army's secretary of intelligence. Another decree prohibited Cerezo from prosecuting any military officers for political crimes committed in the last four years.

Although Cerezo faces growing pressure to hold the armed forces accountable for their violence, he has been unable to comply. When Christian Democrats at the grass-roots level began joining the call for repeal of the amnesty decree earlier this year. Cerezo quickly squelched the move. This spring he announced that a commission would begin working on June 30 to investigate the thousands of disappearances, but was publicly pessimistic about its chances of getting access to secret army information. On July 5 he indefinitely postponed plans for the commission.

Meanwhile, the country's only human rights organization, the Mutual Support Group (GAM), is growing by the day. Modeled after the Mothers of the Plaza de Mayo in Argentina, the GAM is led by a group of courageous women whose husbands and children have disappeared. The GAM has publicly called for an accounting of the missing and for trials, such as those held in Argentina in 1985, of the officers responsible. Relations with Cerezo are becoming increasingly strained. In March he urged the GAM to "stop being masochistic and forget the past."

The army is confident that it has prevailed. "Do you think we've left behind any evidence?" one colonel taunted a journalist, demanding to be quoted. "In Argentina there are witnesses, there are books, there are films, there is proof. Here in Guatemala there is none of that. Here there are no survivors." This belief is widely shared in Guatemala and in Washington. But, inconveniently for many, it is not true. In fact, there are survivors and people on the inside who will talk, including high-ranking officers and the street-level killers they command. There are still many obstacles to justice for the Guatemalan military, but lack of evidence is not among them.

"We are in a war," explained Colonel Edgar Djalma, a G-2 veteran who served as army spokesman for most of the time from 1979 to 1984. "If under that concept it means that the government has an apparatus dedicated to finding and eliminating people of the left, to me that is perfectly normal." Djalma said that "a government can use all existing forces: the army, the police, the treasury police. . . . Each chief of government may look to another repressive apparatus or create his own." The point, he stressed, is the importance of G-2 coordination. He showed us a 1980 memo in which he wrote: "In the first phase, the intelligence section should be used above all prior to repressive actions or clean-up operations."

Djalma's matter-of-fact description is confirmed by General Benedicto Lucas García, the flamboyant and blunt former army chief of staff and brother of an ex-president. "If the G-2 wants to kill you they kill you," Benedicto told us. "They send out one of their trucks with a hit squad, and that's it." Benedicto says he knows that when his brother, General Romeo Lucas García, was president from 1978 to 1982, the government was responsible for at least 70 percent of the assassinations and disappearances.

Benedicto blamed some of the violence on common criminals and the guerrillas. The insurgents, organized in three major groups, have several thousand armed combatants operating primarily in remote rural areas. "When they've eliminated people," Benedicto said, "they've said so." Last year one Western intelligence official told us that the guerrillas "have been selective. They direct their killing toward the army, security forces, and, to a lesser extent, the civil patrols." The State Department's most recent human rights report estimated that the guerrillas had assassinated 59 military officials and 33 members of the civil defense forces last year. There were a total of 304 "civilian non-combatant deaths" in the entire country in 1985 (fewer than reported by Amnesty International, the Organization of American States, and other human rights groups), according to the State Department. The report included accounts attributing 28 of these killings to the guerrillas.

Benedicto claims that most of the killings during his brother's administration were directed by his brother's top aides, not by Romeo Lucas himself. But Raul García Granados, a cousin of the Lucas brothers and Romeo Lucas's chief adviser, makes no attempt to avoid responsibility. He explained to us that "the death squads were organized under the patronage and the approval of the government and the army, because it was the only way to fight guerrillas. The [death squads] have the sympathy of most of the Guatemalan people. They have lists of people that are suspected to be communists of whatever kind," he said, "and they kill them."

The lists and the philosophy behind them date back to 1954, when a CIA-sponsored invasion overthrew the left-leaning government of Jacobo Arbenz, which instituted a land reform program and was supported by the communists. The army sifted through the confiscated membership records of labor, peasant, and professional groups that had supported Arbenz, and classified 70,000 people as communists. During the 1960s dossiers from the updated files were used by the armed forces to destroy a left-wing guerrilla movement and other opponents. In 1968 Time magazine reported the chief of the U.S. military mission, Colonel John Webber, as saying that paramilitary groups run by the army were "licensed to kill peasants whom they considered guerrillas or 'potential guerrillas.'" By 1979 the National Police were brazen enough to issue a press release announcing that between January and October of that year "1,224 criminals" had been killed by El Escuadron de la Muerte (the Death Squad), and 3,252 "subversives" by the Ejército Secreto Anticómmunista (Secret Anticommunist Army). Throughout the early 1980s the army's top officers continued their assault on those they defined as the enemies of national security. In 1983 chief of state General Mejía Victores condemned the Guatemalan priesthood for "advocating totalitarian doctrines." Twenty-four hours later Father Augusto Ramírez Monasterio, a Franciscan superior, was shot in the back as he fled an armed forces van that had followed him from his mother's house.

This is the military of which Cerezo, as commander in chief, now ostensibly has control. In a series of recent interviews, a veteran of the high command who has held senior army posts since 1978 described how the Guatemalan system works today. Western intelligence officials and other high-ranking Guatemalan officers have offered similar accounts. This officer says that each of the country's military bases has a G-2 office whose function is "the elimination of individuals." These offices report to the G-2 control center in the National Palace. The G-2 in turn is overseen by the Army General Staff and ultimately by the minister of defense. Altogether G-2 employs more than 2,000 agents nationwide, including about 100 full-time officers. The G-2 staff can also call on the resources of any branch of the army and security forces.

"There's an archive and computer file on journalists, students, leaders people of the left, politicians, and so on," the officer says. This archive is maintained in the G-2 offices on the fourth-floor terrace of the National Palace, with copies in the adjacent Presidential Annex. "The file will say where the person was born, what party he belongs to, and the most important incidents of his life. One, for example, will say: '1957, participated in such and such a worker's movement; 1960, went into exile for the following reason; 1972, returned to Guatemala; 1975, participated in demonstration in the university. And finally, died on such and such date.' It never says who was responsible."

The bureaucratic procedures for approving the killing of a dissident are well-established. "A local military commander has someone they think is a problem," the officer explains. "So they speak with G-2, and G-2 consults its own archives and information from its agents and the police and, if all coincide, it passes along a direct proposition to the minister of defense. They say, 'We have analyzed the case of such and such person in depth and this person is responsible for the following acts and we recommend that we execute them.'"

The G-2 officers can also make their own recommendations. "There is a weekly meeting of the chiefs of the General Staff, and they do an analysis of the [political] situation which is presented to the chief of staff," the officer says. "They give a political appreciation. Such and such a union is moving, who's behind it, who is the head. Then the decision is taken, 'All right, we'll proceed.'"

Prominent political dissidents get special consideration. "When there is a big fish, G-2 makes a presentation, they review all the problems with the person, the objective of the mission, and their recommendation. They can give three options—disappear them, eliminate them in public, or simply invite them to leave the country. . . ." During the regime of general Mejía, for example, army chief of staff Rodolfo Lobos Zamora, presidential chief of staff Pablo Nuila Hub, and Mejía himself often presided at the meetings, according to those officer and others.

At high-level meetings such as these, the military decided in 1979 to assassinate the country's two leading democratic politicans. The first was Alberto Fuentes Mohr, the former foreign minister. He was machine-gunned to death as he drove by a military base in Guatemala City shortly after registering his new Social Democratic Party. Two months later, Manuel Colóm Argueta, the charismatic former mayor of the capital, was slain in downtown traffic while a helicopter hovered overhead. Only one week earlier, Colóm Argueta had registered his own new center-left political party.

Colonel Djalma says that he personally worked on the G-2 investigation of Fuentes Mohr, which concluded he was a communist. But Djalma says the decision to kill Fuentes Mohr was made at a higher level. According to two ranking officers who participated in the discussions, the plans to kill the two politicians were relayed by General David Cancinos, who was then minister of defense and overseen by Colonel Héctor Montalvan, who was presidential chief of staff. Montalvan declined to comment on the charge. Montalvan's chief aide at the time was an officer named Edgar Godoy Gaitán. Earlier this year, the army appointed Colonel Godoy to be commander of the G-2.

Beatriz Barrios' name has been in G-2 files for several years. A schoolteacher and a law student, she had been picked up by the army twice in the last five years. Both times she was freed after the intervention of a relative who is a high-ranking military officer. After the second abduction, she had gone to the Canadian Embassy, which was quietly running a refugee program that had spirited dozens out of the country. The Canadians moved quickly to book her on a flight to Toronto.

At the airport her reservation passed across the desk of a colonel in the G-2 section named Gilberto Barreda, who has an office in a modest cubicle off the passenger arrival corridor. Barrios was due to leave the country early on the morning of December 11. Hours before her scheduled departure, she phoned for a taxi from a friend's house. Either the cab was followed from the friend's house or the call was monitored over the G-2's intercept lines at the national phone company. Ten minutes into the ride, the taxi was pulled over. Barrios was dragged away by four heavily armed men.

The next morning a G-2 army captain named Armando Villegas was seen by a group of his colleagues by the side of a highway south of the capital standing over Barrios' naked and mutilated body. A note in Villegas' handwriting had been placed on the corpse, saying, "Faltan Más"—"More to come." After the killing, Captain Villegas was made a director of Cerezo's presidential guard. His superior at the time, General Jaime Hernández, has been chosen by the army as Cerezo's minister of defense.

One common assumption in Guatemala and the United States is that all the disappeared are dead. Clearly, most are. According to Amnesty International, "many thousands" have disappeared in recent years; the army admits to no political prisoners. But testimony of survivors and G-2 officials indicates that between capture and execution dozens and perhaps as many as a hundred desaparecidos can be found at any given time in the network of clandestine G-2 holding centers.

These centers range from ordinary-looking civilian homes to cordoned-off sectors of army bases. For example, a tree-shaded mansion at 5-15 Seventh Ave., Zone 9, in the capital was used in 1983 as a secret prison and interrogation center. As of early 1986, desaparecidos were being held at the headquarters of a security force called the Ambulant Military Police (PMA) outside the capital. The prisoners were held in cells hidden behind a concealed door in a building next to the soccer field. Another center, in operation at least until Cerezo's election, is located in the mountains of the Atlantic coast outside the town of Playa Grande, according to agents who have worked there as guards.

All legal efforts to learn the location of G-2 centers have been thwarted. Last September the mother of Fernando de la Roca Elias was able to record the license numbers of two cars used in her son's abduction. She went to the Guatemalan Supreme Court to force the government to release the identities of the vehicles' owners. In an unprecedented—and thus far unrepeated—decision the court ordered the government to comply. One car, plate P-75177, is registered to the Ministry of Defense; the other, plate P-253217, is assigned to the Cuartel General, the country's largest military base. Military sources also say that three peasant coop members from the town of Patzún abducted by a G-2 unit last April 24 were still alive earlier this year and being held on the grounds of Cuartel General. In January the army appointed the commander of this base, General Héctor Alejandro Gramajo, as Cerezo's army chief of staff.

A few lucky enough to escape or be freed from the G-2 system have told their stories. Jim Boldenow, an American minister, was dragged from his car at gunpoint in 1982 and taken to a holding center where interrogators displayed a rack, electric cattle prods, and metal-tipped sticks they said were used for breaking bones. A friend of Boldenow informed the U.S. Embassy of the kidnapping, and embassy officials contacted then-chief of state General Efrain Rios Montt. He personally radioed the holding center and ordered Boldenow's release.

Last year a labor lawyer named Ramiro Ruiz Palma was tipped off by a friend that he was "on a list." He was able to have a contact within the government peruse his G-2 file. The G-2 had discovered that Ruiz Palma had advised a union at the Bank of Guatemala and made trips to Argentina and Mexico. They concluded that he was "a Marxist," and had marked him for elimination. He fled the country. Two weeks later, a union leader, Julio Celso, was snatched from a street corner and interrogated about Ruiz Palma's departure. Celso says he was taken to a house downtown, where he could hear prisoners screaming in other rooms. Celso was strapped to a blood-soaked mattress and threatened with a syringe. Only pressure on the army from friends in the U.S. labor movement secured Celso's release 24 hours later.

A personal connection to a senior officer or G-2 employee has become one of the more valued relationships among the middle and upper classes of Guatemala City. Only they can let relatives know the status of disappeared persons, how they are faring in clandestine detention, and when they are executed. For example, the mother of an agronomist named Jorge Rosal Paz, who disappeared in 1985, was consoled to receive from her G-2 contact at least a memento of her son: his identity card photo.

A few are still willing to speak out publicly against the system of political violence. "They [the military] have created a climate of terror," says Archbishop Próspero Penados, "a form of psychological torture, of constant uncertainty." Since becoming the country's leading bishop in 1984, Penados has boldly denounced the army for a number of specific killings. Nonetheless, Penados rations his public candor and keeps his distance from the GAM, the outspoken human rights group. "In Guatemala, one has to be very careful what one says," he explains. "One walks around with the knowledge that they can kill you at any time."

Nineth García, a housewife in Guatemala City, knows what Penados means. Her husband disappeared in February 1984. Afterward a squad of machine-gun-toting soldiers from the government's special operations brigade invited themselves into her house. They laughingly told her that her husband was "just a little bruised" and would be released in a few days. When he failed to appear, she helped launch the GAM in June 1984. The last two people who attempted to establish human rights organizations in the country were both assassinated. Today García, her eight-year-old daughter, and her fellow GAM survivors are the targets of frequent death threats. She says she now regularly receives phone calls late at night in which a tape-recorded voice describes her upcoming funeral and starts to laugh.

The GAM is the only group left in the country that will publicly confront the army. Last year General Mejía denounced the GAM as "a pressure group managed and directed by the subversion, and one that is making problems for the peaceful Guatemalan population." A police spokesman added that the group "has reached such extremes that it cannot be tolerated anymore." Nine days later Héctor Gómez, a baker active in the GAM, was abducted as he left a meeting. His body appeared the next day with his tongue cut out. Five days later, another GAM leader named Rosario Godoy de Cuevas, who had given a passionate speech at Gómez's funeral, was snatched from a shopping center along with her brother and two-year-old son. Her raped and mutilated body was found in her car; the baby's fingernails had been torn out.

When we asked General Mejía about the incidents at a press conference last November, he denied that either case was a homicide. He said that the Godoys had perished "in a traffic accident." When asked how the baby had lost his fingernails in car crash, Mejía replied that the existence of that injury—which was witnessed and photographed at the wake—was "disinformation."

President Cerezo told us that he attributes the killing of the GAM leaders to agents of the DIT. Cerezo says he is "convinced that the decision was made at the highest level of the government." Military officials involved in the operation confirm this view. They say that a team headed by Jaime Martínez Jiménez, then the chief of the DIT homicide division, carried out the killings. They say he was acting on the orders relayed by Colonel Carlos Dorantes Marroquín, who was then the G-2 commander. Dorantes refused to comment about the GAM killings. Martínez, these sources say, was supervised by army lieutenant colonel Juan Méndez. This February, when the DIT offices were raided, Jaime Martínez was nowhere to be found. He had been informed of the raid in advance and chose to stay home.

It is hard to say who would be more stunned by justice for the Guatemalan military: the victims or the army. The officers and obligarchs who run Guatemala are accustomed to eliminating reformist challengers and dismissing the shaken survivors with gestures of amused contempt. General Mejía has explained the country's chronic violence as "a folkloric problem that began with Cain and Abel. . . . The problem is that nobody is content with anybody."

In a statement as bold as any made under previous military regimes, the army recently acknowledged that the killings of recent years had indeed been official government policy. Defending the decree that gives amnesty to all officers, the army said the measure was needed "to avoid reprisals against government functionaries who, with the framework and jurisdiction . . . of their public functions, may have afterward become the object of controversy."

Guatemala's bureaucracy of death appears more comfortably entrenched than at any time since the mid-1960s. The abolition of the DIT, a group of expendable civilians, has won the armed forces international praise, while G-2's assassinations continue as before. A popular civilian president can now renegotiate the country's foreign debt and secure economic aid for the country's ailing agricultural exporters—impossible under the previous military regimes. And despite earlier statements that he would tolerate no repression on his watch, Cerezo has yet to denounce a single army killing. This May his interior minister said that political murders are no longer a problem.

Cerezo surely would be far more willing to pursue prosecution of military officers if he did not feel that it threatened the survival of his government. If, for example, the Reagan administration publicly condemned the military's ongoing crimes, and supported efforts to hold the army officials accountable, the dream of ending the military's reign of terror would become a real, though distant, possibility. State Department officials claim that private diplomacy can work, leaving little prospect that the Reagan administration will go public. Yet still there is a feeling in Guatemala that unpredictable forces have been loosed and that the final disposition of the country's G-2 assassins is a story yet to unfold. At Cerezo's inauguration, angry crowds spat upon army trucks and shook their fists, crying, "asesinos!" In his first five months in office, Cerezo has received hundreds of letters—some from the friends and relatives of victims, some from government insiders—denouncing specific murders and abductions, and naming the officers responsible.

After hearing the pleas of GAM members a year ago, General Mejaí replied: "You have stated that there are secret prisons—clandestine—and that your sons are alive. You have been given every means available [to locate them]. You can go wherever you like. Where are these clandestine prisons? Where are these family members? . . . I don't know where they are. When you find out, let me know."

The general may be getting an answer sooner than he expected.

A COMPROMISE PROPOSAL FOR CIVIL RICO

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, during the 99th Congress, the Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, has held eight hearings on the proposed changes in the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act [RICO]. During these hearings representatives of the business community argued that the civil section of the RICO law is being abused, and that the imposition of a prior criminal conviction for bringing a civil RICO suit would help curb much of the abuse. Public interest groups and law enforcement agencies claim that such a requirement may not be a necessary recourse and abuse, to the extent it exists, can be remedied in other ways. What follows is a worthwhile attempt at compromise offered by our distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. BARNEY FRANK and discussion concerning his proposal. It is thoughtful and certainly worthy of each Members attention.

H.R. 4892

A bill to amend title 9 and 18 of the United States Code with respect to certain civil proceedings arising under chapter 96 of title 18 of the United States Code

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Civil RICO Amendments Act of 1986".

SEC. 2. ARBITRATION AMENDMENT.

Section 2 of title 9, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end "Any claim arising under section 1964(c) of title 18 and based solely upon fraudulent activity of the party against whom the claim is made is subject to settlement by arbitration under this chapter, and a substantially prevailing claimant in such arbitration or in a prior or later related judicial proceeding on such claim shall be awarded costs of the proceeding, including a reasonable attorney's fee.".

SEC. 3. SECTION 1961 AMENDMENTS.

Section 1961 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)(A), by inserting after "obscene matter," the following: "prostitution involving minors,";

(2) in paragraph (1)(B)—

(A) by striking out "section 1341" and all that follows through "wire fraud)";

(B) by striking out "sections 2314 and" and inserting "section" in lieu thereof; and

(C) by inserting after "white slave traffic)" the following: "chapter 51 (relating to homicide), chapter 73 (relating to obstruction of justice), chapter 110 (relating to sexual exploitation of children), section 32 (relating to destruction of aircraft or aircraft facilities), section 112 (relating to protection of foreign officials), section 115 (relating to assaults against a Federal official's family), section 215 (relating to bank bribery), section 373 (relating to solicitation to commit a crime of violence), section 510 (relating to fraud on Treasury paper or other United States securities), section 511 (relating to forgery of State and other securities), section 666 (relating to theft or bribery in benefit programs), section 844 (relating to explosive materials), sections 1029 and 1030 (relating to fraud in connection with access devices and computers), section 1203 (relating to hostage taking), section 1344 (relating to bank fraud), section 1952A (relating to murder-for-hire), section 1952B (relating to violent crime in aid of racketeering), and sections 2318 and 2320 (relating to counterfeit materials);";

(3) in paragraph (1) by adding at the end of the paragraph the following:

"(F) a criminal violation of the Securities Act of 1933, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, the Trust Indenture Act of 1939, the Investment Company Act of 1940, and the Commodity Exchange Act, or (G) an offense under the Controlled Substances Act or the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act;";

(4) in paragraph (5)—

(A) by inserting "or fraudulent" after "racketeering" each place it appears; and

(B) by inserting before the semicolon at the end the following:

"that—

"(A) are related to the affairs of an enterprise;

"(B) are not isolated; and

"(C) are not so closely related to each other and connected in point of time and place that, while having multiple bases of jurisdiction, including use of the mails, wire communications, or interstate travel or transportation, they constitute a single transaction, involving only one victim, not evincing continuity of activity;

(5) in each of paragraphs (7) and (8), by inserting "or fraud" after "racketeering" each place it appears;

(6) by striking out "and" at the end of the paragraph (9);

(7) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (10) and inserting "; and" in lieu thereof; and

(8) by adding at the end the following:

"(11) 'fraudulent activity' means—

(A) any act which is indictable under any of sections 1341 (relating to mail fraud), 1343 (relating to wire fraud), and 2314 (relating to interstate transportation of stolen property) of this title; or

"(B) an offense involving fraud connected with a case under title 11 or fraud in the sale of securities.".

SEC. 4. SECTION 1962 AMENDMENT.

Section 1962 of title 189, United States Code, is amended by inserting "or fraudulent" after "racketeering" each place it appears.

SEC. 5. SECTION 1963 AMENDMENT.

Section 1963(a)(3) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting "or fraudulent" after "racketeering".

SEC. 6. SECTION 1964 AMENDMENTS.

(a) Section 1964(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "(a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(a)(1)"; and

(2) by adding at the end of the following:

"(2) Any person may institute proceedings under this subsection. In any proceeding brought by any person under this subsection relief shall be granted in conformity with the principles which govern the granting of injunctive relief from threatened loss or damage in other cases, including the possibility that any judgment for money damages might be difficult to execute, but no showing of special or irreparable injury shall have to be made. Upon the execution of such bond against damages for an injunction improvidently granted as the court determines proper a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction may be issued in any action or proceeding before a final determination thereof upon its merits. Such undertaking shall not be required when the applicant is a State or territory of the United States. Recovery if the person substantially prevails shall include the costs of the action, including a reasonable attorney's fee in the trial and appellate courts.".

(b) Section 1964(c) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) Any person who is directly or indirectly, injured, by reason of any violation of section 1962 of this chapter may bring a civil action in an appropriate district court of the United States and shall recover threefold the actual damages sustained by him, and if the person substantially prevails, the costs of the action, including a reasonable attorney's fee in the trial and appellate courts. Damage shall not include pain and suffering.

"(2) If the court determines that the filing of any pleading, motion, or paper under this subsection is frivolous or that any action or proceeding is brought or continued under this subsection in bad faith, vexatiously, wantonly, or for an improper or oppressive reason, the court shall award actual costs of the action or proceeding, including attorney's fees, unless the court finds that special circumstances, including the relative economic position of the parties, make such an award unjust.

"(3) Whenever the United States is, directly or indirectly, injured in its business or property by reason of any violation of section 1962 of this chapter, the Attorney General may bring a civil action in an appropriate district court of the United States and shall recover threefold the actual damages sustained by it, and the cost, including investigations and litigation, of the action.

"(4) Any attorney general of a State may bring an action or proceeding under this subsection in the name of the State, as parens patriae on behalf of individuals residing in such State, in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the defendant, to secure monetary relief as provided in this section for injury sustained by such individuals by reason of any violation of section 1962 of this title. The court shall exclude from the amount of monetary relief awarded in the action or proceeding any amount of monetary relief that duplicates amounts which have been awarded for the same claim or which is properly allocable to individuals who have excluded their claims pursuant to this paragraph and to any business entity. The court shall award the State as monetary relief threefold the total damage sustained as described in this paragraph, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. In any action or proceeding brought under this paragraph, the State attorney general shall, at such times, in such manner, and with such content as the court may direct, cause notice of such action or proceeding to be given by publication. If the court finds that notice given solely by publication would deny due process of law to any person, the court may direct further notice to such person according to the circumstances of the case. Any person on whose behalf an action or proceeding is brought under this paragraph may elect to exclude from adjudication the portion of the State claim for monetary or other relief attributable to such person by filing notice of such election with the court within such time as specified in the notice given under this paragraph. An action or proceeding under this paragraph shall not be dismissed or compromised without the approval of the court, and notice of any proposed dismissal or compromise shall be given in such manner as the court directs. In any action or proceeding under this subsection—

"(A) the amount of the plaintiff's attorney's fee, if any, shall be determined by the court; and

"(B) the court may, in its descretion, award a reasonable attorney's fee to a prevailing defendant upon a finding that the State attorney general has acted in bad faith, frivolously, vexatiously, wantonly, or for an improper or oppressive reason.

"(5) Notwithstanding any other provision of law providing a shorter period of limitation, any civil action or proceeding under this subsection may be commenced at any time within four years after the unlawful conduct terminates or the cause of action accrues, whichever is later. Whenever any civil, criminal, or other action or proceeding is brought or intervened in by the United States to prevent, restrain, or punish any violation of section 1962 of this chapter, the running of the period of limitation prescribed by this paragraph with respect to any cause of action arising under this subsection which is based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in such action or proceeding by the United States, shall be suspended during the pendency of such action or proceeding by the United States and for two years thereafter.".

SUMMARY OF PROBLEMS RAISED BY CONGRESS WATCH/PUBLIC CITIZEN PROPOSED "RICO" AMENDMENT

The Congress Watch/Public Citizen proposal does not address the major problems that impel substantial reform of RICO: federalizing local disputes and displacing other more precise federal and state statutes. The various proposals would create a host of new problems and would spawn even more litigation.

ARBITRATION PROVISION

The proposal to make arbitrable certain RICO claims based "exclusively" on fraud predicates has a number of major flaws:

The proposal would apply only to the small number of cases in which there is a contract between the parties which explicitly includes an arbitration clause broad enough to cover RICO-related allegations.

The proposal would exclude RICO claims of "general public importance," but this is the same vague test that has led a number of courts to hold that RICO disputes are not arbitrable at all.

The proposal to make "ordinary commercial disputes" arbitrable but not those involving "any form of organized crime behavior" would invite additional federal litigation on how to characterize a plaintiff's case.

The proposal to exclude "contracts of adhesion" from arbitration would inject another issue for litigation.

A plaintiff's claim of "fraudulent inducement" would jeopardize the arbitration procedure, since it depends on an enforceable contract.

The arbitration proposal would give claimants "two bites at the apple" because it fails to provide that an adverse ruling in arbitration precludes the plaintiff from pursuing the same issue or claim in a subsequent civil suit.

Arbitration often provides inadequate protection for defendants since, as proponents of the proposal acknowledge, "arbitrators are not bound to follow substantive or procedural law in resolving their cases."

Arbitration is not a panacea, since arbitrators tend simply to "split the difference" between the two sides, and arbitration can be as lengthy and costly as court proceedings.

The proposal erroneously assumes that there is a legitimate need for an additional federal treble-damage remedy in civil disputes, whether the remedy is judicial or arbitral.

REDEFINITION OF "PATTERN" CONCEPT

Although there is considerable confusion in the civil RICO cases about the contours of the "pattern" requirement, the proposal would not be an effective solution:

The proposal would expand the "pattern" concept beyond the Justice Department guidelines.

The Justice Department RICO guidelines from which the proposal is drawn are a basis for prosecutorial discretion, but they are not sufficiently clear and precise to provide manageable statutory standards to govern litigation.

Since most business and commercial relationships extend over a period of time, redefinition of the "pattern" requirement would simply create a pleading obstacle easily met by most plaintiffs using RICO in ordinary commercial disputes.

The Justice Department would certainly block any effort to codify its discretionary guidelines and thus to create new obstacles to criminal prosecutions under RICO.

AWARDS OF FEES AND COSTS IN "FRIVOLOUS SUITS"

A proposal to allow prevailing defendants to recover fees and costs in "frivolous" or "abusive" suits offers no protection:

The main problem with RICO is that it literally covers disputes that should not be addressed by a federal anti-racketeering statute, not that the claims themselves are necessarily "frivolous" or "abusive".

Federal law already provides both explicit and inherent authority to award costs against plaintiffs who bring "frivolous" suits, but the courts are extremely reluctant to use this sanction, in RICO cases or otherwise.

The only practical reform on the fee question would be to mandate equal treatment so that the prevailing party, whether plaintiff or defendant, would receive fees and costs.

EXPANSION OF RICO PREDICATES

There is no evident logic in the proposal to add another two dozen RICO predicates:

The proposal would expressly broaden the coverage of RICO to include violations of economic regulatory statutes such as the Public Utility Holding Company Act, the Trust Indenture Act, the Investment Company Act and the Commodity Exchange Act.

In the absence of recommendations from the Justice Department about significant "organized crime" involvement in other offenses, it makes no sense to select arbitrarily two dozen out of hundreds of federal crimes and include them in RICO.

RECOVERY OF DAMAGES FOR "PERSONAL INJURY"

The proposal to allow recovery of damages for "personal injury" in civil RICO suits would introduce a host of new problems:

The purpose of civil RICO was to create a new remedy for people who incur financial losses when organized crime infiltrates the business world.

Fully adequate state remedies exist to permit recovery of damages, including punitive damages for personal injuries resulting from violent crimes.

As federal courts have held, RICO would become a basis for "federalizing" virtually all product liabiliy suits if Congress authorized recovery for "personal injury" under this statute.

In the midst of national concern about the tort liability crisis, it would be foolish to create a federal treble-damage claim under RICO applicable to product liability disputes.

The proposals to allow persons to sue under RICO for injuries suffered "indirectly" would dramatically and unwisely expand the range of potential RICO plaintiffs to include persons claiming remote injury.

ATTORNEYS' FEES FOR "SUBSTANTIALLY" PREVAILING PLAINTIFFS

The proposal would unwisely expand a plaintiff's entitlement to recover substantial attorneys' fees, so long as the plaintiff has merely prevailed "substantially":

The proposal would give plaintiffs an additional weapon to use in inducing settlements, since the defendant would become liable for fees even if the plaintiff succeeds on only part of his claims.

The expanded entitlement to attorneys' fees would stimulate even more frequent efforts to convert disputes into RICO cases.

The proposal to award fees and costs to any plaintiff who "substantially prevails" in his RICO suit would introduce into RICO litigation the complexities that a similar term in the employment discrimination statutes has spawned.

"PARENS PATRIAE" ACTIONS

The proposal would substantially increase the number and nature of civil RICO suits in federal courts by conferring on state attorneys general a new right to bring RICO class actions as "parens, patriae" on behalf of private citizens in the state:

Congress should not deputize state officials to enforce private federal rights.

State legislatures are the proper bodies to decide whether and under what circumstances state officers should bring RICO-type suits, as about two dozen have done.

The "parens patriae" concept is bitterly opposed as an inappropriate reallocation of private rights, as a presumptuous violation of federalism, and as an invitation to improperly motivated litigation.

The goal of any genuine reform of civil RICO must be to reduce, not expand, the number of suits authorized under this special federal anti-crime statute.

PRIVATE INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

The proposal would also expand RICO unwisely by authorizing private parties to seek injunctions:

Virtually all federal courts have held that RICO does not authorize injunctions in suits by private claimants.

The proponents of the amendment have not shown that the government's power to seek injunctions against RICO violations is inadequate or that other bases for injunctions in private suits are insufficient.

The breadth of RICO, if combined with the threat of preliminary injunction in private civil suits, would threaten to disrupt on-going business affairs and would force additional costly settlements.

PUBLIC CITIZEN CONGRESS WATCH

The proponents of adding a prior criminal conviction requirement to civil RICO have stated their objections to the set of compromise RICO amendments recently introduced by Representative Barney Frank (H.R. 4892) in a document dated June 1986. The responses of Public Citizen and the U.S. Public Interest Research Group to those objections are outlined below.

Frank Amendment No. 1: Provides that private civil RICO claims alleging solely fraudulent predicate activity are arbitrable under the United States Arbitration Act (Title 9).

Objection: "Would apply only to limited number of cases involving contractual relationships between all plaintiffs and all defendants, where preexisting contract provides for arbitration".

Response: The purpose of amending the law to provide that private civil RICO claims are arbitrable under the United States Arbitration Act is to respond to the criticisms that RICO claims are being attached to "ordinary commercial disputes" which really do not involve a pattern of criminal activity related to an enterprise.[1] By adding civil RICO claims to these "ordinary commercial disputes," it is claimed that the disputants acquire a federal forum and can use the "hammer" of RICO's automatic treble damages to extort an unfair settlement.

The amendment is designed to remove all incentive for private parties in "ordinary commercial disputes" to misuse civil RICO.

The basis of disputes between business partners is usually a contract that delineates the rights and responsibilities of the parties involved in the commercial relationship. Today, the trend in commercial relationships is for business partners to want any disputes that arise out of their contracts to be settled by arbitration.[2] Thus, the parties often decide to include an arbitration clause in their contracts.[3]

The reason why businesses prefer arbitration is no doubt related to its relative speed and efficiency over judicial resolutions without entailing a concomitant financial sacrifice. Chief Justice Warren Burger, in a recent speech, stated that, "My own experience (including participation in at least eight to ten arbitrations) persuades me that in terms of cost, time, and human wear and tear, arbitration is vastly better than conventional litigation for many kinds of cases."[4]

The findings of a recent study support the belief that aribitration is faster yet not more costly than the courts.[5]

The study concluded:

1. cases move more quickly through arbitration than through the courts;

2. more of the cases in arbitration are actually decided by a third party as opposed to settled; and

3. arbitration is not substantially more expensive than filing a case in court, especially when one considers that arbitration provides the parties with a decision more often than the courts do.

These facts explain, therefore, why there is a trend towards including arbitration claims in many commercial contracts and that many more are likely to do so in the future. For example, arbitration clauses are widely used in the securities industry today. The Frank amendment concerning arbitration, therefore, could apply to up to 40% of the private civil RICO suits determined by the Justice Department to be based on securities fraud.[6]

Changing the law to provide that private civil RICO suits are arbitrable removes the incentive for business disputants to add RICO claims to "ordinary commercial disputes." First, since RICO claims would be arbitrable, the addition of a RICO cause of action would not give access to the federal court. Second, since arbitrators are not bound to follow substantive or procedural law in their proceedings, the plaintiff in an "ordinary commercial dispute" would no longer be able to use the threat of automatic RICO treble damages to extort an unfair settlement from the defendant.

Objection: "could be avoided entirely by claim of fraudulent inducement".

Response: The current law articulated by the Supreme Court is that an arbitration clause will be set aside only if a party proves that its agreement to the arbitration clause was induced by fraud.[7] The Court specifically concluded that, "The statutory language (of the U.S. Arbitration Act) does not permit the federal court to consider claims of fraud in the inducement of the contract generally." [Emphasis added] [8] The basis for this ruling is that Congress, in enacting the U.S. Arbitration Act, sought to give effect to the intent of the parties when they entered into their contract that their subsequent disputes be referred to arbitration. If the original agreement to resort to arbitration was induced by fraud and, therefore, does not represent the voluntary choice of the parties, then the court has no basis for enforcing the arbitration clause.

Objection: "arbitration no panacea, since arbitrators are not bound by substantive or procedural law, arbitrators are not as skilled or as detached as judges, and arbitration can be as lengthy and as costly as judicial proceedings".

Response: 1. The fact that arbitrators are not bound by substantive or procedural law is one of the attractive features of arbitration. As stated above, arbitrators are chosen by agreement of the parties and are selected for their expertise in the issues involved in the case. The arbitrators chosen, therefore, would have more expertise than a judge who is assigned to the case at random. Thus, the arbitration proceeding affords the parties a more expert and swift decision than a judicial proceeding would.

While arbitrators are not bound to follow substantive or procedural law, Congress has declared its support for the integrity of arbitration awards by providing that review of arbitration awards is very limited. 9 U.S.C. 10 provides that a court may vacate an award only in very circumscribed circumstances including if (1) the award was procured by corruption, fraud, or undue means; (2) an arbitrator was partial or corrupt; (3) the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct and a party's rights were prejudiced; or (4) the arbitrators exceeded their powers.

Furthermore, rule 12 of the American Arbitration Association requires that arbitrators be neutral unless the parties specifically agree in writing to the contrary.

2. The findings of the study cited above indicate that arbitration tends to be swifter than judicial proceedings. The study also shows that arbitration gives parties more for their money since more claims are actually decided in arbitration, rather than settled in court.

Objection: "the proposal is ambiguous and the law concerning arbitration of statutory claims is confused, so the net effect of the provision will be to produce more, not less, litigation".

Response: It is not clear why the prior conviction proponents state that the amendment is ambiguous. The amendment can be clarified if an articulable reason for ambiguity is provided.

[1] Footnotes at end of article.

Currently, the two circuit courts that have ruled on the issue have held that RICO claims are not arbitrable. There is, however, a split in the district courts on the issue. This "confusion" is remedied by the Frank amendment since it plainly overrules the two circuit court decisions and provides that private civil RICO claims are arbitrable.

Objection: "if the proposal is intended to let arbitrators decide RICO causes of action in toto, it is handing judicial power to inexperienced non-Article III 'judges;' if that is not the intent, it will not limit the number or complexity of RICO cases".

Response: Since arbitrators are chosen by the parties, it is unlikely that the parties would select "inexperienced" persons to decide their cases. In addition, the purpose of the amendment is to effectuate the intent of the parties that disputes arising under the contract be arbitrated.

Objection: "ignores basic flaw that no additional federal treble damage remedy needed for these cases at all".

Response: The amendment making RICO claims arbitrable removes the incentive for ordinary commercial disputants to allege RICO causes of action. Thus, it is designed to remove the use of RICO entirely in "ordinary commercial disputes."

RICO is a necessary and appropriate claim, however, for use in situations involving an on-going pattern of criminal behavior related to an enterprise. Besides RICO, there is no other federal or state remedy for these extraordinary kinds of cases.

Frank Amendment No. 2: Codifies the guidelines of the U.S. Department of Justice into the statutory definition of "pattern." Thus, the new definition will not place any extra burdens on the Justice Department, but will impose the same burdens on private litigants as the Department currently imposes on itself. This clarification of the meaning of "pattern" would eliminate up to 42% of private civil RICO cases that the Justice Department found are based on a "single episode having only one victim." The language of the new definition is adapted from the testimony of the National Association of Attorneys General and the National District Attorneys Association.

Objection: "provides less protection than Justice Department guidelines and current law by finding 'pattern' as long as there is 'more than one victim' of the activity."

Response: The only way to find a "pattern" under the Frank definition as long as there is "more than one victim" is to misread the definition. The Frank definition does not find a "pattern" upon proof that there is more than one victim. Instead, it articulates three subparagraphs of requirements for a finding of pattern.

Objection: "guidelines too vague for statutory definition—are suited to prosecutorial discretion, not statutory definition'.

Response: None of the concepts contained in the Frank definition is new. Each has been previously articulated and described in the legislative history of RICO or current case law. See, e.g., S. Rep. No. 617, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. 158, Sedima v. Imrex Co., Inc., 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3285 n.14 (1985), United States v. Moeller, 401 F.Supp. 49 (D.Ct. 1975).

Objection: "would create only minor pleading impediment, since most business and commercial relationships extend over a period of time and often involve many parties".

Response: To state a cause of action under RICO, one must allege, among other things, a pattern of criminal behavior and the existence of an enterprise. Currently, even with less detailed definitions of the elements of a RICO suit than are contained in the Frank bill, Justice Department findings state that 61% of the private RICO cases studied were decided in favor of the defendants prior to trial.[9] A significant portion of these dispositions, though the exact number is unknown, was no doubt based on defendants' motions to dismiss or motions for summary judgment. Existing rules of civil procedure, therefore, can be expected to handle baseless RICO claims.

Frank Amendment No. 3: Eliminates use of the "racketeer' label when the conduct alleged is solely fraudulent activity. This amendment responds to the claim that legitimate businesses are being branded as "racketeers" when they are accused of engaging in exclusively fraudulent activity.

Objection: "Since statute still called RICO, unlikely that this change will alter public perception or press treatment".

Response: Public Citizen and U.S. PIRG do not object to changing the name of the statute.

Objection: "no effect on extortionate use of RICO or federalizing of state claims".

Response: The groups critical of civil RICO have stated that RICO can be used extortionately against legitimate businesses due to the "racketeer" label and the availability of automatic treble damages. The Frank proposal eliminates both the "racketeer" label and the availability of automatic treble damages in "ordinary commercial disputes."

It is correct that the change in the use of the term "racketeer" is not designed to respond to the claim that RICO is federalizing state claims. It should be noted, however, that the findings of the Justice Department study indicate that 65% of the private RICO cases studied could have been filed in federal court even without the RICO allegation. The Frank amendments do, however, respond to this criticism by eliminating the broad predicates act of "fraud in the sale of securities" and replacing it with specified criminal violations of the federal securities laws.

Frank Amendment No. 4: Provides that defendants may be awarded costs and attorney's fees if RICO suits are brought "in bad faith, vexatiously, wantonly, or for an improper or oppressive reason."

Objection: "misses the point since abuse is attributable to literal breadth of statute, not legally 'frivolous' suits".

Response: The Frank bill contains four amendments specifically designed to tighten up the RICO statute in specific response to the criticisms involving RICO's breadth. The Frank amendment concerning sanctions for bad faith suits enforces these restrictions on the use of RICO.

Objection: "authority for awarding costs and fees to defendants in frivolous cases exists but courts are reluctant to act".

Response: In 1983, Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure was rewritten and strengthened to provide for sanctions against parties and their attorneys who conduct abusive litigation. Since then, nearly 200 requests for sanctions have been reported and about half of them have been granted. Thus, courts are not reluctant to apply sanctions in appropriate cases.

Frank Amendment No. 5: Provides for a four-year statute of limitations, modeled after the federal antitrust laws.

Objection: "measuring four years from last predicate act rather than act causing injury would permit stale suits alleging intervening predicate act by defendant against someone else".

Response: The Frank amendment simply adds a uniform four-year statute of imitations.

It is current law that a RICO suit may allege predicate acts committed by the defendant against persons or entities other than the named plaintiff(s). This rule is appropriate because RICO is designed to apply to a series of on-going and pervasive criminal activity. The "pattern" of criminal activity may not be revealed by conduct against only one victim. Thus, one victim cannot be and is not restricted in its proof of a pattern by the requirement that the predicate acts alleged all involved the plaintiff. To provide otherwise would read the pattern requirement out of the statute.

Objection: "four years is longer than most tort statutes of limitation".

Response: RICO is not equivalent to a tort statute. It is a heightened combination of a federal criminal statute and the federal antitrust laws. The general federal criminal statute of limitations is five years (18 U.S.C. 3282) and the statute of limitations in the antitrust laws is four years. The Frank amendment adopts the 4-year statute of limitations.

Frank Amendment No. 6: Specifies that only criminal violations of the federal securities laws may give rise to a RICO suit and updates RICO by adding behavior made criminal in 1984 to the list of predicate acts. These changes were suggested in the testimony of the National Association of Attorneys General and the National District Attorneys Association.

Objection: "would include violations of economic regulatory statutes unrelated to organized crime".

Response: Persons and entities engaged in organized criminal activity do not restrict themselves to violating only certain criminal statutes.

Objection: "makes bad situation worse by expanding coverage of statute".

Response: The addition of predicate acts keeps the law up-to-date so that it can remain an effective tool in the fight against organized criminal activity.

Objection: "no reason for picking these; no indication of particular organized crime involvement".

Response: The predicate acts were suggested in the testimony of the National Association of Attorneys General and the National District Attorneys Association for their relationship to predicate acts currently contained in the statute. See, e.g., murder-for-hire.

Frank Amendment No. 7: Eliminates the current anomaly that a person with a claim cognizable under the statute may not be afforded compensation if he or she has suffered personal injury.

Objection: "worsens current tort liability crises by creating federal treble-damage remedy applicable to product liability and other tort actions" and "expands federalizing of tort system; adequate state remedies exist for personal injuries".

Response: The purpose of the amendment is not to allow products liability cases to be alleged as RICO violations but to cure the anomaly that there are harms caused by violations of RICO, like injuries resulting from kidnapping or arson, that currently have no remedy. Furthermore, the amendment specifically precludes compensation for pain and suffering. Public Citizen and U.S. PIRG would support an amendment to this section that would remedy the anomaly but preclude the allegation of RICO claims in products liability suits.

Objection: "departs from RICO's purpose of protecting against financial injury caused by infiltration of legitimate business by organized crime".

Response: This amendment is consistent with the purpose of RICO even if the most narrow brush is put on its legislative history. It is victims of traditional violent organized criminal behavior like murder, kidnapping, and arson who are left without relief due to the current prohibition of recovery for personal injury.

Objection: "recovery for vague 'indirect' damages would encourage plaintiffs to avoid other more precise regulatory systems to use RICO to collect for remote damages not recoverable under specific statutes".

Response: Harm caused by RICO-type behavior should be compensated whether it is "direct" or "indirect" injury. (The courts are currently split on this issue.)

The legal concepts of "standing" and "proximity of harm" are meant to deny relief if the harm alleged is too attenuated to the RICO violation. See, e.g., Warren v. Mfg. Nat'l Bank, 759 F.2d 542, 544 (6th Cir. 1985). These concepts are not changed.

Frank Amendment No. 8: Permits plaintiffs who substantially prevail either by being awarded injunctive relief or through settlement to apply to the court for a reasonable attorney's fee.

Objection: "expands in terrorem effect of RICO claim since full attorney's fees could be awarded even if plaintiff partially loses".

Response: This Frank amendment responds to the inequity exemplified by Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Liebowitz, 730 F.2d 905 (2d Cir. 1984). In that case, plaintiff Aetna sued one of its brokers for illegally converting to his own use money paid to him as insurance premiums. Aetna succeeded in getting a preliminary injunction against the defendant, but the case was settled before going to trial. The settlement agreement negotiated by the parties provided that Aetna would apply to the district court for an award of attorney's fees and costs. Upon Aetna's application, however, the court ruled that there could be no award of attorney's fees due to the absence of statutory language authorizing such an award.

The Frank amendment would allow the court to award attorney's fees in a situation like the one in Aetna.

Objection: "would generate litigation over meaning of 'substantially prevails'."

Response: There are currently numerous statutes authorizing the award of attorney's fees to a party who "substantially prevails" or to a "prevailing party." These terms, therefore, have already been fully interpreted by the courts.[10]

Frank Amendment No. 9: Explicitly provides for state attorneys general to bring civil RICO suits on behalf of their citizens. The language of this parens patriae amendment is modeled after the Clayton antitrust law.

Objection: "federal government ought not to deputize state AGs where own legislatures have not chosen to give powers to them".

Response: The purpose of parens patriae suits is to allow the chief legal officer in a state to enforce the federal rights of its citizens and is not inconsistent with the powers given to them by their own state legislators.

Objection: "inappropriate usurpation of private rights enforceable through class action lawsuits".

Response: The supporters of the prior conviction requirement are the ones who would "usurp" private rights by virtually eliminating RICO's private right of action. The existence of parens patriae suits enhance, not usurp, private rights.

Objection: "greatly expands the number of potentially abusive civil RICO suits since now headline seeking AGs will be able to bring civil RICO suits to generate publicity".

Response: 1. As the chief legal officer in the states, states' attorneys general are not known for bringing "potentially abusive suits." Furthermore, the resources of states' attorneys general offices are not sufficient for them to have the potential to "expand greatly" the number of civil RICO suits.

2. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that an attorney general brought an "abusive" civil RICO suit to generate publicity, the primary publicity the suit would generate is adverse publicity.

Frank Amendment No. 10: Explicitly allows private parties to seek injunctive relief. The courts are currently split on whether or not injunctive relief is available to private civil RICO litigants.

Objections: "would greatly increase in terrorem effect by permitting threats of 'dissolving' defendant, requiring divestiture, or banning defendant from engaging in particular trade or business" and "would lead to disruption of ongoing legitimate business activities".

Response: Private injunctive relief is necessary to stop the continued commission of RICO violations. Thus, for example, (1) Aetna Insurance Company successfully enjoined one of its employees under civil RICO from converting insurance premiums to his own use and (2) VISA and MasterCard successfully enjoined the commission of massive nation-wide credit card fraud under civil RICO.

The Frank amendment contains the usual requirements applicable to the award of private injunctive relief when a statute is the basis for the relief.

Objection: "no evidence that existing injunctive remedies in the law are inadequate".

Response: Equitable relief is necessary and appropriate to prevent the dissipation of assets before trial. See, e.g., testimony of Irvin B. Nathan. Forfeiture of Narcotics Proceeds, Hearings Before the Senate Subcomm. on Criminal Justice, Comm. on the Judiciary, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. Thus, it should be explicitly granted in the statute.

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, last September, Secretary of State Shultz appointed a commission to study the refugee situation in Southeast Asia. The commission, chaired by former Gov. Robert D. Ray of Iowa, was comprised of the following members: Irena Kirkland, a holocaust survivor and former refugee; Gale W. McGee, former U.S. Senator from Wyoming and U.S. Ambassador to the Organization of American States; Jonathan Moore, former Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs, now director of the Institute of Politics at Harvard; and Edward C. Schmults, deputy Attorney General of the United States, now senior vice president and general counsel, GTE Corp., Stamford, CT.

The Ray Commission recently issued its findings, after an extensive study of the issues involved in the refugee situation.

Since I have received numerous requests for copies of the report, I submit it for the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues.

IV: SUMMARY OF FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

FINDINGS

1. Although changes are occurring, the refugee situation in Southeast Asia continues to warrant special coordinated international relief and resettlement efforts.

2. The roots of the refugee situation in Southeast Asia lie with Vietnam's repressive and expansionist policies which continue to create pressures that cause thousands to endanger their lives in clandestine flight.

3. Southeast Asian states continue to provide first asylum, but condition this policy on their not being left with a residual population.

4. U.S. traditions of humanitarian concern and response require continued U.S. leadership in an international program for Indochinese refugees.

RECOMMENDATIONS

A. How to preserve first asylum in Southeast Asia while addressing the problems of declining resettlement offers and increasing residual populations?

1. The Panel attaches the greatest significance to the preservation of first asylum. It ask the U.S. Government to reaffirm to the nations of Southeast Asia the importance the United States and other nations attach to their continuing to offer asylun for Indochinese refugees.

2. The United States and other governments should ensure that international financial support for relief and resettlement reponds adequately to refugee needs in Southeast Asian nations so that first asylum will be continued.

3. The United States should assert its leadership in renewed international approaches to effective durable solutions for long-stayers.

4. As part of an international effort with other participating nations to find durable solutions for long-stayers, the United States should begin processing refugees from the current population with no ties to the United States (P-6). In selecting cases from this group for resettlement, the United States should take into account length of stay in first asylum camps and other compelling circumstances.

5. The United States should take the lead with other participating countries in a "sharing-out" of the remaining refugee populations, offering more third-country resettlement in exchange for local settlement of refugees where appropriate.

6. A comprehensive approach to the "long-stayer" problem must take account of the need to avoid creating inducements to immigration by additional potential "long-stayers," particularly those whose primary motivation for departure is economic rather than a "well-founded fear of persecution."

7. Other countries should be encouraged to revive their participation in Indochinese resettlement. Where countries cannot accept large numbers, they should agree to receive small numbers of special cases, such as hard-to-place handicapped refugees, and those who have successfully completed training courses.

B. Whether and how to shift Indochinese family reunification cases from refugee flows to immigration channels?

1. The Indochinese Refugee Program should be restructured to have two essential components: one, an effective refugee program under which the legal definition of refugees would be applied fairly as contemplated by law; and the other, an effective immigration program, with the same procedures used by the United States throughout the world for those who qualify for admission on the basis of their family ties or other immigrant preferences.

2. Persons now in the first asylum camps should not be adversely affected by this restructuring. Existing processing criteria should in general continue to be applied to those who arrived in first asylum prior to announcement of changes.

3. Refugee admissions should continue to be generally available for those reaching first asylum, or in their country of origin, who have a well-founded fear of persecution as described in the refugee definition, regardless of their location, date of arrival, family relations, or other criteria of eligibility. For example, refugees newly arrived in first asylum who have relatives in the United States should be admitted as refugees rather than as immigrants as long as they qualify as refugees under the law. Adequate admissions numbers should be authorized in the annual consultations to provide for such genuine refugees.

4. For a recommended 2-year transition period, new arrivals with close family ties in the United States should be processed as refugees if they cannot qualify within that time for immigration visas. Spouses and minor children of refugees in the United States should continue to benefit from the Visas 93 procedure.

5. Humanitarian parole should be extended generously to overcome unusual hardships.

6. The changes in the Indochinese Refugee Program should be widely publicized throughout Southeast Asia by whatever means will effectively reach persons in the refugee-producing countries. Persons who will not be deemed refugees should not be induced by ambiguous policies to leave their homelands and to undertake hazardous journeys only to have their expectations dashed.

7. Public and private programs should be undertaken to encourage family members in the United States to become U.S. citizens and to file immigration petitions for their relatives.

8. The Federal Government, in cooperation with State and local governments and private voluntary organizations involved in Indochinese resettlement, should undertake a separate study of benefits for Indochinese refugees and immigrants.

C. How to make the Orderly Departure Program a more effective alternative to clandestine flight, including ways to gain the release of the re-education camp prisoners?

1. The United States should work with the Vietnamese and the UNHCR and other resettlement countries to resolve the "backlog" impasse and to restore the Orderly Departure Program to full operation as soon as possible.

2. Special efforts should be made to improve arrangements for the departure of Amerasians, immigrant visa holders, and other persons of special concern to the United States.

3. There should be a concerted campaign to hold the Vietnamese authorities to their earlier promises to release the re-education camp prisoners and to permit them to come to the United States with their families. The United States should deal with this problem with flexibility and determination.

4. The United States and the international community should condemn in the strongest terms pirate attacks against refugees, and should stress that Thailand has a special responsibility to take effective measures to combat this problem, including local law enforcement programs and boat registration.

5. The United States must vigorously support bilateral and international efforts to combat piracy and to promote rescue at sea. The UNHCR should take a more aggressive role in combating piracy and encouraging rescue at sea.

6. The international resettlement programs for those rescued at sea should be brought into line with normal scheduling of refugee processing.

D. How to respond to the continuing arrival of Lao in Thailand and to the Royal Thai Government/United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (RTG/UNHCR) border screening program?

1. The United States should support the Royal Thai Government/UNHCR screening program for Lao arrivals and should press for improved conditions in the holding centers for those awaiting return to Laos.

2. The Thai Government and UNHCR should be encouraged to complete arrangements with the Lao Peoples Democratic Republic for the safe return of those found not to qualify as refugees.

3. U.S. refugees processing should be continued for lowland Lao in Thailand. Future admissions should be consistent with the recommendations in section B above. Immigrant processing should be expedited for those who qualify.

4. The United States and other nations should continue to provide adequate support for care and maintenance, including education, of Lao refugees until alternative long-term solutions are in place.

5. Consideration should be given to developing self-sufficiency programs supported by international funding for highland Lao who cannot return to Laos and who do not seek third country resettlement.

6. The UNHCR should be encouraged to expand the voluntary repatriation program to Laos with the cooperation of the Lao Government. Increased information about conditions in Laos should be communicated to those in first asylum camps, and more concentrated efforts should be made to follow up on returnees.

7. The United States should continue efforts to obtain Lao Government cooperation for legal departures from Laos. Lao in America should be encouraged to file the necessary petitions for their family members.

E. How to proceed given the new situation along the Thai-Cambodian border which has placed more than 245,000 displaced Khmer in evacuation sites in Thailand?

1. The United States should assist the U.N. Border Relief Operation (UNBRO), the International Committee of the Red Cross, and the Thai authorities to ensure the safety of all border camps as much as possible from Vietnamese attack. Diplomatic efforts to discourage Vietnamese attacks on civilian camps should be continued.

2. Security measures within the present sites should be enhanced through additional guards and patrols, increased training, and better communications. The protection system operated by the International Committee of the Red Cross should be monitored and strengthened.

3. In coordination with other concerned countries, the United States should expedite admissions processing for Khmer on the Thai-Cambodian border for those eligible for immigrant visas and Visas 93 (spouses and minor children of refugees in the United States). Humanitarian parole should be used generously for especially compelling cases not otherwise qualifying.

4. The United States should support efforts to improve and expand education programs on the border, with financial support from governments as well as private sources. The Thai authorities should be urged to agree to such programs. Health care and family planning services in the border camps should be expanded.

5. The United States should assure that the remaining denied Khmer are reviewed and, in cooperation with UNHCR, should review its requests for resettlement processing of the "family card holders," those who entered the camp between 1980 and 1984.

6. The Thai authorities should be pressed to keep the Khao-I-Dang camp open for Cambodian refugees until solutions other than U.S. resettlement can be developed for this group. Return to the border should be carried out only on a voluntary basis.

7. Because of their special vulnerability and the lack of alternative solutions, the land Vietnamese on the border, including those without ties to the United States, should be processed as rapidly as possible for resettlement as refugees. Efforts should be made to encourage other governments to join in resettling the land Vietnamese through a UNHCR program in which many countries agree to admit at least small numbers.

8. The Royal Thai Government should be urged to maintain a site for land Vietnamese that is safe from Vietnamese military attacks, as well as from other surrounding populations.

F. How to ensure the continuing effective leadership of the UNHCR in seeking multilateral solutions to these problems which will maximize international burden sharing?

1. The United States should support the efforts of the new High Commissioner to strengthen the principle of international burden sharing and to improve UNHCR efficiency and effectiveness.

2. The High Commissioner should be asked to take the lead in the search for sustainable solutions to refugee problems in Southeast Asia, including more widespread resettlement, voluntary repatriation, and local integration.

3. Traditional donors and others should be encouraged to increase financial support for UNHCR and other refugee-related international organizations.

4. Despite domestic budget constraints, the United States should provide its fair share of refugee relief and resettlement support.

CONTRA QUAGMIRE

HON. DON BONKER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, the House vote on allowing military assistance to the Contras was both surprising and disappointing. It represents a dramatic reversal of the House on three separate occasions this year defeating the Reagan administration's request for $100 million to the so-called Nicaraguan freedom fighters. We are now sending mixed signals to those invoiced in the Nicaraguan conflict. Indeed, this is no way to conduct foreign policy.

The Reagan policy toward Central America generally, and Nicaragua in particular, is obviously not effective. By pursuing a military solution, the administration has forced us into a Contra quagmire; each time the White House returns to Congress for more money, we sink deeper in the mud.

The U.S. Government should not be allying itself with efforts to undermine or overthrow other governments. Yet that seems to be the primary goal of the Reagan administration. We should also limit our support to those who uphold our values, but the Contras are widely reported by reputable human rights groups to engage in gross human rights violations. Even the administration's own most recent quarterly report on Nicaragua raises numerous questions about the Contra's human rights record. Moreover, the Contras are led by former National Guardsmen whose lack of respect for individual rights during the Somoza dictatorship has carried over to their present positions and caused fragmentation and disputes within the Contra's own command.

Even if political and military support of the Contras can be justified, is it possible they can win a military victory? Our Government's senior intelligence officers are not optimistic about such an outcome. Indeed, after 5 years of both overt and covert U.S. support, the Contras have yet to capture and hold a single village.

Given the United States experience in Vietnam, the administration's efforts to increase our financial commitment and military support seem all too familiar. Contra assistance has gone up from $14 million to $27 million to $100 million. Yet the recent investigation by the GAO and Western Hemisphere Subcommittee indicates that more than $14 million of the money has not gone to the intended recipients, but has possibly enriched some Miami middlemen and top level officials in other Central American countries. Four former Contras warned yesterday that any additional aid to the Contras would be siphoned off by the present Contra leadership. At this time of severe budgetary constraints and especially in light of this gross mismanagement, how can the administration, in good conscience, seek any further funding?

The administration claims it is opposed to economic sanctions. Yet it invoked a national emergency and imposed a trade embargo against Nicaragua. One year later we see the Nicaraguan economy no worse off as a result of the embargo, and, in fact, stronger through the diversification of its foreign markets, including closer economic ties with Soviets.

The administration claimed in March, in a desparate attempt to win aid for the Contras, that the money would be for humanitarian purposes. Yet the night before the House vote, a White House press release described ground-to-air missiles and Green Beret training as "humanitarian" aid.

In the weeks leading up to each vote, the administration has revealed to the American people and the Congress new evidence of Soviet or Cuban involvement or unprecedented Nicaraguan incursions across its neighbors' borders. Yet as these allegations have been investigated further, the only revelation has been that the administration has misrepresented or distorted the facts.

How many more times will the Congress have to debate the Contra aid question before the administration recognizes that military action by the Contras will not force the Sandinistas out of Nicaragua or bring peace to Central America? The issue is not whether the money should be provided in trenches or divied up into military and humanitarian aid. The issue is how we extricate ourselves from the administration's Contra aid quagmire and help negotiate an end to the bloody conflict in Central America.

Mr. Speaker, despite yesterday's vote, a broad majority of the American people are tired or being misled about the Contra's military capabilities, their commitment to human rights and democracy, and their need for ever-increasing sums of money. The American people know that until the administration redirects its policies and energies fully toward negotiations within the Contadora framework, we will contine to wallow in this quagmire.

STOP EXIMBANK LOANS TO ANGOLA

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention to a recent article in the Washington Inquirer, May 23, 1986, "Justice: Angola Not Red." This article by Peter Samuel, addresses my recent suit against the Eximbank for giving loans to Angola.

My concern with Angola centers around the Communist government currently running the country. To quote the State Department, Angola is run by "the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola [MPLA]." The State Department describes the MPLA as a Marxist-Leninist group and has stated that the MPLA is the only form of government in power in Angola. With the State Department's remarks in mind, I find it hard to believe that the Eximbank is allowed to loan money to Angola. I feel strongly that the United States should not allow loans of any kind to be permitted to Communist countries and I have introduced legislation (H.R. 97) addressing this problem.

The Department of Justice replied to my suit by backing the State Department and declared that the Peoples' Republic of Angola is not a Communist country. Mr. Speaker and fellow Members please consider the effect that the Justice Department's decision will have on how the United States determines what constitutes a Communist country. Angola is clearly Communist and the United States should recognize it as such.

JUSTICE SAYS ANGOLA NOT COMMUNIST

(By Peter Samuel)

WASHINGTON.—The Department of Justice has backed the State Department and the Export-Import Bank in telling a court in Virginia that the Peoples' Republic of Angola is not a communist country. Rep. Philip Crane (R—Illinois), five other congressmen and two Angolan freedom fighters have petitioned the United States District Court in Alexandria, Virginia to declare Angola as a communist country and alleged that the Export-Import (Ex-imbank) is in violation of the law in financing that country. The case calls for an injunction forbidding the Ex-imbank from lending money to Angola.

The act establishing the U.S. Eximbank prohibits it from supporting loans to communist countries unless a Presidential determination is made that such lending is in the national interest. No U.S. President has so determined.

In the answer to the complaint, the Justice Department's Richard Willard and Justin Williams joined with attorneys for the Eximbank in flatly denying that the Peoples' Republic of Angola is a communist country.

The reply dated May 15 to Phil Crane and his colleagues in the case is signed by Richard Willard, Assistant Attorney General and Justin Williams, Acting United States Attorney.

There is some surprise in Administration circles that hardliner Ed Meese should associate himself so fully with the Eximbank and the Department of State. Meese was personally served with a writ as chief law officer of the U.S. Government, which owns the Eximbank, so he should be aware of the case.

A National Security Council paper on Angola late last year that Eximbank loans totalling $250 million to Angolan oil development were helping to generate the income to finance a large Soviet arms buildup and the maintenance of 30,000 Cuban troops which have been propping up the Marxist-Leninist regime here and trying to suppress non-communist elements. In early February, State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said that the Gulf-Chevron companies that have been the channel for Eximbank loans, should "reconsider" their operations in Angola. Speaking at the National Press Club here, Angolan freedom fighter Jonas Savimbi, who leads the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, (UNITA), said: "It is the money . . . which is keeping the Cubans going. The Cubans and the Russians, they are killing indigenous people of our country, because they are getting money from Gulf."

Angolan oil revenues last year were $2.5 billion, 90 percent of the country's total export earnings, and those revenues were generated from oil field development work done with Eximbank loans. Interviewed by this correspondent in February when the court action was lodged, spokesman for the Eximbank, Russell Boner, said there were $73 million approved loans outstanding to Angola and $102 million of authorized loan monies undisbursed.

The U.S. Government does not recognize the Angolan regime, which is usually described as "Marxist-Leninist." The U.S. Government is now spending about $15 million a year in military assistance to freedom fighters there.

The Department of State's Background Notes pamphlet on Angola dated March 1985 says that country's government is "a Marxist People's Republic, one-party." The Marxist government's flag uses typical communist insignia and colors, in particular "a yellow five pointed star, half encircled by a machine gun crossed by a machete." It describes a fully Soviet style of government, foreign policy and international connections: "Angola has depended on the Soviet Union and Cuba for security assistance and has adopted a pro-Soviet foreign policy." Angola is described as "clearly allied to the Soviet Union."

The State Department's report on voting practices at the United Nations, shows Angola voted against the U.S. more often than any of its 159 other members.

State's latest report on human rights practices in different countries says that "The People's Republic of Angola is ruled by a small group of officials within a single political party, the Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA). President Jose Eduardo don Santos is both head of state and chief of the party. The MPLA has established a one party state . . . all major decisions are made by the Party Central Committee and Political Bureau."

"People's Vigilance Brigades," run by the party, help control the population and report on dissidence. The Government's goal has been self-described as "the transformation of Angola into a socialist economy" and major nationalization and expropriation have occurred.

On political rights the State Department says: "Angola is ruled by a small group of officials within the party apparatus of the ruling MPLA. The constitution provides for popular participation in the political process, but the MPLA is the only legal party, and activities by all opposition groups have been banned. Citizens therefore do not have the right to change their government."

ARTHUR J. ALMEIDA—OUTSTANDING CITIZEN

HON. FERNAND J. ST GERMAIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to bring to the attention of my colleagues the outstanding merits of one of my most community-oriented constituents. The man I speak of today is truly dedicated toward helping his fellow man. His name is Arthur J. Almeida.

Mr. Almeida lives with his wife, Isabelle, in Cumberland, RI. He has served as the current president of the Grey Panthers for 3 years. Most residents around the State know him as a man who is instrumental in elderly and veterans affairs. Recently he was appointed to the National New England State Steering Committee for the Grey Panthers. Now people from all over the region will become familiar with this man's name and merits.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to tell my colleagues a little bit about this special man.

He was born in New Bedford, MA, on June 20, 1920. He served in World War II with the Army in the Pacific theater. He is now a 100-percent disabled veteran.

After the service, Arthur became increasingly involved in various veterans' organizations. He is currently the liaison officer for the Amvets. His previous positions with the organization have been commander and hosptial chairman. He is also actively involved in the Disabled American Veterans [DAV] and the Veterans of Foreign Wars [VFW].

Arthur also spends much of his time serving on several commissions. These include the Governor's Advisory Commission on Senior Citizens, the State Crime Commissioin for the Elderly, and the board of directors of the Department of Elderly Affairs.

His most recent lobbying activities include the State check cashing bill. This important bill prohibits a fee for cashing Social Security or public assistance checks.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Almeida stands as an inspiration to all of us who strive for the very best policies regarding our Nation's veterans and elderly. We are most fortunate to have him working with us.

VINCENT SOMBROTTO—HE HASN'T FORGOTTEN HIS ROOTS

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, recently, Newsday ran a profile of Vincent Sombrotto, my constituent and friend, who serves as the president of the National Association of Letter Carriers. It recounts the dedication and hard work that enabled this extraordinary man to win the presidency of the National Association of Letter Carriers. It is also clear that along the way, Vince Sombrotto hasn't lost touch with the membership of his union, and the community that it serves. I ask permission to insert this article in the RECORD and commend it to my colleagues.

THE LONELY PRIDE OF A MAILMAN

(By David Behrens)

WASHINGTON.—When Vincent Sombrotto was 24, his mother urged him to take a post office job.

Families who had endured the Great Depression saw the post office as a rare symbol of stability in a mean world. It promised a steady job. A regular paycheck, Food on the table in hard times. A man could get married. Upward mobility was an unfamiliar notion on East 118th Street.

Just before Christmas in 1947—still at loose ends after serving in the Navy—Sombrotto followed his mother's advice and took a temporary job at a Bronx post office.

"It's a job," his mother counseled. After the war, Sombrotto recalls, "I couldn't seem to settle down, so I took a letter carrier's job. I promised my mother—as long as they kept me, I'd keep the job." They did. And so did he.

Vincent Sombrotto was sorting out his Monday morning mail.

The letters were addressed to: Vincent R. Sombrotto, president, National Association of Letter Carriers, 100 Indiana Ave, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

"Here's one posted Friday in Dayton, Ohio," he said. "This is from California, also posted Friday. And here's one from Florida. Mailed on Saturday!" There was pride in his voice. The pride of a man who believes that today's postal service is as good as ever. A lonely pride, perhaps. But then, Vincent Sombrotto's life is a collage of impossible dreams.

Sombrotto has served as president of the 206,000-member unions since 1979. His spacious office, decorated with old mementos and the photos of relatives and presidents, is only a few blocks from the Capitol of the United States.

It is a long way from East Harlem, the neighborhood Sombrotto loved with a passion. There, he was born 63 years ago. Played boyhood games in the schoolyards. Won a diploma from James Monroe High. Hung out with the guys on the corner. Later, he married a young woman named Rae and, much later, celebrated the births of the first six of their seven children, before they all moved to Port Washington, seeking suburban space.

The office is also a giant step up from the sidewalks of Manhattan, where Sombrotto was a working stiff for more than two decades, lugging the mail to the office buildings around Madison Avenue and 44th Street, knowing everybody. "From folks who were considered movers and shakers to the fellows who wax the floors in the lobbies. I was comfortable with all of these people." And he never forgot where he came from.

For 22 years, he lived the life of an ordinary postman. He got married in 1957, had children, worked a second job to make ends meet. Then in mid-1969 came what Sombrotto now calls "the caprice," Unexpectedly he became a union leader.

That summer, there was a strike at two Bronx post offices. The wildcat strikers were later reinstated, but lost two weeks' pay, and union officials refused to help. Sombrotto was furious.

For the first time, he became involved in labor politics. At every union meeting he'd raise the issue, and within six months the strikers were reimbursed with union funds. In early 1970, city postal workers struck again, inspired by Sombrotto and his backers.

This time, the walkout spread along the Atlantic Coast, and for eight days, 200,000 postal workers joined the strike. Before the year ended, Sombrotto was elected president of Branch 36, the Manhattan-Bronx local, the national union's largest.

As leader of the city local, Sombrotto set aside two weeks each year to carry the mail. His final delivery came in the fall of 1978, just after his election as president of the national union.

"I used to go back every year for a couple of weeks, to see the guys I worked with for so many years. It wasn't required . . . but I had carried mail for twenty-four years, so I liked to go back. It reminded me—this is what I did for a living and I shouldn't forget it. I just happened to be elected union president."

A few months later, he was dining in the White House. For some, the White House inspires fear and fawning. Not for Sombrotto, who dropped in often during the Jimmy Carter years and attended the former president's farewell dinner party in 1980.

By then, the "gee whiz" feeling was long gone. "First of all, I believe anything is possible in a society like ours . . . But if I did stop and took time to analyze it, the feeling would be overwhelming. And I don't allow myself to think that way, because then it would be tough to represent our people."

Years ago, a Carter aide told him that "even in the Oval Office, you talk like you're standing on a street corner." Yeah, true, Sombrotto agreed.

A week ago, Sombrotto met Ronald Reagan, whose politics he opposes. "I respect the president, of course, but he's just a human being, and I want to talk to him on that level . . . I think of him as being no better than the porter I met coming in, just at a different station."

Sombrotto changed his own station when he got the top job in the union. In the early '70s, he had led a campaign to democratize the union's voting laws by throwing out an antiquated proxy system that insured the status of the status quo. After two attempts, he was elected national president in the fall of 1978.

It marked the first time a rank-and-file union member, unconnected with the union's national organization, had made a successful challenge. "So I figured, I'll probably never get another chance to carry the mail, not as president. So I did." Several weeks later, in January, 1979, he took office.

"On the street," he recalled, "I always liked carrying the mail, being out there, doing the job, without any pressure of having to make decisions that affect hundreds of thousands of people. I like to remind myself of those days."

Sombrotto was ready for the move to Washington. His move to Port Washington, a decade earlier, had been far more wrenching.

"East Harlem was a wonderful neighborhood to grow up in. You knew everybody. But by 1969, we had six children and we'd been looking for a larger house. It was difficult. Could we afford it? Would it be close enough? So we picked a spot where we knew some people from the old neighborhood."

Sombrotto was still carrying mail at the time. When his 6 a.m. shift ended at 2:30 p.m., he would put in another three hours of work. "Since the fifties, I had had a part-time trucking business with some guys who also carried mail. The pay was meager. You needed to work more than twenty years to reach nine thousand dollars."

In 1969, after 20 years as a letter carrier, Sombrotto was making about $8,000 a year. Today a letter carrier starts at $19,427 a year and moves up to $26,269 in 12 years. The head of the national union also makes a good living, about $66,000 a year, but less than most leaders of national unions.

Working his route, Sombrotto said, was never boring, despite the bad pay. "Every day was new, a challenge. One day raining, one day sunny, one day windy. It was just tiring, working two jobs."

The move to Long Island was a culture shock. "Until then, I had lived my whole life within three blocks of where I was born, on 116th Street. We moved to East 118th Street when I was a kid, and when we got married in 1957, I moved again. To 119th Street. That was it." Until the children were born, he never envisioned suburban living.

Sombrotto's five daughters and two sons range from 9 to 28 years. One daughter attends medical school. Two other daughters work in Long Island department stores and another is getting married next week. His first-born son is a world-class lacrosse player, he boasts, "more famous on Long Island than I am." Another son just finished high school, and his youngest daughter is in grade school.

The children adjusted to the Island, but he found the new lifestyle difficult, Sombrotto admits.

"When you live in the old neighborhood, you leave your house and go downstairs, and there are always a bunch of guys hanging around on the corner. You had people around you all day." Suddenly, Sombrotto found himself on a street in Port Washington, with no one hanging out at the corner.

"Suburban life was nice, all right. Peace and tranquility. But part of the fun was eliminated. You became a captive of your own home. I'm glad my older children had the chance to live in East Harlem, because it had a mix of people, all races, all colors. You saw life from a different perspective."

Sitting in his Washington office, Sombrotto reflected: "Yeah, I think you miss a lot in the suburbs, where everyone worries about infringing on other people's privacy. In the city, you had an extended family. You met dozens of people and knew everything that happened. We were so close to each other, so we moved to the suburbs to get away from it."

Now, the nation has become Sombrotto's neighborhood. Maintaining an apartment in Washington, near his office, he travels constantly, to meet letter carriers in every state. He recited his itinerary: "Last week in Las Vegas. Chicago next, then home for Father's Day. And on to Kansas City and Texas." That afternoon, he would talk to a senator from Alaska about pension benefits. And he was running late.

Still, he reads his mail every morning, a sizable chore. Some days, 20 or 30 letters come in. He answers all the letters, even if there are no solutions.

"I still read every letter from the carriers." A California carrier wondered if he should retire at age 42. An Ohio man wrote about his ailing wife. A Florida postman had a grievance. The voices were familiar. Letter carriers. "My people," Sombrotto calls them.

Sombrotto is also amazed at the U.S. postal system, in a way most Americans are not. He is amazed that it works.

"The mail is not slower today," he contended, spreading the batch of envelopes on his worktable. Most had been delivered within two days.

"Sure, it's possible now and then for a letter to take longer, even five days. But the postal service is dealing with 142 billion pieces of mail a year." That's about 390 million letters and packages a day.

"Now when you're waiting for a check and it takes four days, you remember that. You say, 'Geez, it was mailed downtown.' What people don't notice is most of the mail in a five-hundred-mile radius is delivered in two days, ninety-five percent in three days."

Sombrotto's union is responsible for delivery, not the sorting of the mail. But he defends the system. With 800,000 people, more than any employer outside the Defense Department, "of course some mail falls between the cracks," he admitted. "But then, you get on any plane in the country and you can't be sure you'll land on time, and people accept that."

Carrying the mail, Sombrotto argues, is still a good way of life, "if you're thinking of stability and not about vacation on the Riviera." Ninety percent of his carriers still hold the job for a lifetime. "Very few people make such a commitment to a job with few opportunities for upward mobility."

"I was lucky," the union leader said, "I never knew I had the talent to communicate . . . like an artist who never knew he could paint until he tried it."

Among today's rank and file, women—about 25,000—and members of minority groups make up half of the carriers. The job is still a passageway from low-income America into the middle class.

For Sombrotto, the postal carrier has become a symbol of civilization. Once, his vision was less esoteric. "It was a question of just having a job. Only later, when you get at arm's length, you understand what our people really mean."

It's just like the New York Yankees. "When I was a kid and the Yankees had the best team in baseball, I rooted against them. I always rooted for the underdog. In sports, in life always," Maybe it explains his feelings about the postal service.

POLITICAL INTOLERANCE ON CAMPUS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, there is a current trend occurring in our country resulting in politically intolerant opinions of professors. The result of such intolerance spawns a double standard that works to the disadvantage of students and junior faculty members. Where a college or university administration or senior faculty member has a political opinion differing from that of a student or junior faculty member, usually the former opinion comes out on top, sometimes causing an unfair assignment for a student or even the loss of a junior faculty member's job. Unfortunately, the main concern of college and university presidents is to keep the money coming in to their institutions, so unless a stand is taken against this dangerously growing political intolerance that serves to slow the flow of money into the institution, little attention will be paid to this political intolerance and, certainly, nothing will be done to prevent the subjection of students and junior faculty members by it. For further discussion, I recommend the following article by Thomas Sowell which appeared in the Detroit News on March 17, 1986, entitled "Academia's Behavior a Betrayal of Trust." It is an excellent article that points out how political double standards have become commonplace in American colleges and universities.

The article follows:

ACADEMIA'S BEHAVIOR A BETRAYAL OF TRUST

(By Thomas Sowell)

Complaints about the leftward bias of academics often miss a much more serious issue. It is not the opinions in academia but the intolerance toward other opinions that constitutes a betrayal of trust.

Political double standards have become so commonplace in American colleges and universities that many no longer notice them. After a group of Dartmouth students set up some unauthorized shanties on campus to express their political views, another group of students tore them down several weeks later to express their different political views. Those who set up the shanties were not punished but some of those who tore them down were suspended. The political views of the former are much closer to those of the Dartmouth faculty.

A Marxist professor who published false evidence in a history of the rise of the Nazis in Germany has been defended by academics from coast to coast, and those who exposed the falsity have been denounced for persecuting him. The newsletter of the American Historical Association has reported the controversy but the association has evaded all attempts to get it to make a pronouncement on the factual accuracy and scholarly merits of the charges and countercharges. However, it has come out boldly against the organization Accuracy in Academia, which monitors academic irresponsibility.

When Stanford professors consult for the government, hold public office, or serve on various governmental commission, that is called "public service." When members of the Hoover Institution on the same campus do the same things it is denounced as "political activity," which threatens the purity—and, worse yet, the tax exemption—of the whole university. The range of political views at Hoover is different from that at Stanford, where John Anderson received the most votes in the 1980 elections, followed by Jimmy Carter, with Ronald Reagan a distant third.

It is not a question of professors' political opinions but of their intolerance for other opinions—and the double standards of that result.

At Fordham University, a professor who assigns his class to see pornographic movies has, as department chairman, fired another professor whose outside involvement in conservative Catholic organizations is looked on with disfavor. The department chairman's outside involvements are as author of pornographic writings. The fired professor has written criticizing pornography. Fordham's president has defended the academic freedom—of the chairman.

They don't have to assign students to go see pornographic movies at Arizona State University. There the professor brings his own hard-core pornographic slides to his class on "sex education," and provides leering commentary as he shows them. A student who complained to the university regents about this was urged by the university president to drop the issue. A female student who missed an examination in this course was told by the professor that she could make it up by writing a 10-page paper—on her own sexual experiences.

This is the kind of thing Eric Hoffer called "soul-raping." It is especially inexcusable against students. Yet the deliberate humiliation of students who have a different opinion has also become accepted in academia. A young woman who recently graduated from Yale reports in the current issue of Reason magazine how questioning of the liberal-left social creed there brings professorial sneers rather than discussion. A similar response is reported from Kenyon College, where students and faculty alike are subjected to brainwashing for radical feminism. When the student newspaper reported this to alumni, its editors were fired.

Prevailing opinions among professors is not the issue. There are people in all parts of the political spectrum with honor and integrity. But what is also painfully obvious is that, on too many campuses, people with neither honor nor integrity are allowed to run amok in violation of the rights of students, or of junior faculty, and with no regard for academic traditions or common decency. That is something for students, parents, and taxpayers to start noticing.

Pragmatic college and university presidents are never going to touch this hot potato unless they have to. Even if they personally disagree with what the faculty zealots and petty tyrants do, their main concern will be to hush things up, smooth them over, and keep the money flowing in from outside. When that flow of money slows down, then and only then will they take seriously any objections to the growing intolerance and double standards in academe.

Recently in the Philippines, people put their lives on the line for the sake of freedom. It is surely not too much for Americans to do to close up their checkbooks until after they get a chance to turn over a few rocks on campus and see what is crawling underneath.

A LICENSE TO HOUND AIDS VICTIMS

HON. SALA BURTON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, today the New York Times lead editorial presents an eloquent criticism of the Justice Department's recent misguided ruling on the protection of AIDS victims under the 1973 Rehabilitation Act. The editorial points out that the "muddled insinuations and prejudiced reading of the medical evidence * * * incites fear."

The city of San Francisco has been devastated by this disease, but it has dealt with its victims in a humane and caring way. The Justice Department should do the same.

A LICENSE TO HOUND AIDS VICTIMS

Error and meanness suffuse the opinion on AIDS issued last week by Charles J. Cooper, head of the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel. His ruling, based on a mistaken reading of medical opinion about transmissibility of the disease, invites employers to dismiss people who have it, or who carry the AIDS virsus, simply by invoking their fear of the disease being spread.

What humane behavior that is going to provoke. Besides its needless cruelty to victims, the ruling will actually foster spread of the disease by discouraging people in risk groups from taking the AIDS antibody test, as recommended by the Public Health Service.

Mr. Cooper's panicky ruling applies to the executive branch and to any employer receiving Federal funds—though many state laws protecting the handicapped will still protect AIDS victims. But there is no medical reason for any employer to dismiss those who have the disease or who have been exposed to the virus. Because the AIDS virus is transmitted in blood or semen, the disease is spread by needles or intimate contact, not by the casual contact of the workplace.

Even so, AIDS victims often become "social pariahs, irrationally ostracized by their communities because of medically baseless fears of contagion." So said a draft opinion prepared in April by Stewart Oneglia of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division. That's why the department has been inclined to view AIDS victims as handicapped individuals entitled, under the 1973 Rehabilitation Act, to protection against arbitrary dismissal.

Enter Mr. Cooper, undoing the draft opinion. He concedes that AIDS victims are handicapped but contrives a loophole for baseless fears and ostracism. It's not a handicap, he argues, to be capable of spreading a disease. So employers can dismiss anyone whom they believe, rightly, wrongly or irrationally, to be spreading AIDS. The Rehabilitation Act, he says, is "certainly not a general prohibition against irrational decision making by employers."

In truth, Mr. Cooper doesn't think dismissing an AIDS victim is so irrational. The statute, he notes, "does not restrict measures taken to prevent the spread of the disease." Yet according to all evidence, AIDS is not spread casually. Mr. Cooper cites only a single medical opinion to the contrary, a statement attributed to William Haseltine of Harvard that AIDS could be transmitted through saliva and that "there are sure to be cases . . . of proved transmission through casual contact." But that statement, quoted in an article of the Time's Op-Ed page last March by Alan Dershowitz, misrepresented Mr. Haseltine's views, as Mr. Dershowitz later explained in a published letter.

No one should want to curb the powers of public health officials to control a disease as deadly as AIDS. But to throw AIDS victims out of their jobs is a capitulation to unwarranted fear that protects no one. By his muddled insinuations and prejudiced reading of the medical evidence, Mr. Cooper is inciting fear. Worse, he provides a powerful incentive for those in the known risk groups not to take the AIDS antibody test. A positive result could, under his ruling, cost them their jobs.

So far some 22,000 cases of AIDS have occurred in the United States. None are known to have been spread by casual contact. Until there is one, there's no justification for Mr. Cooper's opinion.

THE HOMELESS PERSONS SURVIVAL ACT OF 1986

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, this morning over 30 of my colleagues joined me in introducing The Homeless Persons Survival Act of 1986—the first comprehensive Federal response to the crisis of homelessness. We propose to expand emergency shelter, food and health care services, assist the homeless in becoming self-sufficient, and prevent homelessness by addressing both its precipitating and underlying causes.

Is such a bill politically realistic? I believe reality is sleeping on a grate or together as a family in a barracks with hundreds of others. Reality is thousands in shelters and on the streets and hundreds of thousands of "hidden homeless" crowding in with relatives and friends. Reality is the numbers of homeless persons growing and reaching epidemic proportions. Being politically realistic is addressing the harsh conditions in which our citizens live and providing a strategy to eradicate them.

How do we jusify the high cost of this proposal? The housing components of our bill represent only a partial restoration of past cuts. For 6 years this administration has sought the elimination of social service and housing assistance programs designed to help the impoverished of our Nation. HUD assisted low-income housing programs, alone, are now at their lowest level, having suffered a 65 percent—or $17 billion—reduction in budget authority since fiscal year 1980. Many in Congress have focused efforts merely on keeping programs afloat at bare subsistence levels. This bill goes beyond subsistence to meet the real dimensions of the problems of homelessness.

Our legislation is cost-effective. Funds invested in serious, long-term solutions will decrease the burgeoning expenditures for emergency shelter. Emergency shelter with meals in New York City's barracks shelters costs an average of more than $61,000 annually for a family of four. By comparison, the cost of rental assistance for existing section 8 public housing units provided in our proposal is $4,100 a year per household. Further, the high costs of institutionalization and emergency health care for homeless individuals will likely be reduced by the components providing grants to nonprofit organizations for health services and mental health care.

Another major question I expect, is: "Why can't we depend on the existing framework of Federal assistance programs?" Individual emergency shelter providers, and the administration's own Interagency Task Force on Food and Shelter for the Homeless reports the eligible homeless have limited access to these programs. The task force reports many mentally ill homeless are eligible but not receiving supplemental security income [SSI] benefits. The Food Stamp Program is not reaching a large proportion of the eligible homeless, according to preliminary results of a survey conducted by the Select Committee on Hunger. This may account for reports of undernutrition, anemia and low birthweight among infants and children of homeless families. Our legislation provides the needed outreach and changes in eligibility guidelines to improve the accessibility of these Federal benefits and thereby prevent hunger and promote self-sufficiency.

Another question you may ask: "Why can't we depend on State and local governments and private voluntary organizations take care of the problem?" While I commend the magnificent effort and commitment of volunteers serving the homeless across the Nation and the innovative combinations of public and private funding raised by local emergency relief organizations, these funds have repeatedly been documented to fall far short of the actual need.

The homeless will not go away. Even in this time of fiscal restraint, we cannot ignore this very real social problem. The Homeless Persons' Survival Act is the decisive Federal action that is needed. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this vital legislation.

SOUTH AFRICAN DETAINEES

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, under the nationwide state of emergency declared in South Africa on June 12, 1986, racial violence and political repression in that country have continued unabated. In the first day alone of the emergency regulations, over 1,200 clergy, political and community leaders, trade unionists and others were arrested and detained. If the Government of South Africa does not soon begin meaningful negotiations with representative leaders of the black majority, the potential for violence and upheaval will only increase. That those men and women who might help bring about the peaceful establishment of a nonracial and democratic system are being held indefinitely in South African jails, is a tragedy for those people and families involved, for South Africans in general, and for the international community as a whole. I would like to submit for the RECORD a partial list—South African censorship has made compilation of such lists both difficult and dangerous—of the estimated 3,000 South Africans arrested and detained without charge in the last 2 weeks.

DEMOCRATS WISHFUL THINKING

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, tradition illustrates the desire of political parties to exude qualities of empathy and perserverance, resilience and benevolence. At times this desire propels into a whirlwind political strategy without solid basis. So it is with Democratic trade reformists. In an attempt to build a political position for the upcoming election, they have passed trade legislation which is illusory and unattainable.

The goal of trade reform should be to expand worldwide trade. We should increase trade and export opportunities for U.S. products in foreign markets. The emphasis should not be to restrict imports in an attempt to protect domestic industries. Restricting imports has proven unsuccessful historically, as exemplified by the Smoot-Hawley tariff, yet the thrust of H.R. 4800 does just that—limits imports coming into this country.

The superfluous Democratic trade reform package will not benefit the United States, but instead will cost American jobs, burden the American consumer, destabilize the rebounding economy, and drive inflation back up into the double digits. The Republican alternative to this less trade bill, is progressive trade reform. Its objective is to open markets and expand trade by using the trade remedies as leverage to induce negotiated settlements. Greater marketing access is the ultimate goal, and this cannot be achieved in a hostile environment where mandated penalties are eminent.

Before we signed off on omnibus trade legislation laden with special interest protection, it would have been wise to remember that the United States is also the world's leading exporter. The current trade bill only jeopardizes our exports, yielding minimal worldwide trade. The few industrial advantages anticipated come at the expense of the consumer and the export industries, particularly agriculture. Countries which we rely most heavily upon for agricultural exports are restricted by this sweeping across-the-board import tariff. The major expansion potential for U.S. farm exports lies with lesser developed countries, yet the bill allows restrictions on their trade goods. In addition to giving these countries a political impetus to turn their backs on American agriculture, the loss of export profits from U.S. sales deletes their ability to buy our farm products.

Once again the Democrats are twisting the trade issue into a political platform for the fall election. This is an ill-advised endeavor, since all Americans will suffer if this measure becomes law. It is a politically motivated bill, which shares similarities with Smoot-Hawley, and promises less opportunities to export goods. Free trade, a higher standard of living, and an increase in employment opportunities are what we're looking for. Democrats are looking in the wrong place.

The Washington Post article, "Trade Mirage," of May 31, 1986, concisely summarizes the real motives behind Democratic strategy. We cannot afford to follow the Democrats—they've hitched their wagon to a falling star.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, May 31, 1986]

THE TRADE MIRAGE

Democratic political strategists continue to pursue their glittering vision of the trade issue. The question for 1986—and later—is whether it will prove to be, politically, more than a mirage.

For this is not the first time that Democratic politicians have glimpsed on the horizon the vision of an issue that makes them appear at one and the same time nationalistic and assertive, compassionate and responsive, far-seeing and populistic. More than a decade ago the Burke-Hartke bill was going to win elections in the early 1970s for the Democrats; now it seems unlikely to make the history books. More recently, the Democrats went on a trade offensive last summer. They did take one important scalp: an errant remark by an inexperienced Republican candidate ("I don't see what trade has to do with east Texas") helped the Democrats win a Texas special congressional election—a victory that discouraged Republicans from running in southern Democratic districts elsewhere. But that was a close race in which any mistake on any issue by either candidate might have tipped the balance.

Now Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee chairman Tony Coelho (D-Calif.) sees trade as a key Democratic issue in a number of states. Democrats hope for gains in North Carolina, which has a lot of marginal districts, South Carolina, Pennsylvania and Maine. Republic congressmen are either on the defensive or joining in support of the Democrats' latest trade bill. In these states and others, trade is particularly welcome to Democrats as an issue that makes them look tough and truculent, rather than soft and generous.

But is there a chance for anything more than scattered gains, Trade is not one issue but dozens: textiles in the Carolinas, steel in Pennsylavnia, shoes in New England. A local Democrat in any one election can claim to have a magic answer to save an old industry. But a national party, seeking to run a national government, will be asked for a policy that fosters economic growth generally rather than one that seeks somehow to preserve the past. Once again the Democrats are marching across the desert, trying to reach a trade issue that glitters before them. It may again turn out to be a mirage.

H.R. 5147—NEW-BORN GENETIC SCREENING ACT OF 1986

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I along with my colleagues Representatives LELAND, COLLINS, DELLUMS, FORD, and DIXON are introducing H.R. 5147, the New-Born Genetic Screening Act of 1986. The purpose of this legislation is to provide funds for State and local government programs to test new-born infants for genetic diseases, disorders, and conditions that can cause life-threatening illnesses or permanent disabilities.

The need and demand for such programs, Mr. Speaker, have never been greater. Medical advancements have made it possible to detect and treat—at a small cost—many of the genetic problems researchers have identified. For example, simple, low-cost tests are available to screen for diseases such as "PKU" that can result in severe mental retardation. Similar procedures can also be performed to detect thyroid disease.

A recent study supported by the National Institutes of Health and published in the June 19 edition of the New England Journal of Medicine clearly demonstrates both the health effectiveness and the cost effectiveness of early diagnosis and treatment of genetic disorders. In that study, scientists examined detection and treatment methods for sickle-cell anemia, and genetic disease that afflicts 1 out of every 400 blacks born in the United States. According to their findings, proper screening and followup care for sickle-cell anemia could prevent the almost 200 deaths that occur among black infants under the age of 3 each year. The NIH researchers conclude their report by recommending that infants at risk of sickle-cell anemia be screened at birth and that those with the disease be treated immediately with appropriate drug therapy.

But beyond these documented medical and health benefits, Mr. Speaker, are the cost benefits that can result from genetic screening programs. The General Accounting Office [GAO] has estimated that screening all infants in the United States for genetic diseases and disorders would save more than $20 million in treatment costs annually for every dollar spent on testing. And since the Medicaid program covers many services—including those for long-term care—that are needed by individuals who are chronically ill or permanently disabled from a genetic disease, it can be assumed that much of these savings would help reduce the Federal deficit.

While it is true, Mr. Speaker, that many States and local governments have undertaken efforts to provide genetic screening services to their "at risk" infant populations, their support has been limited both in scope and in funding. Because of cutbacks in various health programs, States have been forced to eliminate or reduce existing screening initiatives or to postpone the establishment of new ones. H.R. 5147 would allow States and local governments to advance their genetic screening efforts and, in turn, to protect both precious lives and dollars.

In brief, Mr. Speaker, the New-Born Genetic Screening Act of 1986 would greatly enhance our ability to prevent disease, to improve life, and to save money. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and to work actively for its enactment.

FAMILY DAY CARE HOMES PERILED BY INSURANCE

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, the national crisis in liability insurance continues to rage on, affecting many of the most vulnerable and valuable small businesses in America, family day care. Since two-thirds of all children in child care are in family day care homes, it is clear that this trend will adversely affect tens of thousands of children.

Last summer, the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families held hearings to determine the effect of this crisis on child care providers. Representatives from national child care and youth-serving agencies, as well as family day care providers themselves, warned us that if they could not find reasonably priced insurance that would provide adequate coverage, they would close down, reducing the already short supply of child care.

Now, these fears are being realized.

As reported in the Washington Post on June 21, 1986, following what appears to be a national trend, family day care homes in the DC Metropolitan area are closing down, leaving families stranded with few child care options.

One provider in the District was rejected by sixteen insurance companies before she made a decision to close down.

In Montgomery County, two family day care providers have filed suit in county court against the board of directors of their condominum, who ordered the closing of their businesses. The Post reports that the board's decision was influenced by their insurance company, threatening to cancel the condominium's policy unless action was taken against the family day care homes.

The current child care supply is already too limited to allow this crisis to continue. As we learn of more family day care providers closing down, a study by the Metropolitan Washington Council of Governments reports that only 20 percent of the children in the area are receiving the child care they require.

In my own State of California, despite action by the State Insurance Commissioner to establish a voluntary Market Assistance Program, family day care providers are operating without protective coverage, or closing down, because insurance is still too expensive. This presents a serious problem when, in my own district in Contra Costa County, 300 families remain on a waiting list for child care.

The situation is so serious in California that a new Child Care Insurance Project has been established in San Diego to publicize the extent of the problem, and to lobby strongly on behalf of California's family day care providers.

The need is growing, while the supply is shrinking, reflecting conditions nationwide. I urge my colleagues to take heed of this crisis, which affects millions of children and families in every district in America.

1986 NATO ESSAY WINNERS

HON. THOMAS A. DASCHLE

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of two high school students whose essays were chosen as winners of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's Essay Contest and ask that their entries be printed in the RECORD.

Denise Nicolaescu, who lived in Romania for 14 years, writes that NATO is a "unifying force" between North America and Europe and that it represents important economic, political, and cultural ties. Rebecca Lujan says NATO's pledge of support is a source of reassurance to her in these troubled times between our country and the Soviet Union. Both essays were perceptive and well written, and I urge my colleagues to read these insightful pieces.

The essays follow:

1986 NATO ESSAY

(By Rebecca Lujan)

As a United States citizen, the creation of the complex, interdependent alliance known as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) represents one of the most significant occurrences in United States international relations. By signing the treaty, the United States for the first time in its history joined a peacetime alliance that committed it to shield and uphold the signatory countries: Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, the United Kingdom, and West Germany. Article 5 of the pact clearly states than an armed attack against one or more of the member nations in Europe or North America shall be considered an attack against all members. This mutual pledge of military and economic support in case of a possible confrontation by an aggressor is a source of reassurance for me, especially during these troubled times of hostility and distrust between the United States and the Soviet Union. NATO functions to discourage Soviet expansion into Europe, allowing it to remain a self-governed and peaceful continent.

NATO also plays a pivotal role in the prevention of a destructive and ruinous nuclear war. Its member nations believe that a policy of deterrence offers the best safeguard against this deadly predicament. This concept implies that a nation's military defenses are so large, diversified, and well-protected that a first strike by an enemy would not cripple its ability to retaliate decisively. It acts, therefore, to repel a potential enemy from launching an attack. As of now, this policy has been a successful repellent against the eruption of a full-scale nuclear showdown between the United States and the Soviet Union.

In addition, NATO possesses the power of negotiation and compromise which aids quiescent relations among the world's nations. This organization attempts to ease confrontations and reduce strain between its member nations, in effect promoting global peace.

Consequently, my country's participation in NATO is beneficial to its future development and prosperity. It ensures the cessation of the spread of communism in Europe and perpetuates the existence of the democratic system instead. Also commendable are its efforts to avert the outbreak of a global nuclear war. If, tragically, despite NATO's attempts, such a catastrophe were to occur, our country and its allies would at least be sufficiently armed and strategically prepared for the oncoming struggle. Hopefully, NATO will foresee the potential realization of such a tragedy and put its bargaining power to good use in order to preclude its incidence. My belief is that NATO's existent policies and leadership secure the presence of democracy in Europe and North America and inhibit the progression of communism in the rest of the world. This confidence leaves me with a sense of hope for my future, my childrens' future, and my nation's future.

1986 NATO ESSAY

(By Denise Nicolaescu)

My view of NATO is strongly colored by the fourteen years I lived in Romania. It is a synthesis of my experiences there and three years of American education. Coming from a "Soviet satellite" country with a totalitarian regime made me more acutely aware of NATO's crucial role in preserving the freedom and democracy of its participants.

What I associate most with NATO is a unifying force between North America and Europe. For one thing, it involves a military alliance whose basis is that an attack against one member will be considered an attack against all. This premise, article 5 of the Treaty, expresses the solidarity of the participants. Secondly, NATO represents economic, political and cultural ties as well. As an example of economic matters, one might recall the controversy among NATO members regarding the sale by Western European countries of equipment for the Soviet oil pipeline. Political issues could be illustrated by NATO's denouncement of martial law in Poland in January 1982. As for cultural and scientific concerns, they range from communication satellites to environmental protection. In November, 1969, for instance, NATO set up a Committee on the Challenges of Modern Society to promote international action on the problem of human environment. For me, NATO represents the framework for a military alliance that also encompasses much more. It provides for continuous cooperation and consultation in various non-military fields.

Knowing the fact that one of NATO's primary functions is peace-keeping equates, in my mind, the alliance with national security. Now perhaps more than ever, the areas of foreign policy and national security overlap. NATO creates this union by guaranteeing protection from Soviet aggression. I consider this to be of major importance. Having lived in a Warsaw Pact country enhances my perception of NATO's significance. The strong Soviet influence in Romania proved to me that, if Europe were to surrender to Soviet aggression, the U.S. would be unable to hold out for long to its political culture, namely, democracy. As Norman Podhoretz, editor of Commentary once said, "freedom and democracy in the United States could not survive their demise in Europe."

This interdependence between the United States and Western Europe poses an important question. It is United States involvement in European conflicts versus the traditional American isolationism displayed at times throughout history. To me, isolationism is equivalent to a denial of events in other parts of the world and their inevitable effect on the United States. In this context, NATO represents a shift away from such an attitude.

Another way that NATO is significant to me is through specific events that I became familiar with. For instance, from the historical point of view, when I think of NATO I think of President Reagan's "zero-zero" option. This came in November 1981 as a proposal to eliminate the entire class of United States and Soviet land-based, longer-range INF missiles. This event is one of the many instances when NATO initiated drastic arms reductions in the on-going negotiations with the Soviets. The Geneva negotiations are another NATO undertaking of relevance to me. I see the proposed Interim Agreement intended to break the stalemate at the peace talks as further evidence of NATO's commitment to security and peace. The same holds true for the October 1983 decision to carry out unilateral arms reductions.

A discussion of what NATO means to an American would be incomplete without the mention of the Truman Doctrine. This policy, formulated in 1947, stated that the United States could survive only in a world where aggression and totalitarianism were not allowed to expand. The Truman Doctrine was the opening move to the concept of containment, a cornerstone of American foreign policy. Containment means preventing the expansion of Communism beyond its already existing borders. This idea is particularly meaningful to me, as is its connection to NATO. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization is the best means of countering Soviet expansionism. It is an alliance, a means of cooperation among countries of the Western World. Most important of all, as the Treaty says, it symbolizes security and freedom.

THE HEALTH CARE QUALITY IMPROVEMENT ACT

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, today Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. MADIGAN, Mr. TAUKE, and I are introducing legislation that we believe will reduce the incidence of medical malpractice in America.

The need for this legislation is clear. The average award now is in excess of $100,000 and awards of more than $1 million are common. If you are a medical patient, malpractice can present the ultimate question—life or death. If the growing malpractice problem is not reversed, this country's ability to provide affordable, quality health care could be seriously damaged.

In the past, the response to the malpractice problem has been to play the "blame game." One group says it is another's fault, and instead of solutions we have gridlock. Congress needs to break out of that cycle. Our bill provides the tools to do just that.

We believe physicians are in a strong position to reduce medical malpractice. Because they see it when it happens around them, doctors are the first line of defense. But that defensive line will only hold if doctors and hospitals can police their own profession and enforce strict standards of medical practice. Unfortunately, Federal law robs them of this ability. Most peer review activities are not protected under Federal law.

Right now, a doctor who blows the whistle on a colleague can be sued for restraint of trade or slander. In Astoria, OR, where the physicians of a clinic revoked another doctor's clinical privileges, the doctor sued and received a $2 million damage award for restraint of trade. This suit is under appeal: It is worth nothing, however, regardless of the ultimate resolution of this particular case, if this country wants doctors to come forward and speak out, there must be legal protection for them.

That's what the Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986 would do. The bill gives doctors and hospitals two powerful tools:

One, legal protection for good faith peer review. Doctors and hospitals that participate in peer review activities would be protected from actions in Federal courts if their activity is judged to be good faith peer review and in the furtherance of quality health care.

Two, information about physicians' malpractice track records. A national data bank would be established to give hospitals information about the malpractice and licensing track records of doctors who apply to practice on their staffs. This information, while confidential, would keep malpracticing doctors from skipping from State to State to keep their past a secret. And, It would protect hospitals from future liability that may be caused by hiring those doctors.

Our legislation will protect doctors and hospitals who genuinely want to rid their ranks of physicians who endanger patients and give medicine a bad name—an absolutely necessary step if we are going to control medical malpractice costs.

Mr. Speaker, I think this legislation is a very positive step toward solving the malpractice insurance crisis. I am honored to have Chairman WAXMAN, and two of my distinguished colleagues from the Health Subcommittee, Mr. MADIGAN and Mr. TAUKE, join me in this legislative effort. I hope many more of my colleagues will cosponsor this necessary legislation.

GRACE CAUCUS "KICK-OFF" BILLS SHOULD BE IMPLEMENTED

HON. HARRIS W. FAWELL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues on the Congressional Grace Caucus today in introducing several bills which would implement some of the cost-saving recommendations of the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control, better known as the Grace Commission.

Two years ago, the Grace Commission released a lengthy report which outlined 2,478 proposals to help reduce our $200 billion plus budget deficits and eliminate Government waste and inefficiency, for a potential savings of $424 billion over 3 years.

A recent report of the Office of Management and Budget [OMB] shows that the Grace proposals implemented to date will save taxpayers $30.6 billion this year. The implemented recommendations include measures to offset delinquent loans against income tax refunds, speed the collection and deposit of Government receipts, charge interest and penalties on delinquent debts, implement dual sourcing for weapons systems and components, require the use of common parts in weapons systems, expand the use of contracted services, and expand multiyear procurement.

Although the enactment of these cost-saving measures is a step in the right direction, there is still much more Congress could do to act on other Grace proposals. The Grace Caucus, with its package of 14 cost-cutting bills, is taking that bold step. This effort builds on the 30 or so bills which have been introduced to date in the 99th Congress that seek to implement other Grace Commission recommendations. Unfortunately, little congressional action has been taken on these proposals.

These Kick-off caucus bills, according to the Grace Commission, will result in savings of approximately $25 billion over 3 years. I am an original cosponsor of 12 of the bills, providing savings of $24.9 billion over 3 years.

Briefly, I would like to describe to my colleagues the purposes of the 12 bills I am cosponsoring.

The Federal Performance of Commercial Activities Act.—This bill would require the Federal Government to contract out services whenever it is economically feasible to do, unless national security interests necessitate a government supplier. The 3-year savings total $4.2 billion.

The Tax Collection and Enforcement Improvement Act.—This proposal would improve tax law compliance, increase collections, and reduce tax delinquencies by authorizing the IRS to hire additional collections staff and examination and enforcement staff. Delinquent unpaid taxes have substantially increased, in the past 5 years, rising from about $16 billion to over $35 billion. The 3-year savings total $4.1 billion.

The Federal Credit Management and Debt Collection Improvement Act.—Despite passage of the Debt Collection Act of 1982, delinquent nontax debts owed to the Federal Government is $24 billion—a 55-percent increase over the amount reported 3 years ago. This bill would strengthen credit management and debt collection by denying loans to applicants in default, referring delinquent debts to credit bureaus, and using debt collection contractors. The 3-year savings total $10 billion.

The Defense Consolidation Improvement Act.—Numerous reports show that Department of Defense [DOD] depots have excess capacity for the maintenance of weapons systems and for the wholesale distribution of military material. This bill consolidates depot-level maintenance and wholesale distribution operations, base support services, and military traffic and transport management. The 3-year savings total $1.9 billion.

The Federal Health Care Auditing and Quality Control Improvement Act.—This proposal would strengthen oversight and quality control in the Medicare and Medicaid Programs. These changes are needed to uphold the integrity of both programs. The 3-year savings total $471 million.

The Federal Hospital System Sharing Act.—This bill would reduce costs of DOD and Veterans' Administration hospitals by allowing all persons eligible to receive direct health care from DOD or the Veterans' Administration in either facility.

The Housing Eligibility Verification Improvement Act.—The HUD Inspector General estimates that between 12 and 17 percent of public housing tenants falsified income information in order to receive benefits. This Grace recommendation would require applicants to disclose Social Security numbers and would authorize HUD to obtain access to wage and other information from State employment records. The 3-year savings total $1.9 billion.

The Defense Technology Data Exchange Improvement Act.—About 75 DOD laboratories provide technical support to R&D activities in the weapons acquisition process. Because much of this research is not shared, many DOD labs duplicate their work. This bill requires the implementation of organizational steps to avoid unnecessary and costly duplication of research staffs and projects among the services. The 3-year savings total $1.6 billion.

The Defense Transportation Bill Audit Improvement Act.—The General Services Administration [GSA] is responsible for all Government transportation bill auditing. Currently, there is a 14- to 22-month backlog of transportation bill audits. Because 80 percent of Government transportation expenses are incurred by DOD, the Grace Commission believes that DOD could do a better job in this area. This proposal would require GSA to delegate to DOD the authority to audit its own transportation bills. The 3-year savings total $217 million.

The Defense Industrial Reserve Improvement Act.—Currently, repaired equipment in the general reserves is free to the ultimate user. The users view the equipment as cheaper because they do not share in the $28 million in annual costs to repair, store, and maintain reserve equipment. This bill, supported by the General Accounting Office [GAO], would require users of reserve equipment to pay the full cost of storage, repair, and maintenance of the equipment. The 3-year savings total $30 million.

The Paralegal Coordination and Activities Act.—the Department of Justice has a much lower ratio of paralegals to attorneys than the private sector. As a result, many attorneys are spending too much time on legal research and less time on litigative functions. This bill, supported by GAO findings, would require Justice to increase its use of paralegals. The 3-year savings total $13 million.

The Mail Management Improvement Act.—This bill pertains to Government mail operations, and not to the Postal Service. It would reduce Government mail waste by requiring Federal agencies to eliminate practices resulting in excessive mailing costs. The 3-year savings total $550 million.

With the requirements of Gramm-Rudman on the budget process, Congress should make every effort to meet the $144 billion deficit target next year. The kickoff cacuus bills provide Congress with an effective opportunity to implement billions of dollars worth of cost-savings. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor these initiatives. I also urge the authorizing committees to consider and favorably act on these bills.

ENHANCING ORGAN TRANSPLANTS

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill today with Congressmen WAXMAN, STARK, and MADIGAN that would give Medicare organ transplant patients help in obtaining immunosuppressive drugs needed to make transplants successful. This bill would implement a recommendation of the Task Force on Organ Transplantation, set up by Congress in 1984 to examine many issues surrounding organ transplantation and make recommendations to Congress.

There are several reasons to help patients pay for immunosuppressive drugs.

First, transplant surgeons before congressional committees have testified that current Medicare policies are "pound-wise and penny-foolish" since Medicare will currently pay for a transplant but not for the drugs that make the transplant succeed. Cyclosporine, the leading immunosuppressive drug, was approved by FDA in November 1983; it significantly improved the survival rate of transplants. With cyclosporine there are fewer organ rejections and patients have a shorter initial hospitalization and fewer hospitalizations. Thus, in our view, it is poor public policy to encourage transplants but not the medications that make transplants effective.

Second, these drugs cost $5,000 to $7,000 per year and maintenance doses must be taken for life. The high cost can discourage people from getting transplants, denying them a life-saving medical procedure or in the case of kidneys, leaving them dialysis as the only opinion. Access to the best health care should not depend on one's lot or luck in life. This approach to medicine has its roots in the Hippocratic Oath, providing medicine to people without regard to economics.

Third, as the science of medicine progresses, we in Congress have an obligation to update the law, to bring it in line with the science. The basic Medicare law was written in the mid-1960's. In 1972, Congress added Medicare coverage for individuals with chronic renal failure, end-stage renal disease. [ESRD]. The primary treatment method for ESRD has over the years been dialysis, but organ transplants have "come of age" in recent years. Cyclosporine was approved in 1983. Medical coverage should reflect the best current thinking in medicine. In this case, immunosuppressive drugs are necessary complements to transplant surgery.

Fourth, looking at the economics, Medicare pays for virtually all kidney transplants under its $2 billion-per-year End Stage Renal Disease Program. Transplants save the program money by obviating the need for dialysis treatments. Immunosuppressants at $5,000 per year are far cheaper than dialysis at $20,000 per year. In these days of tight budgets, covering immunosuppressive drugs is good economics.

Finally, but probably most important, there is the human side. Transplants extend life. In the case of kidneys, they dramatically improve the quality of life. A transplant is far preferable to the ups and downs of periodic dialysis. Thus, the policy embodied in this bill is a humane policy.

GAPS IN CURRENT COVERAGE

There is a significant amount of private insurance coverage for immunosuppressive drugs and nearly all Medicaid programs pay for them. For others, the task force found that the cost of immunosuppressive drugs is prohibitively expensive for some patients. The inability to pay for cyclosporine, a new wonder drug for organ transplantation, prevents more than 15 percent of otherwise eligible patients from undergoing kidney transplants.

The task force found that in the general population some patients who need transplants are not receiving them because they: First, do not have private insurance coverage for immunosuppressive drugs, second, are not eligible for Medicaid (or their Medicaid program does not cover the drugs) and third, cannot afford to pay for the required immunosuppressive drugs. Indeed, some 25 percent of the transplant population has no insurance or Medicaid coverage for immunosuppressive drugs. Other patients are having their drug regimen changed from cyclosporine to cheaper drugs when they run out of funds. This no doubt threatens the effectiveness of the transplant.

PROVISIONS OF BILL

Our bill would authorize $15 million in fiscal year 1987 and $20 million in fiscal year 1988 for a program in the Public Health Service to "provide immunosuppressive medications to transplant centers for distribution to financially needy Medicare eligible transplant patients." The bill would require the Secretary to negotiate a bulk purchase of immunosuppressive drugs and authorize the Public Health Service, which has much experience with vaccines, to distribute them to organ transplant centers in proportion to the number of transplants they perform. The transplant centers would be responsible for distributing cyclosporine to those Medicare beneficiaries most in need.

The bill requires that the immunosuppressive drugs be made available to individuals who are unable to pay for them through insurance or other resources. Thus, those who are able to pay would and private insurance and Medicaid would continue to pay for individuals those programs cover.

This country should not have a health-care system with one track for the "haves" and another track for the "have nots." Medical treatment should not be left to chance or geography. Saving lives should not depend on connections or White House press conferences. If we do not have a system that is fair to all, offering the opportunity for the best in medicine, we will have nothing but bitterness as families' hopes fade away.

CAMPBELL SOUP MODERNIZES TO STAY COMPETITIVE

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to see that a major portion of the Washington Post Business Section last Sunday was given to a profile of Campbell Soup Co.'s effort to modernize its operations and marketing.

Campbell is a major employer in my congressional district, being based in Camden, NJ. A national leader in the food industry, Campbell is embarking on an effort to meet growing competition from Japanese companies.

The Post article, by Martha M. Hamilton, goes into some detail of how Campbell is doing this, and I would like to share it with my colleagues. The article follows:

A JAPANESE FLAVOR FOR CAMPBELL SOUP

(By Martha M. Hamilton)

All-American Campbell Soup Co. is taking on the Japanese—as a competitor and as a role model.

Since 1980, the Japanese share of the market for soups in the United States has grown from virtually nothing to 9 percent, with products produced by Japanese companies taking a growing share of supermarket shelf space. Nissin Foods, makers of Oodles of Noodles, is the largest Japanese producer of soups for the U.S. market.

Despite that increase, Campbell still dominates the market in a fashion many companies would evy: 62 percent of the U.S. market for all types of soup and 82 percent of the market for canned soups. But officials at Campbell say they would rather be vigilant than vulnerable.

"I think that people didn't worry enough when the Japanese companies started competing with the auto manufacturers and the steel mills," said R. Gordon McGovern, president and chief executive officer of the food company, which ranks number 100 in the Fortune 500.

Campbell officials say that they believe that Japanese food manufacturers may be able to establish themselves in the United States with low-cost high-quality products and then expand. "So, I'm worried," said McGovern. "Officially."

There are four Japanese-owned soup plants in the United States already and another plant is being built in California, according to Campbell officials. "They say they're making essences [cubes of concentrated flavorings] for the Japanese market," McGovern said. "We've been trying to track [the progress of the company] by satellite."

Campbell has committed itself to spend $1.2 billion between now and 1990 to upgrade and to restructure its 22 plants in an effort to keep ahead of competition. Campbell's plan? To adopt many of the approaches that have contributed to the efficiency and quality of manufacturing in Japan.

"We called this thing the 'total systems approach,' which I guess is gobbledygook to some people," McGovern said. "It's a way to collect all our efforts to make sure our food distribution is the best it can be."

That translates into a program with several facets. A major one is revamping manufacturing to produce products in smaller batches as they are ordered to eliminate costly inventories, both of raw materials and of the finished product. McGovern said they expect to have reduced the company's inventory costs by $50 million this year and to use capital that has been tied up in inventory more productively.

The program also includes closer computer links with retailers, an attempt to develop closer relationships with suppliers to ensure the quality of the supplies Campbell receives and revamping the sales force into 22 regional forces that sell all Campbell's products instead of just soups or frozen goods. Other major features are "quality circles," in which the workers who are closest to processing and other activities can devise ways to improve them, and statistical monitoring at every step of the way.

Several of these features—"just-in-time" manufacturing and quality circles—have achieved a certain corporate chic throughout the United States. But Campbell officials say that it goes below the surface, that they are committed to fundamental change at their company.

The company has trained about 300 workers in statistics at the University of Tennessee to monitor processing better, and it has handed out copy after copy of a book called "Japanese Manufacturing Techniques" to Campbell employes.

"You've got to take about 10 years, because you're changing a culture," said Lewis W. Springer, senior vice president. Making those changes involves convincing people that they won't suffer from change. "We've done a massive training program. The major thing is getting those hourly people in a plant like Camden, N.J., to say, 'I get it. I agree with it.' "

"You've got to have faith in this because it takes time to get results," Springer said.

"The Japanese have found a way to produce quality products in a very cost-effective manner. It's clearly an effort to copy a very successful manufacturing program," said George Novello, an industry analyst with E. F. Hutton. "You rarely see companies in the U.S. get as involved as Campbell."

"When you hear the speeches that McGovern gives, there's no question that he feels that there are different and better ways to run a manufacturing business than some of the traditional ways," said Leonard Teitelbaum of Merrill Lynch.

McGovern, who had run the company's Pepperidge Farm subsidiary and who took over as president in 1980, is credited by industry observers with taking Campbell in a more consumer-driven, marketing direction that has resulted in a proliferation of new products and an emphasis on freshness.

"We're pushing hard on refrigerated and fresh products, which is where we think the market is going," McGovern said.

In addition to manufacturing soup, Campbell produces Pepperidge Farm products, Vlasic pickles, Mrs. Paul's frozen seafood, V-8, Prego spaghetto sauces, Swanson products, Le Menu frozen dinners and Godiva chocolates. It also sells fresh mushrooms and hydroponically grown tomatoes and avocados with the Campbell label on them.

Among the company's new products designed to keep up with rapidly evolving tastes are Le Orient, a new line of frozen dinners; Fresh Chef sauces and salads sold from the refrigerated shelves of groceries, and a constantly growing line of newly packaged or newly configured soups.

"We introduced dry soups last fall and have about 20 percent of the dry soup market," McGovern said. "We're leased a ramen noodle factory in Ohio. We have microwaveable soups, frozen soups, soups in glass jars, low-sodium soups. We're going to catch you every way we can."

"I think what they're saying is that soup in any form is their bailiwick, and they don't want it taken away from them," said Novello of E. F. Hutton. Soup accounts for more than one-third of the company's total earnings, he noted. "It's the key business," Novello said. "They want to use that as a lever" for further expansion.

"If we're the best there is in soup, and doing it here, then we can broaden our soup base," said McGovern. That will allow Campbell to keep up with the super-powers in food processing that mergers, such as the Nabisco-R.J. Reynolds combination, have produced, he said. The nature of the ownership of Campbell's stock protects it from being the target of an acquisition, McGovern said. About 60 percent of the stock is in the hands of the Dorrance family, heirs to John T. Dorrance, who originated the canned, condensed soups that made the company famous, but takeover speculation appears to account for higher prices for the stock in recent months.

Moving into the dry-soup business may allow Campbell to expand in worldwide markets, where it accounts for about 30 percent of the sales. "We tried to take wet soup [canned soup] to the rest of the world and discovered that it was really the specialty end of the business," McGovern said.

Other products are aimed at capturing consumers who seldom sit down for family meals but who "graze" or eat "hand-held" foods.

In the meantime, Campbell is at work on the Le Orient version of itself.

The biggest evangelist for change within the company has been Springer, a former manager of the company's oldest facility, its 97-year-old plant in Camden, which the company is spending $37 million to upgrade. Springer preaches the gospel according to W. Edwards Deming. Deming was invited to Japan in 1949 by the national society of engineers, who wanted advice about how to restore their war-ravaged economy.

Deming emphasized statistical control of quality throughout production, in contrast to the American method of checking quality at the end of the manufacturing process.

Some of the changes are under way at the Camden plant, where one of two warehouses is being eliminated. "What we would like to do is, if you get an order for one case, you produce one case," said plant manager David Winkler, "What we have done in the past is to produce for the sake of production, to keep everyone busy." That kept the two warehouses full.

The plant is being upgraded, despite its age, because of its location. "From a construction point of view, it's expensive," Springer said. "But from a just-in-time manufacturing point of view, probably 29 percent of the people in the U.S. live within 200 miles of that plant."

Workers in the Camden plant and others participate in quality circles and task forces to devise ways of improving production. One task force is trying to determine what percentage of cans arrives on supermarket shelves damaged and how it happens.

"We've inspected the process here and gotten a number of damage cans that were going through our system and were not caught," said Dennis Wrigley, a forklift operator at the plant who is a member of the task force. "Then we went out to the stores to see the level of damage, which is more. We're backtracking now" to determine where the additional damage occurs, he said.

"It's a little bit more interesting than just stacking soup all day," he said.

If Campbell succeeds in reorienting itself, the tranformation should result in both fresher products and substantial savings, according to company officials, "What we're trying to do is reduce the cycle time" between the arrival of raw ingredients and when the soup or other food product reaches the store, Springer said. About two years ago, the cycle time for soup was about six weeks, according to Springer. That time has been reduced to about two weeks now. By Aug. 1, 1987, that time may be reduced to a single week, he said.

'The faster you can move it, the less money is tied up," he said. In the past, the company emphasized large orders, delivered by truckload to warehouses, and kept substantial amounts of capital tied up in ingredients, trucking and storage. "I think what happened is, over time, as we got more volume and had low interest rates, people forgot how much money was tied up," Springer said.

The approach that the company is trying to adopt from the Japanese is designed to remedy that, he said. "I think some people think it's just something to talk about, but it's not," he said. "It's really asset management."

MONTICELLO, IA CELEBRATES SESQUICENTENNIAL

HON. THOMAS J. TAUKE

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, on July 4 to 6, the community of Monticello, IA, will be celebrating its sesquicentennial with all the vigor and pride characterizing the community throughout its history.

Foreign dignitaries, fireworks, music and song, government officials, parades, and pioneer exhibits will be part of this monumental celebration. The town will grow to many times its population of 3,700, and all will be welcomed with the warmth and hospitality of the Monticello townsfolk.

I invite my colleagues in Congress to join me in congratulating and saluting the people of Monticello, who I am deeply honored to represent in Washington.

C.L. "Gus" Norlin, a Monticello resident, described the founding of Monticello in a special article for the Jones County Historical Society. I offer Mr. Norlin's insights here:

Clad in primed buckskin and wearing the traditional coonskin cap of his native State of Kentucky, Daniel Varvel stood atop a knoll up from the east bank of the Maquoketa River and gazed across its waters to where it was joined by a small, clear-running stream. When his gaze had taken in the rolling hills to the west, the flat fertile plain to the south, and the hardwood timbered area to the north, we can imagine he spoke softly but aloud to himself and said, "Here someday will rise a thriving city." This was October 1836.

His friend, William Clark, who had remained behind in Dubuque where both had worked for a time in the lead mines, followed him to this place. They set to work building a one-room log cabin, and it was finished by late November 1936. The cabin was located on the east bank of "Kitty Creek," as the stream is known today. The name Kitty Creek was given to the stream by very early travelers—perhaps by Varvel himself—who found it easier to say than the Indian name "Gitchee," which translates "beautiful."

By 1839, more cabins had been built, mostly by people moving westward in covered wagons, who, after only a little urging, agreed with those already settled here, that there was no reason to move further on. By now the village was known as Varvelstown, and it was only a short time later during a community meeting that the name "Monticello" was chosen.

The new community prospered. An early rail line served the community, and as the community grew, it became the center of commerce in an area that includes some of the Nation's most fertile land. Early in Monticello's history, industrious men began to build businesses and financial institutions that were to later make great contributions to the city's growth. The combination of agriculture, commerce, and manufacturing that resulted made it possible for Monticello to continue in prosperity.

The same tradition has carried through to today, and Monticello has rightfully earned the titles, "Heart of the Breadbasket," and "Little Pittsburgh of the Prairie."

A TRIBUTE TO DAVID S. HARRISON

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, at the end of this week, David S. Harrison will be leaving his position as executive director of the Northeast-Midwest Institute to become a visiting lecturer at the University of Washington in Seattle. The State of Washington's gain is Washington, DC's loss.

For better than 3½ years, David has served the Northeast-Midwest region and the Nation at the helm of one of this city's most fruitful and useful organizations. Under his direction, the Northeast-Midwest Institute has become the Nation's foremost regional policy center. He has overseen significant growth in its budget and staff, and in the scope of issues with which the institute is concerned.

The Northeast-Midwest Institute was established in 1977 to work closely with Members of Congress from the region on behalf of our older industrial States. As cochair of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition since 1984, and as a regional vice chair for several years before that, I can testify to the importance of the research and analytical work done by the Institute under David's leadership. On issues ranging from the Federal budget to employment and training, from taxes to energy policy, from economic development to water resources, the institute has provided timely, useful, cogent information and advice. Undoubtedly it has played an important role in the economic recovery the region has experienced in the past years.

David Harrison is a native Michigander who graduated from Kalamazoo College. Much of his family still resides in Michigan. Prior to becoming executive director of the institute, David graduated from the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University and was director of the American Civil Liberties Union in Seattle. For several years he directed the State of Michigan's Washington, DC, office for Gov. William Milliken.

Now he is returning to Seattle, and he goes with our best wishes. On behalf of my cochair, Representative FRANK HORTON of New York, and all the members of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, I want to offer David Harrison our thanks for a job well done.

WHAT NATO MEANS TO ME

HON. THOMAS A. DASCHLE

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take time to recognize and congratulate Mike Reszler, a high school student from my home town of Aberdeen, SD, for submitting one of the winning entries in the National Atlantic Treaty Organization's (NATO) "What NATO Means To Me" Eassy Contest. Students from 3,000 high schools were invited to participate, and three winners were chosen to visit NATO headquarters in Brussels.

Mike makes several insightful points about NATO, saying it has evolved into a "fortress for democratic ideals." The alliance also boosts the U.S. economy, he writes, because a good portion of our foreign trading is done with member countries. Finally, he says NATO offers a crucial forum for world peace. I ask that Mike's essay be printed in the RECORD, and I would urge my colleagues to take time out to read carefully thought out and well-written piece:

1986 NATO ESSAY

Can you remember back to elementary school, and the first time some big "bully" threatened to beat you up? Right away you rounded up all your friends to help protect you, because you knew there was safety in numbers. As soon as the "bully" found out about your plans, he thought twice about beating you up, and he eventually left you alone. This is the same principle that NATO uses to counter Soviet and Warsaw Pact aggression. NATO allied members realize that as a group of nations they are more powerful against the Soviet Union than just one, and it can use its numbers as a threat against any Warsaw Pact attack.

After World War II and during the Cold War, the founding fathers of NATO saw the need to combat Soviet aggression in Europe. Then Secretary of State George C. Marshall said, "The only way to meet Soviet aggression is to meet head on, and in numbers." [1] Already, many political leaders saw the need to combat the Soviets. In order to meet this need, 12 nations signed the North Atlantic Treaty, establishing the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, NATO, to counter Soviet aggression. Yet, the role of NATO has changed since those founding days.

Today, as a U.S. citizen, NATO represents a fortress for democratic ideals. At a time when the Soviet Union is trying to more than double its territory [2] NATO acts as a blockade to such growth. "Democracy is constantly under attack", yet few Americans realize the importance of stopping or halting this aggression. NATO exists to perform this very task. Although protecting democracy may be NATO's largest task, it also displays a joint cooperation between the United States and other nations.

NATO demonstrates the ability of the U.S. to develop strong, allied ties with foreign nations. This is very important to me, because 24% of all foreign U.S. trade is with NATO members. [3] That represents dollars and cents to our U.S. economy. Yet, NATO's military needs result in more than 100,000 jobs for America. [4] That makes NATO important to America, because of its power to defend and protect democracy, and also the boost it gives to our American economy; but NATO also represents an organization dedicated to world peace.

Contrary to the belief of many Americans, NATO, through its ability to counter Warsaw and Soviet aggression, furthers world peace. It demonstrates the ability of 2 groups of nations to collectively say, "We believe in world stability and peace, and are ready to do something about it." Through its military might NATO discourages any attack by the Soviet Union, and hence prevents any major military attack or war, but NATO also engages in talks with the Soviet Union. It was a very important part of the Reagan-Gorbachev Geneva Peace Talks, and has ongoing peace talks with the Soviets.

Today, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization offers one of the world's greatest forums for world peace. Its ability to counter Soviet aggression strengthens American democracy, and also presents an important economic factor to the American economy. Just like school children find comfort in large numbers for protection, so do nations when dealing with foreign powers, and in the case of NATO it also presents much more to the United States and me.

SANDINISTA CENSORSHIP: ANOTHER COMMUNIST ASSAULT UPON THE TRUTH

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, this body recently voted to send additional humanitarian and military aid to the UNO freedom fighters, popularly known as the Contras. History will say that we were very wise in undertaking this action. At stake in Nicaragua is the freedom of all Central America. The brave freedom fighters are battling communism in the Nicaraguan jungle, and we are providing them the means with which to carry on that fight so that the people of Costa Rica, El Salvador, and Honduras will be saved from a similar plight. If there are any doubts as to why we are helping these brave men and women, we have only to look at the record of the Sandinistas against whom they are carrying on the fight for dignity, democracy, and freedom.

The record of the Sandinista government, for those who look beyond their propaganda, is crystal clear, and in its clarity it is remarkably similar to the dismal record of their Soviet sponsors. The Nicaraguan Marxists, by repression, discrimination, and misrepresentation, have unceasingly opposed those in Nicaragua who yearn for self-government respectful of civil and political rights.

As the fight for the future of Nicaragua continues, it is wise that we, the Members of this body, remain informed as to the situation in Nicaragua. In this regard, a recent newspaper article which details Sandinista censorship of the press has come to my attention.

The article is written by Mr. Horacio Ruiz, the courageous managing editor of La Prensa, the Managua daily newspaper. Mr. Ruiz's article, excerpted below, appeared in a recent edition of the Washington Post. It should come as no surprise that this article would not be approved for publication in La Prensa by the Sandinista censors. It contains too much of the truth for those trained in the extermination of a free press.

I commend this article to my colleagues for their enlightened consideration.

NICARAGUA: WHAT CENSORSHIP IS REALLY LIKE

(By Horacio Ruiz)

MANAGUA.—On the day in March 1982 that the Sandinista government declared a state of emergency in Nicaragua, the official censor of the Sandinista government, Capt. Nelba Blandon, telephoned the editors of La Prensa and called them to an urgent meeting. When they arrived at her office, she informed them of the imposition of total censorhip to protect the security of the state and to defend the popular Sandinista revolution against the aggression of "gringo imperialism." This meant, in effect, the censorship of ideology.

With these few words the censor announced that the intentions of the government were not just to suppress certain articles that could harm its image or that could represent a security threat to the Sandinista state, but to suppress the way of thinking of the editors who plan, produce and select the news content of the paper and who direct its orientation. This ideological censorship reverberates like a distant echo and at times is lost in forgetfulness, but today, after four years of this Kafkaesque censorship and the mental exasperation that it creates, Blandon's words have been turned into the most refined kind of tyranny. Orwell's prophecy of what 1984 would be like was on the mark.

Blandon could be accommodating and even jovial at times, but at other times she could be insulting and belligerent. She has an inflated ego, which makes her feel that she must completely control the way people express themselves, think and give their opinions in the Nicaraguan press. She often speaks in the first person with the authority of a little dictator, full of haughtiness. "I cannot permit you to put this in the paper," she says. Sometimes she suggests substituting an official government statement for something she has not allowed in the paper. She seems to be a fundamentally insecure person who depends on military-style orders of what should and should not be censored, how public figures should be referred to in stories and how headlines should be changed—to the point that the editor finds himself in such a state of mental confusion and exhaustion that he is forced to think like the censor.

Press censorship in Nicaragua undermines the whole reason for having newspapers in the first place. The day editor who puts out La Prensa must ignore the element of time or the urgency of informing the public or of printing the latest news. His principal concern must always be to arrive as early as possible at the censor's office, for the censor determines when the paper is ready to be published and distributed. If the editor has an important meeting with his staff, the process of censorship will start later and the paper will be delayed.

On days when nothing special happens and the articles that have been submitted to the censor are totally innocuous and merit no suppression, some articles are nevertheless rejected. This is to show that the paper must be censored every day to maintain the disciplinary measures imposed by the military.

Maintaining censorship is vital to the Sandinista regime. Only democratic governments endorsed by an ample popular base can support freedom of the press. This is the real reason, not the state of war, that there is censorship in Nicaragua.

Blandon abuses her responsibilities by persecuting and harming La Prensa in three ways: She hurts the paper financially by not letting it publish on time, which damages its sales on the streets. She deprives La Prensa of its own initiative and style and forces it to conform to that of the Sandinistas. And finally, by letting the Sandinistas print their own version of the news, little by little La Prensa is converted into a newspaper with little attraction.

None of these three things has been achieved to the government's satisfaction, because of the courage and determination of those who produce La Prensa. They continue to try to do their work as if the situation were normal. This is the only way they can keep themselves from falling under the total mental domination of the censor and the Ministry of the Interior.

The editor is constantly forced to insert the word "contra" in each place where the international wires use "rebels" or "anti-Sandinistas." The censor does not allow the use of these words because she considers them too respectable. The rebel commander Eden Pastora must be labeled "the traitor" or his name cannot appear in the paper. The name of the many-time world boxing champion Alexis Arguello has been forever forbidden to appear in La Prensa because of his known sympathy for the rebels. The picture and name of Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, head of the Catholic Church in Nicaragua, have also been prohibited because he has denounced the persecution of the church by the Sandinista regime in the presence of the United Nations and the Organization of American States.

This obsession with the cardinal reached such a point that it led to the censoring of a story about last year's World Series. La Prensa took a poll to see which of the teams in the series—the St. Louis Cardinals or the Kansas City Royals—was more popular in Nicaragua. The result of the poll was titled, "Nicaraguans: The Cardinals Will Be the Champions." The headline was censored: we were not allowed to print the words "cardinals" and "champions" together. We had to substitute "St. Louis" for "Cardinals."

After four years of censorship in Nicaragua, the daily life of La Prensa follows a suffocating routine in which all systems of logical thinking are stifled. Numerous employees must go to the office of the censor with photocopies of the pages. There they spend between 4½ and six hours while the officials review the articles line by line and letter by letter. They even review the classified ads, which are sometimes censored. After they finish they hand the editors a notice called the "Resolution." Stamped on it and pertaining to specific articles are the phrases; "Do Not Publish," or "Change Headline," or "Suppress Paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 5."

To change a headline the editor must think of one that will not be censored. He is forced, therefore, to think like the censor. Orders to change headlines are frequent and usually affect articles that are not favorable to the regime but that would not be suitable to censor. An example would be a declaration by Contadora that affects the government or an announcement by the Ministry of Industry that productivity has declined. The censors know that most readers read all of the headlines, but read only those articles that interest them. The headlines therefore must not reflect the bad news that may be in the article.

The censor often cuts the first paragraph of the article, leaving the informational content incomprehensible and obliging the editor to kill the story entirely.

The censor leaves out declarations and statements made by President Daniel Ortega and other national leaders when they are speaking outside of Nicaragua and contradict what they do and say in Nicaragua. But that is most improbable is that the censor sometimes censors herself. On Jan. 21, 1986, we received an interview with Nelba Blandon on censorship, by an AP correspondent named Eloy A. Aguilar. We tried to publish it under the headline: "Blandon Comments on Censorship," but the censor's decision was: "Do Not Publish." On Aguilar's next visit he asked Blandon why the interview, which he considered accurate, was not published. The censor answered: "Because the statements I made were for publication abroad, not for publication in Nicaragua."

Blandon was also censored, according to her, in a long article on Nicaragua in National Geographic Magazine in December 1985. The article cited Jaime Chamorro, director of La Prensa, as well as Blandon on the subject of censorship in Nicaragua. When the two met after the afticle had appeared, Chamorro refuted her declarations. She responded by saying: "I was censored." Censored? asked Chamolrro. She answered: "They did not publish everything I said." The censor protects the "cooperators" or foreign "internationalists" who commit crimes against the Nicaraguan people. She intervenes on behalf of those people who give their support to the Sandinista regime and does not permit any refernces to criminal activity or bad behavior—especially if they are Cubans.

Along with photocopies of every page of the paper we send the censor two pages of material that we call "stuffing"—articles that can be substituted for censored stories. La Prensa has been unable to publish on 40 occasions because the censor could not find adequate material to substitute for censored stores. It is prohibited to leave any blank space on a page or in any other way give the impession that the paper has been censored.

On other occasions La Prensa itself has decided not to publish in order to protest the censorship of important articles, such as Pope John Paul II's letter to the bishops of Nicaragua and the pastoral letter written by all of Nicaragua's bishops during Holy Week.

After all of the necessary changes have been made Blandon again must see photocopies before the paper goes to press. At that point she may still demand changes before the order is given to publish. Only then can the editors and writers breathe. The paper has finally been approved. But on many days we are not allowed to publish until the night. On those days, the papers cannot be sold until the following day.

The censor also prohibits the distribution of censored material to friends of the paper, foreign correspondents, embassies or anyone else who shows interest. Censorship must be a completely private matter between the "jailkeeper," the Department of Censorship, and the "criminal," the newspaper La Prensa (which has already been in jail for four years)—and the condemned, it appears, will be in prison forever.

Maintaining censorship is essential to the Sandinistas even though it damages the prestige they so badly want to maintain abroad. In response to international denunciations of censorship in Nicaragua, they maintain the lie that the exercise of censorship is limited strictly to matters of the military and state security.

The dilemma is clear: censorship is a poison that damages their image abroad. But they know that to lift it would result in an internal, deadly poison for which there can be no antidote. Freedom of the press would be the Sandinistas' death sentence.

SPEECH OF HON. MELVYN M. DYMALLY TO AMERICAN ARAB ANTI-DISCRIMINATION COMMITTEE

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MIGHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, at the time when terrorism is an issue of grave concern within the international community, I would like to submit a statement to the RECORD by our colleague from California, Mr. DYMALLY. The speech was presented at the annual banquet of the American Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee [ADC] which was recently held in Detroit, MI.

The ADC is an organization whose members and officers have been victimized by domestic terrorism during the past year, including the murder of Alex Odeh, ADC's regional executive director in Santa, CA, and the firebombing of ADC's national office here in Washington, DC, and Boston. To date, no one has been charged with these heinous crimes.

The statistics which the gentleman from California cites are taken from FBI files and are most enlightening. I am pleased that Mr. DYMALLY will testify in the same vein at an oversight hearing on criminal and civil rights violations of Arab Americans which will be conducted by the House Judiciary's Criminal Justice Subcommittee in mid-July. It is my hope that his statment will be read and referred to by my colleagues who are concerned with ending terrorism in all its forms, in all areas of the world.

PERCEPTION: THE EFFECTS OF INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM ON DOMESTIC TERRORISM, REPRESENTATIVE MERVYN M. DYMALLY

I am grateful for your invitation to attend this banquet honoring former Senator Charles Percy. He will always be noted as a legislator whose moral courage and leadership serve as an inspiration to many of us.

This is a special occasion for me because, for the first time, I am able to speak in Detroit directly to the people I have deep concern for, and on whose behalf I spoke out since I became aware of the gratuitous attacks against Americans of Arab desent.

I have spent nearly six years as a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. I have served over the years on the Human Rights Subcommittee, Europe and the Middle East Subcommittee, Asian and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee, and on the Western Hemisphere Affairs Subcommittee, of the Foreign Affairs Committee. Not one of these Subcommittees has been untouched by the subject of terrorism. I would add that my formal training is in social science, or perhaps the art (or in the case of politics at least, the craft) of human behavior. I do hold strong views on the subject of terrorism, views acquired in part through direct experience, for I am personally well acquainted with a number of victims of terrorism and their families. My views have also been influenced by my years of helping to form U.S. foreign policy including our policies toward terrorism.

I believe the best contribution I can make here tonight will be to talk about the impact of international terrorism on domestic terrorism. It is inconceivable to me that when our administration has mustered so much of its resources to fight out terrorism, nothing much is being done to stop domestic terrorism here on American soil. After all, charity starts at home.

I want to thank the FBI and David Ignatius of the Washington Post for the information I am about to mention.

We perceive the Middle East to be the main terrorist threat. But in 1984, for example, of 47 "significant terrorist events" recorded by the State Department, 19, substantially less than half, were carried out by terrorist of Arab background. Geograpically as well, the Middle East is not the main site of terrorism. In all but three of the last 18 years, more terrorists incidents against U.S. citizens occurred in Latin America than in the Middle East. Between 1980 and 1985 there were 84 acts of terrorism against U.S. citizens in the Middle East. There were 369 in Latin America in the same period. But the terror hotspot is Europe with 458 incidents against U.S. citizens in the past five years.

High as those numbers are, U.S. citizens are not the main target of terrorists. Last year alone international terrorism killed 2,223 people. 162 of them were U.S. citizens. In the past five years 7,260 people (by conservative count) have been killed in terrorist incidents. Less than one tenth of those have been from the United States.

We think of many terrorist incidents as involving air flight or airports. And we recall the most recent such incidents and avoid airports in Athens, Paris and Rome. In fact, according to data published by the Federal Aviation Administration in 1985, the two most dangerous airports over the past eight years have been New York City and Miami. New York has had ten hijackings in that period and Miami has had 14. Athens, by contrast, had one such incident in the same time period.

We see tourists as most vulnerable to terrorism, and government officials as next most vulnerable. In fact, business persons are most at risk. Attacks on U.S. businessmen outnumber attacks on tourists, embassy personnel and even military personnel.

We perceive an explosion of terrorism in recent years. But statistically, the incidence of terrorism has been declining by some measures and remaining constant by others. The number of terrorist incidents involving U.S. citizens has not changed significantly between the 1970's and the 1980's. Between 1970 and 1979, 44 bombs exploded on airplanes. Between 1980 and 1984 there were 11 explosions. The total number of all bombings has remained fairly constant over the past 15 years. In a low year one can expect about 120 terrorist bombings world wide. In an average year, the number will be somewhat over 200. 1985 was a high year for bombings. There were 404. But in 1972 there were 452.

There has been such attention by the media and public figures to terrorism recently that the citizens of this country perceive it to be a more immediate personal threat than it really is. The chance an American will succumb to a terrorist attack from any source is less than seven ten millionths. Moreover, Americans misperceive who the major perpetrators are. The perception of threat has made it permissible to adopt an attitude of caution, and mistrust toward those who might even remotely be associated with perceived terrorist groups.

This nation has seen periodically through its history, the effects of misperception of threat. At the turn of the century, Chinese immigrants were feared. The papers referred to them as "the yellow hoards". In response to the misperceived danger, the United States adopted legislation that prevented Chinese people from coming to the United States. The act was called, simply enough, the Chinese Exclusion Act. White people in the South after the Civil War perceived black people to be a threat. They began lynching black people as a way of protecting white people from a threat that did not exist. Nevertheless, it took until nearly the middle of this century for Congress to pass an effective anti-lynching law to protect innocent black people from the irrational white fear. Hundreds of black people were killed before laws to protect them were passed and enforced. During the Second World War, Japanese Americans and Aleutian Islanders were thought to pose a threat. President Roosevelt issued Executive Order 9066 which created detention camps where thousands of U.S. citizens were jailed during the war. A significant portion of the Aleutian population perished because of unsanitary conditions in their camps. Japanese Americans lost property valued in the billions of dollars. Yet there is not a single case of subversion of the U.S. war effort by any Japanese American or any Aleutian Islander.

In the 1950's the perceived Japanese American threat was replaced by the threat of communist sympathizers. The careers of many Americans were destroyed when they were falsely linked to communism. A committee of the Congress, the House Unamerican Activities Committee helped to feed the misplaced fears of Americans. The image of the communist formed then is with us to this day.

Almost imperceptibly as the current terrorist scare has entered the homes of Americans through the nightly television news and the newspapers, the newest unjustifiably feared group is becoming United States citizens of Arab descent. And just as in earlier domestic incidents of misplaced fear, it is those perceived as the threat who have the most to fear. It is those who live in terror. It is they whose careers and whose lives are in danger. It is we, in our zeal to stop danger before it starts who become the domestic terrorists. Now there are Arab Americans who, because they have done no more than to exercise the rights supposedly enjoyed by all Americans, are kept under surveillance by the FBI, and who are openly accused of being terrorists, and who, in fact, have experienced terrorist activity against themselves. Those terrorist acts include murder.

Again, let us look at the facts about terrorist activity in the United States. The FBI publishes an annual report on domestic terrorism which indicates that 495 terrorist incidents occurred in the United States between 1977 and 1984. Arab group were responsible for five of those 395 incidents. Three of the five were attacks by Libyan nationals against other Libyan nationals. One of the five incidents was a sit-in by Saudi Arabians at the Saudi embassy in Washington to protest Saudi Arabian policies. The fifth act was a letter bomb to the Saudi Arabian embassy. Iranian nationals were responsible for three of the 395 incidents over the past eight years. All three incidents were anti-Ayatollah demonstrations. So, of eight Arab or Iranian linked terrorist incidents in the United States in the past eight years, none has been against Americans. All have been attacks of Arab or Iranian nationals against other Arab or Iranian nationals. Most significantly, there is not a single recorded instance of terrorist activity by Arab Americans or Iranian Americans against any U.S. citizen.

Unfortunately, Americans of Arab descent have often been the victims of terrorist attacks right here in their own country as well as in Israel on at least two occasions. This terrorism has included murder, beatings, bombings of offices and churches, character defamation, blacklisting, political disenfranchisement, and psychological terror in the form of threats. I want to mention a few of these incidents. But I also have the unique opportunity to let you hear an act of terrorism that occurred this week in Washington. The telephone call I am about to play for you now was received in the Washington office of the American Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee shortly after it was announced that we had bombed Libya. I have to warn you that it is vulgar. [Text of tape omitted].

Threats represent one kind of terror with which Arab Americans and other Arabs living in the United States must contend. Too often the terror becomes physical. Less than three weeks after our first bombing of Libya, for example, five Arab students, none of whom were Libyan, at Syracuse University, were beated for no reason at all. One of the victims may become blind in one eye. A number of Libyan students have been arrested by the Immigration Service since our attack on Libya. They have not been informed of the reason for their arrest. Arab Americans are especially prone to terrorism following an international act of terrorism. Shortly after the TWA hijacking, for example, a talk show host in San Francisco agreed with a caller that Shiites should be killed. Shortly thereafter the Islamic mosque in San Francisco was vandalized. After the TWA hijacking the Islamic Institute in Dearborn, Michigan, was vandalized. The Islamic mosque in Houston, Texas was bombed at the same time. During the same week police had to be called in at the Islamic Center in Quincy, Maine when, an angry group tried to take over the Center.

Perhaps the most serious terrorist incident against Arab Americans occurred in Southern California at the time of the Achille Lauro hijacking. Alex Odeh, a friend of mine, and a respected Arab American member of the community was murdered when a bomb wired to his office door exploded. Alex had received multiple death threats in the past, and had resorted to the precaution of having his mail X-rayed to avoid letter bombs. Only two months before Alex's murder a bomb was placed outside the Boston office of the American Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee. It exploded as police were attempting to defuse it, and two policemen were hurt. The American Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee office in Washington, D.C. was burned in November of last year. The Committee has had difficulty finding a new office because landlords fear for the safety of their property.

Individually targeted Arab Americans and those supportive of Arab American rights have been the victims of terror as well. A man and his wife, who out of fear for their lives do not wish to be identified, had their house broken into, and the contents of the house were destroyed. The couple's dog was killed. This couple had been publicly outspoken on Arab issues. They are not of Arab background. That incident occurred last year. In January of this year, the son of former Senator James Abourezk who is an Arab American, and a friend were driving in the Washington area when their car was rammed from behind, and an attempt was made to push their car off the road. Police spotted the ramming attempt and apprehended the culprits. But after Abourezk and his companion drove on, a second car attempted to drive them off the road. The second auto was not apprehended. That same month, a grocer of Palestinian background in Milwaukee was shot in the head by an assailant. No money was taken from the store. Nothing was stolen. That same month, the editor of an Arabic-English newspaper on the East Coast was attacked and very seriously beaten. As he lay in his hospital bed his room was entered by an unidentified man who said to him, "We let you live this time; next time we won't."

In fifteen years of reporting these terrorist activities to police authorities, Arab American groups have been unable to identify a single indictment of a perpetrator who was not caught at the time the act occurred. In contrast to this lack of success in apprehending these terrorists, the government has engaged in surveillance of innocent Arab Americans. A case in point is that of an Arab American attorney who is active in Arab American affairs. I am sure that you all know him. His name is Abdeen Jabara. The first indication he had that the FBI was watching him came when his bank informed him that the FBI had requested copies of all his bank records. After several years of work to obtain his FBI files under the Freedom of Information Act, Attorney Jabara found that he had been watched for seven years. He discovered that at a certain point in the surveillance it was determined that he had not engaged in criminal activity. But the surveillance did not stop. Instead, for several years after, he continued to be followed. Meeting he attended were infiltrated and records made of discussions carried out in those meetings. One has to wonder why a man known to be innocent of wrongdoing was watched for seven years?

I would note in passing an incident in 1983 that apparently escaped close FBI attention. On October 18, 1983 a citizen of Israel entered the visitor's gallery of the U.S. House of Representatives. He had strapped to himself a bomb. He actually pushed the button to explode the bomb. At the time, the House was in session. The visitor's gallery was packed. The battery of the device was wired improperly to the bomb, and it failed to explode. Record of that terrorist bombing is not included among terrorist incident noted in the official FBI report on domestic terrorism for that year. The apparent lack of attention to some incidents coupled with the excess of attention to others has a chilling effect on the Arab American community. They fear not only terrorist attack, but also they fear that in reporting terrorism and simply in exercising their right to free speech and assembly, they will open themselves to further terrorist oppression and perhaps even to unwarranted government scrutiny.

I regret to tell you that I have scratched only the surface of terrorism against Arab Americans. Government complacency about this issue gives Arab Americans little reason to hope for positive change. Public action which punishes the innocent to quell the acts of the guilty is terrorism. And I tell you, the struggle to stop terrorism will be lost on the day our unreasoning fear transforms us into the terrorists.

I would have liked to end on this note, particularly after talking for such a great length of time; yet I cannot end without briefly addressing the issue of racism and discrimination against Americans of Arab heritage. I have personally seen this racism when one of my aides, who is performing his assigned duties, became a target of an attack by the Christian Broadcast Network, which went as far as endangering his life, and that of his family, by nationally airing his name and picture while falsely accusing him of having a relation to the Palestine Liberation Front, less than a month after the murder of Alex Odeh.

Racism is a serious threat because it is a necessary condition for the wave of violent attacks against Arab Americans.

IMPACTS OF BOVINE GROWTH HORMONE NEED TO BE STUDIED

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, over the last several months the talk among dairy farmers has centered around bovine growth hormone, the latest initiative in the biotechnology field that has the potential to increase efficiency of dairy farmers but at the same time increase the surplus of milk. Dairy farmers are deeply concerned about the impact this relatively new development may have on their livelihood.

LEGISLATION TO STUDY ITS IMPACT

Today, I am introducing legislation that will prohibit the Secretary of Health and Human Services from approving bovine growth hormone for commercial use until proper studies are completed providing us with some answers as to its impact on our dairy industry.

I do not intend to stop the use of new technology. This legislation simply makes sure that three investigations of its impact are made before it can be sold commercially. The three investigations are:

First, an environmental impact study done by the Food and Drug Administration.

Second, a USDA study of the impact on the Federal Dairy Price Support Program.

Third, a USDA study of its potential impact on the structure of dairy agriculture—especially our small- and mid-sized family farms.

WHAT IS BOVINE GROWTH HORMONE?

Bovine growth hormone, which is more properly called bovine somatotropin [BST], is a naturally occurring protein in cattle and is found in the pituitary gland. The gene responsible for natural bovine somatotropin is isolated and transferred from the animal to ordinary bacteria cells. The bacteria are used to produce, through standard fermentation techniques, large quantities of bovine somatotropin. The bacteria are then killed, the BST separated, highly purified, and formulated for use.

Even if the usefulness of BST is not now apparent to us, it is incredible that continuous daily injections can increase milk production by 10 to 40 percent.

Studies have shown that BST stimulates cows to direct food energy into milk production, and while they require more feed to achieve such high levels of milk production, there is actually an increase in feed efficiency. Greater production begins 3 to 4 days after the first injection and reaches full effect in a couple weeks. Initial research indicates that milk from cows being injected with BST is no different than that from a cow not receiving treatment. There is also apparently no adverse impact on the cow.

ITS RELATION TO OUR PRESENT DAIRY PROGRAM

While studies conducted by the developers of bovine growth hormone indicate that bovine growth hormone has the potential to reduce milk production costs, this technology couldn't have come at a more inopportune time. We currently are awash in a surplus of milk. In 1985, purchases by the Commodity Credit Corporation accounted for roughly 10 percent of our Nation's total milk production.

We took a major step toward a permanent reduction in the milk surplus with the Whole Herd Buyout Program. Under the program, which will remove more than 12 billion pounds of milk nationally, the Government and all dairy farmers are paying participating farmers to leave dairying for 5 years by either exporting or slaughtering their herds.

So why are we trying to find ways to increase milk production at the same time we're trying to cut back?

I have to admit the logic doesn't make a lot of sense. Right now many farmers in my district would tell me they need bovine growth hormone about as much as a drunk driver needs another drink.

Despite the contentions of some that the development of bovine growth hormone is a step in the wrong direction, we cannot close our eyes and hope it goes away. Whether we like it or not, bovine growth hormone is likely to be on the market soon.

While it is difficult to see any direct benefits of bovine growth hormone at present, it would be extremely irresponsible for us to ignore a new technology that, if used properly, could lower the cost to produce milk.

Bovine somatotropin will eventually be in the commercial market. We cannot turn our backs on technology in the hopes that we won't have to deal with it. Rather, we should seize the initiative and learn about this advancement so we can be prepared for it. The legislation I have introduced today does not seek to ban the commercial use of bovine growth hormone but, rather, to make sure that the necessary information is available so Congress, our dairy farmers, and the American people can make the proper choices in the future.

UPWARD BOUND PROGRAM ADMINISTERED IN IRRESPONSIBLE MANNER

HON. J. ROY ROWLAND

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the Upward Bound Program has been administered in an unfair and irresponsible manner by the U.S. Department of Education, and consequently, many young people have been hurt, in my opinion.

Although I will concentrate on Georgia's experiences in my remarks today, I want to emphasize that this is a problem which threatens every Upward Bound Program. I am concerned about how this mismanagement affects communities not only in Georgia, but throughout the country.

Upward Bound is a federally assisted program to prepare disadvantaged young people for college. Once Upward Bound Programs have been funded, they have carried out their mission very successfully over the years. Thousands of youths have benefited from the special learning program and have gone on to complete college and become exceptionally productive members of their communities.

The mismanagement has occurred during the Department of Education's evaluation process. Problems in the review of applications have existed for some years, and this may be the worst year ever.

Under the rules, applications for new and existing Upward Bound projects from around the country compete every 3 years for available grant money. Existing programs receive prior experience points, which gives them an advantage over new applicants. But it is a competitive process, and every program runs the risk of losing its funding if its application is not rated highly enough.

In the past, many errors appear to have been made by Department of Education evaluators in their review of Upward Bound applications. This, in itself, has not been the problem. Everyone makes mistakes. But in past years, the Department of Education has openly acknowledged it had no provisions for considering appeals and no way to correct its own errors. This is a formula which guaranteed that some outstanding programs would be unfairly evaluated, and this is what I believe happened when funding for the Upward Bound Program at South Georgia College in Douglas was discontinued 3 years ago.

This year, I was led to understand that an appeals' system was to be put into effect. But if any such system has been implemented, it fails to provide for the systematic correction of evaluation errors and the accurate readjustment of application scores.

Many obvious errors were made this year in evaluating the 20-year-old Upward Bound Program at Mercer University in Macon, GA. One evaluator, for example, took off points on the grounds that Mercer failed to include in its application a required list of qualifications for the program's faculty. Although Mercer subsequently pointed out that the qualifications were, in fact, included, and were even cited by the other evaluators, the Department of Education has refused to recognize that any errors exist and has ruled that no corrections will be made.

If just a few of the most obvious errors had been corrected, it is clear Mercer would have scored enough points to again qualify for funding. Instead, Mercer's application has been denied, an appeal has been rejected, and 145 young people have learned that this opportunity is being taken away from them without just cause.

This is a program which has produced one of the most outstanding records in the country as measured by student performance in high school, increased college enrollment, and increased college retention and graduation rates.

Mercer is not alone. Although I have not had an opportunity to review other disputed evaluations as closely, the evidence indicates that other programs have been mistreated in a similar fashion this year. As it stands, no Upward Bound Program in the country is safe, no matter how effectively it is being operated.

If the Department of Education is unwilling to admit it makes mistakes, nothing will be done to correct them. Meanwhile, it is the young people who are being hurt. This is what is so shameful about this situation.

Mr. Speaker, I call on Education Secretary William J. Bennett to immediately take steps to establish a fair and reasonable Upward Bound evaluation process for the future. Although it has been apparent that problems have existed for some years, Secretary Bennett has so far failed to take corrective action. If he continues to fail to act, I suggest Congress should intervene.

GIVEAWAY ELK HILLS OIL SALES SHOULD BE STOPPED NOW AND ADMINISTRATION PROPOSALS TO SELL RESERVES ABANDONED

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. RALPH M. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised and disappointed that sales of crude oil from the Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve in southern California are being continued by the Department of Energy to the point that they have driven down crude prices to as low as $6.23 per barrel on the west coast. I am told that these low prices have caused California independent producers to shut-in about 10,000 wells, resulting in the loss of approximately 100,000 barrels per day of production.

Although this production glut is not occurring in my home State of Texas, it does have a nationwide impact on the prices of refined petroleum products and is resulting in the wasting of a depleting natural resource. As a native of east Texas, I witnessed firsthand the first major plunge in oil prices which resulted from the discovery to the east Texas oil field and the sudden availability of a substantial increase in production. Prices dropped dramatically and much of the early production from that field was sold for only a small fraction of its true worth.

While I am not comparing the size of Elk Hills to the east Texas field, in the case of Elk Hills, the Government is squandering assets in way similar to the way early production from east Texas was squandered—by being priced considerably below its true value. To make matters worse, the administration is proposing to sell the naval petroleum reserves to the highest bidder. In my view, selling reserves into a historically low market is not only bad business but bad public policy as well.

Fortunately, there are those outside of the oil and gas producing States who recognize this problem. My subcommittee chairman, PHIL SHARP, of the Fossil and Synthetic Fuels Subcommittee has introduced a bill, H.R. 4843, that directs the President to establish a minimum sales price for these reserves that will prevent sales from occurring significantly below market prices or below the purchase price for the strategic petroleum reserve. I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of this measure. In addition, the New York Times in an editorial of June 11, 1986, addressed two problems with the naval petroleum reserve.

The editorial correctly chastises the DOE for losing $300,000 per day by selling oil from the naval petroleum reserves for as little as $6.23 per barrel. It also argues against selling the reserves hastily simply as a means to meet the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction targets. This period of oil industry depression is not the right time for a forced sale of this valuable Government asset.

I ask that the editorial be printed in the RECORD at this point and commend it to my colleagues' attention.

[From the New York Times, June 26, 1986]

KEEP THE LID ON TEAPOT DOME

The 1922 Teapot Dome scandal involved a conspiracy to sell the assets of the Naval Petroleum Reserve in California for less than full value; President Harding's Interior Secretary ended up in prison. Today, the Government is selling the daily output from the same petroleum reserve below market price, and proposes to sell off the entire reserve at a bargain price.

This time around, there is no reason to believe that public officials are out for personal gain. But it's still a scandal, considering how much taxpayers stand to lose.

Before World War I, the Navy acquired its own oil fields to avert fuel shortages. But then the commercial market for oil developed fully, and direct ownership became irrelevant. Besides, pumping oil is a poor substitute for emergency storage; wells can yield their bounty only in dribbles.

That's why, in 1976, Congress authorized the Navy to auction off the 40 million to 60 million barrels produced each year at Elk Hills in California, the field that replaced Teapot Dome as the primary source of Navy oil. It also explains why the Navy didn't protest the Reagan Administration's proposal this year to sell the reserve outright to the highest bidder.

The Administration said the sale was part of a general privatization program to increase economic productivity. But officials know that private ownership won't much affect the efficiency of highly routinized reserve operations. The real reason for now jettisoning the reserve is to generate quick cash to make it easier to meet the deficit reduction targets of the Gramm-Rudman law.

That would be a poor excuse for sale under the best of circumstances. Swapping the reserve for cash from an oil company isn't likely to increase new private investment. Indeed, it might even reduce total investment by diverting oil industry capital from exploration and development. In any case, these are hardly the best of circumstances. With oil prices sagging below $15, the reserve is worth much less than it was last year, and very much less than it will be once oil prices rise again.

Recent experience suggests, moreover, that the Energy Department is poorly qualified to manage the sale. This spring, under a quirk in its own rules, it auctioned six months' production from Elk Hills for about 25 percent less than the competitive price. The department has since refused to use its legal discretion to cancel the sale, lest that anger the recipients of a $300,000-a-day windfall!

Representative Philip Sharp, chairman of the House subcommittee that oversees the reserve, urges the Energy Department to cancel under-market sales and offers legislation to prohibit a recurrence of the proposed sale of the entire reserve, which could cost billions. This teapot needs a lid.

RELIGIOUS RIGHTS IN ROMANIA

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to join my colleagues in bringing to the attention of the House the human rights situation in Romania.

Ordinarily, I would not have a special interest in this topic, except in the general concern we have for human rights everywhere. But it so happens that during recent years I have followed with personal interest the activities of the Romanian Government in its treatment of religions in that country.

Members of the Church of the Nazarene, of whose American branch I am a member, have informed me of the difficulties undergone by members of that Church in Romania. My most recent information is that while things have not improved for members of that Church, they are at least receiving aid packages from the United States and have not been directly persecuted recently by Romanian officials. This is not what I call human rights improvement because under a totalitarian regime the pressure of persecution can start again when it suits the rulers. But, as of this moment, members of the Church of the Nazarene, a small church dedicated only to prayer and good works, are receiving aid which is at least something to be thankful for.

In years past there have been open attacks on members of this Church in the State-controlled press and aid sent from the United States never reached its intended recipients.

In President Reagan's message to the Congress, June 3, 1986, he said:

I share the strong concerns manifested among the public and in the Congess regarding the Romanian Government's restrictions on religious liberties. In consequence, we have urged the Romanian Government to adopt a more humane approach by taking steps such as:

Releasing jailed religious activists such as Constantin Sfatcu and Dorel Catarama;

Allowing substantial legal importation or domestic printing of Protestant Bibles and permitting their legal distribution;

Easing administrative restrictions against Nazarenes, "unofficial" Baptists, and other groups that are not officially accepted by the Romanian Government; and Easing measures that discourage construction or repair of churches and have allowed, in roughly eight cases in recent years, their demolition on grounds of alleged building code violations.

We welcome the freeing of Constantin Sfatcu and Dorel Catarama from prison, but are otherwise disappointed by the Romanian Government's reponse to our concerns in this area.

I believe that men and women of good will can disagree on the questions of whether or not extending most-favored-nation status to Romania helps or hurts religious freedom and human rights in that country. The President believes "existing access and influence" of the United States can be preserved by extending MFN status since, in his words "extensions of MFN has facilitated American citizen's access to co-religionists in Romania as well as the flow of several million dollars worth of material assistance to them each year."

We have to keep checking on the progress—if any—being made by the Romanian Government in its treatment of religious groups. There may come a time, if the situation does not democratically improve, when the Congress will take another look at MFN status. It is up to the Romanian Government to prove that it takes our concerns seriously.

CONSIDERATION OF RENEWAL OF ROMANIA'S MFN STATUS

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, the trade subcommittee is now considering the renewal of Romania's most-favored-nation [MFN] status and this issue will soon be brought to the floor of the House. It is, therefore, now very important for us to discuss the worsening human rights record of the government of President Ceausecsu in Romania. In light of the Romanian Government's human and religious rights abuses, we must seriously question whether the Socialist Republic of Romania should receive an extension of the MFN status under the waiver clause. In 1985, this clause allowed the Ceausecsu government to attain a $743 million trade surplus with the United States.

Clearly, we must focus our attention on the plight of small Protestant denominations in Romania which are being harassed and whose clergymen are being arrested and convicted on false criminal charges. Little attention is being paid to the equally serious persecution of national minorities in Romania. There are about 2.5 million Hungarians and 330,000 Germans, as well as Serbs, Armenians, Bulgars, Turks, and Gypsies in Romania. Last year, 14,000 Germans emigrated to the Federal Republic of Germany. Financed by heavy investments from German industries and banks, President Ceausecsu allowed them to emigrate. For those who stay, the cultural, ethnic, and religious oppression remains unchanged.

A denationalization campaign is being concentrated especially on the Hungarians, the largest national minority in Europe outside of the Soviet Union. The Hungarians have lived in the historical province of Transylvania for 1,000 years. In Romania, Hungarian intellectuals and clergymen reportedly are beaten during interrogations by secret police. The Reverend Geza Palfi died of injuries from beatings by the Securitate for promoting Christmas as a legal holiday in Romania. The hands of the Reverend Janos Csilik were broken by the secret police when that clergyman would not betray the seal of confession.

The underlying intimidation of the Hungarian minority and the revocation of their educational and cultural privileges go back to 1958, when the Hungarian Bolyai University of Cluj-Napoca (Kolozsvar) merged with the Romanian Babes University. Today, there is no higher education instruction in the Hungarian language in Transylvania. Universities, colleges, and special institutes instruct in Romanian. Half of the Hungarian school sections were eliminated between 1959 and 1986. Only at the grade school level can at least two-thirds of the children still receive instruction in Hungarian.

Sadly, there are numerous examples of this outrageous abuse of human rights. It would seem that the old Stalinism of the Soviet Union is very much alive today in Romania.

Mr. Speaker, for many years, American-Hungarian organizations have protested this state of affairs. Congress has expressed considerable interest in the matter in the past. In 1983, I was among 221 signers of a letter to Secretary of State Shultz circulated by Mr. RITTER, my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania. We requested that the State Department begin to negotiate the issue of human and cultural rights violations against the 2.5 million Hungarians of Transylvania. In 1984, I cosponsored House Resolution 147 which called upon the President and Secretary of State to negotiate with the Romanian Government on the human, cultural, and national self-determination rights of the Hungarians living in Transylvania. In 1985, I also cosponsored an identical resolution. In 1986, these rights are still seriously in jeopardy. I urge that the constant and increasing mistreatment of Romanian national minorities be a major consideration in determining whether or not the United States renews its MFN status with Romania.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BOB EDGAR

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, last week on the Tauke amendment to H.R. 4116, the Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1986, I voted incorrectly in favor of the amendment. I had intended to vote "no" against the Tauke amendment—on rollcall 172, and I wish the record to reflect my intention.

ADELMAN IS WRONG ON ASATS

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, in an article appearing in last Friday's Christian Science Monitor, Kenneth Adelman, Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, called on Congress to end the existing United States-Soviet moratorium on testing antisatellite [ASAT] weapons in space. He charged that Congress had failed to consider the ASAT issues complexities, and that the ASAT test ban does not serve U.S. national security interests. Mr. Adelman is wrong. It is his logic, and not Congress', that is overly simplistic. Moreover, his arguments are clearly misleading and his article is plagued with mis-information.

Adelman makes the absurd contention that the existing ASAT test ban is unilateral. This is simply not the case. The moratorium is patently a mutual restriction on both the United States and Soviet ASAT programs. If the Soviet Union resumes ASAT testing, then the United States can legally test. But if the Soviets continue their 4-year restraint on ASAT's, then the bilateral limitation continues. There is nothing unilateral about it.

The fact that Mr. Adelman sees this mutual restriction in unilateral terms raises serious questions about his view of arms control in general. It appears that Mr. Adelman's vantage extends no further than the U.S. borders, leaving him to see only the impact of mutual restraint on American—and not Soviet—weapons programs. With this shortsightedness, every arms control measure would apparently seem unilateral to Mr. Adelman.

Having falsely declared the moratorium as being unilateral, Adelman proceeds to argue that it amounts to a one-sided concession that will weaken the U.S. bargaining position in Geneva. But how can one weaken a bargaining position that doesn't exist? The Reagan administration has never shown an interest in ASAT arms control, and has thus refused to develop a position to limit such weapons. Although the Soviets have provided numerous opportunities for the United States to resume the United States-Soviet ASAT negotiations that ended in 1979, the administration has consistently rebuffed such occasions. The administration's position is that ASAT arms control is not in our national security interests, and thus there is no reason to be discussing the subject in Geneva. It is thus disingenuous and dishonest for Mr. Adelman to be claiming that the ASAT moratorium undermines the U.S. negotiators.

Adelman claims that ASAT critics have juggled statistics to make the Soviet ASAT look less capable than it actually is. In reality, it takes some clever juggling to make the Soviet ASAT look anything but ineffective.

The Soviet ASAT has inherent design limitations and has failed repeatedly; it is based on technology the United States rejected years ago. The system has only worked when using a radar guidance system, but radar is highly susceptible to countermeasures such as jamming. Aware of this limitation, the Soviets tried to develop a more advanced heat seeking sensor for the ASAT. All six attempts failed.

Adelman's view that the Soviet ASAT has been an operational success is simply not shared by other experts. For instance, Gen. Lew Allen, former U.S. Air Force Chief of Staff, told Congress in July 1979 that the Soviet ASAT had a "very questionable operational capability * * * they have not had a test program that would cause us to believe it is a very credible threat." Since then, there have been only four Soviet ASAT tests—three failures and one success. According to Leslie Dirks, former CIA director for research and technology, "* * * it [the Soviet ASAT] doesn't work. Anyone who has followed it closely would have to agree."

It appears that Mr. Adelman simply hasn't followed the Soviet program very closely.

Adelman punctuates nearly every paragraph with the assertion that the Soviets have a monopoly on ASAT's, and that the United States needs an ASAT too. The implication is that the United States has only just entered the ASAT competition, and that unless the moratorium is lifted we will remain behind the Soviets in the ASAT field.

However, a full and fair comparison of United States and Soviet ASAT programs reveals that the United States has conducted 34 ASAT and ASAT-related tests involving five different devices since the late 1950's; the Soviets have conducted 20 tests since 1968 of a single ASAT system. While it is true that the United States does not now have an operational ASAT, the Soviet ASAT can hardly be considered operational, either. Indeed, the ASAT moratorium serves the useful purpose of maintaining a relative ASAT equilibrium between the two nations.

Adelman warns that the Soviets are moving ahead rapidly on other ASAT technologies. This may be true, but the United States is doing the same within the strategic defense initiative [SDI]. But the mere fact that such technologies are being pursued does not mean that their development or deployment makes strategic or economic sense. Indeed, the opposite may well be true. The outcome of such research could be an enormously costly and highly destabilizing ASAT arms race.

Advanced ASAT's would jeopardize the vital military satellites that serve as the eyes and ears to nuclear deterrence. Congress was deeply concerned about this prospect when the moratorium was enacted into law last December, and that concern prevails. The moratorium provides the superpowers with the time they need to assess the risks and dangers of an ASAT arms race, and to negotiate a formal ASAT treaty. Mr. Adelman would squander such an opportunity and move full speed ahead with ASAT testing. The position taken by Congress seems eminently superior.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, July 14, 1986

The House met at 12 noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We invoke Your blessing upon us, gracious God, and pray that Your spirit will be always with us. May not our selfishness or folly cause Your love to be taken from us, but may Your presence continue to lighten our path, encourage our hearts and minds and set us in the way of truth and justice.

This we pray. Amen.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to section 274 of Public Law 99-177, the Chair announces the temporary Joint Committee on Deficit Reduction is hereby created and the members of the Committee on the Budget elected by the House are members of the joint committee.

RESIGNATION FROM THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation as a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, which was read:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, July 10, 1986.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Enclosed is a copy of my letter of resignation from the United States House of Representatives effective at the close of business on Sunday, July 13, 1986.

I intend to be sworn in as a member of the United States Senate on Monday, July 14, 1986, at 12:00 noon.

With best regards,

JAMES T. BROYHILL.

RESIGNATION FROM THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation as a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, which was read:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, July 11, 1986.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker of the House, H-204, The Capitol, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: By this letter, I hereby submit my resignation as a member of the United States House of Representatives effective 5 P.M. EDT., Friday, July 11, 1986.

Membership in the House of Representatives is one of the highest honors that can be accorded a citizen in a free society. Nowhere are the democratic principles envisioned by the framers of the U.S. Constitution more in evidence than in this body. Although the House is composed of individuals with widely divergent political and regional interests, the members of the House are genuinely dedicated to the ideals of public service. I shall always cherish my friendship and association with the Members of the House.

It has been a distinct personal honor and pleasure to serve under your leadership during the nearly ten years I have been a Member of Congress. I shall always be grateful for the courtesies you have extended to me and the people of Hawaii. You have my heartfelt best wishes for the remainder of your term as Speaker. I hope that when you retire at the end of this year that you will have the opportunity to visit Hawaii so that we can extend the aloha of our islands to you and your family.

Sincerely,

CEC HEFTEL,
Member of Congress.

With every good wish, I am,

Sincerely,

JACK BROOKS,
Chairman.

TAX BILL SHOULD CONSIDER REALITIES OF REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, the tax reform conference starts this week, and there is no doubt in my mind that the bill will become law this year; but in our zeal to reform the tax laws, we need to ensure that we do not inadvertently do harm to the real estate industry in this country.

For example, the provisions of the proposed legislation, particularly in the bill of the other body, which would retroactively affect the tax treatment of existing real estate properties financed under current law could lead to foreclosures of some real estate properties and conceivably increase rents in the short term.

I have real problems with making the provisions of this law retroactive, as I believe that fairness requires advanced notice of the tax loss.

Similarly, in our attempts to restrict the excessive use of tax shelters by outside investors and limited partnerships, we should guard against making it more difficult for active investors whose livelihood is often exclusively devoted to real estate development and investment from taking the risks necessary to continue their business.

The task of reaching consensus in the conference will not be easy, and I do not envy the difficulties faced; and I am also confident that we will pass a bill this year. I just want to make certain that this bill does not throw out the baby with the bath water when it comes to the real estate investment industry in this country, and I urge the conferees to consider these ideas during the next few weeks.

PROTECT THE BUDGET SAVINGS

(Mr. LATTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, following the Supreme Courts' decision on Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, our No. 1 priority should be taking action to preserve the $11.7 billion in budget savings which were achieved through the March 1 sequestration. Those savings can be preserved if we carry out the "fallback" provisions of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. The Temporary Joint Committee on Deficit Reduction, composed of the budget committees of the two Houses, should meet immediately to report a joint resolution affirming the $11.7 billion sequestration so that the House and Senate can ratify the savings by sometime next week. The Court, in its July 7 ruling on Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, gave us 60 days to pass such a resolution.

The March 1 sequestration savings must remain in effect. Otherwise, we will be compounding our future deficit reduction problems. If we add back the $11.7 billion in spending, we would be adding that much more to the deficit for fiscal year 1986. The effect would be compounded in future years. In fiscal year 1987 we would have to reduce the deficit by another $16.3 billion over and above what we had calculated. The chances of another sequestration this fall would be greatly increased. Altogether, over the 4 years from fiscal year 1986 through fiscal year 1989, our deficit reduction problem would rise by $65.4 billion.

We can avoid this, Mr. Speaker, by passing the necessary legislation to keep the March 1 sequestration in effect. At the same time, we should take action to correct the constitutional flaws of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings as it pertains to 1987.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken on tomorrow, Tuesday, July 15, 1986.

YOUTH SUICIDE PREVENTION ACT

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4650) to make grants available for youth suicide prevention programs, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4650

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Youth Suicide Prevention Act".

SEC. 2. YOUTH SUICIDE PREVENTION PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary of Education shall establish a grant program to assist local educational agencies and private nonprofit organizations to establish and operate programs of youth suicide prevention in accordance with this Act.

(b) APPLICATION.—

(1) An agency or organization which desires to receive a grant from the Secretary under this Act shall submit an application to the Secretary in such form and at such times as the Secretary may require.

(2) In the case of an applicant which is a local educational agency, the application shall provide assurances that Federal funds made available under this Act will be so used as to supplement and, to the extent practicable, increase the amount of State and local funds that would in the absence of such Federal funds be made available for the uses specified in this Act, and in no case supplant such State or local funds.

(c) USE OF FUNDS.—Any youth suicide prevention program receiving assistance under this Act shall—

(1) assist in increasing awareness of the incidence of youth suicide among families of youths, school personnel, and community leaders;

(2) train school personnel and community leaders in individual and schoolwide strategies for youth suicide prevention;

(3) coordinate youth suicide prevention efforts under this Act with alcohol and substance abuse prevention programs funded by the Federal Government, State and local governments, and non-Federal agencies and organizations;

(4) through cooperative efforts, utilize community resources in the development and implementation of youth suicide prevention programs under this Act; and

(5) in a manner determined by the Secretary, cooperate with other appropriate organizations and agencies and with local, State, and Federal Government agencies in youth suicide prevention.

(d) GRANT LIMITATION.—Any grant made by the Secretary under this Act may not exceed $100,000 in any fiscal year.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) For fiscal year 1987, of the funds appropriated to carry out the Secretary's Discretionary Funds under section 583 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 $1,000,000 shall be available to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(2) For each of the fiscal years 1988 and 1989, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(3) Section 583 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 is amended by adding the following subsection:

"(c) For fiscal year 1987, from the funds reserved for the purposes of this section, subject to the provisions of subsection (b), the Secretary shall make available $1,000,000 to carry out the Youth Suicide Prevention Act.".

(f) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "local educational agency" has the meaning given in section 1001(f) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; and

(2) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education.

SEC. 3. EVALUATION AND DISSEMINATION OF RESULTS OF PROGRAMS OF YOUTH SUICIDE PREVENTION.

(a) EVALUATION REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary shall provide for the evaluation of programs under section 2 of this Act.

(b) CONDUCT OF EVALUATIONS.—The evaluation shall be conducted by individuals not directly involved in the administration of the program or project operation under this Act. These outside evaluators and the program administrators shall jointly develop a set of evaluation criteria which provide for appropriate analysis of the programs.

(c) OBJECTIVE MEASURES.—In order to determine a program's effectiveness in achieving its stated goals, the evaluation shall contain objective measures of such goals and, whenever feasible, will obtain the specific views of program participants about such programs.

(d) DISSEMINATION.—The results of each evaluation conducted under this section shall be submitted to the Secretary for dissemination through the national diffusion network, in the form required for dissemination.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS].

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. The bill before the House today, H.R. 4650, offers a Federal response to a national tragedy: The alarming rise in the number of young people who take their own lives. Since 1960, suicide rates among people ages 15 to 24 have tripled. Last year, approximately 6,000 young people committed suicide. The actual number is probably much higher, since many suicides are not reported as such.

Many thousands more young people try to end their lives; the American Association of Suicidology estimates 50 attempts for every actual death.

Our Nation pays a price for the loss of these young lives. A premature death by suicide deeply affects not only the family, friends, and community of the young victim—it also affects the larger society that will never know or benefit from that child's potential. We can help prevent this deprivation of human potential. Several model programs—many of them based in schools—are already operating successfully around the country and hold promise for being replicated elsewhere.

H.R. 4650 will provide a very modest amount of Federal seed money to demonstrate successful youth suicide prevention techniques. The national program proposed in the bill will ensure that these demonstration projects are of high quality, well-coordinated with existing efforts, and nationally disseminated.

Recognizing the current budget situation, we have crafted this bill to use existing resources—$1 million from the Secretary of Education's discretionary funds—to start up this program in fiscal year 1987. Then, in fiscal years 1988 and 1989, the program will have its own, separate authorization of such sums as necessary.

I would like to commend the sponsors of this legislation, Congressman ACKERMAN and Congressman LANTOS for the leadership they have shown in calling attention to this serious problem and fashioning a Federal response.

Those of us who labor to ensure that children are educated, fed, and cared for cannot overlook a problem that robs our youth of their most precious gift.

I urge my colleagues to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 4650.

GOODLING AMENDMENT ON FISCAL YEAR 1987 AUTHORIZATION

An amendment to H.R. 4650 adopted in committee provides that there will be no additional costs for fiscal year 1987 under H.R. 4650. This amendment, which was offered by Congressman GOODLING, requires fiscal year 1987 funding for the youth suicide prevention projects to be taken from an existing source, the Secretary's Discretionary Fund authorized by chapter 2 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act.

The Secretary currently has $3 million reserved for projects funded at his discretion. This bill earmarks $1 million for youth suicide prevention projects, so even if the appropriation for chapter 2 does not increase, the Secretary will still have $2 million for his own priorities. This is the pot of money the Secretary has been using to fund his "Character, Content, and Choice" projects.

□ 1220

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill, H.R. 4650, the Youth Suicide Prevention Act.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate both the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN] and the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] with regard to their sponsorship of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, a single youth suicide is enough to cause shock and mourning in a whole community. The fact that thousands of young people are taking their own lives each year is a national tragedy. The Education and Labor Committee has held a series of hearings on youth suicide during the current Congress. In those meetings we heard testimony concerning the extent of the problem, who is likely to be involved, where suicides commonly occur, and what might be done to prevent suicides. Perhaps the most compelling testimony for action came from youths whose friends had either attempted or committed suicide. The weight of this testimony led the committee to believe some Federal action was called for.

Youth suicide is not a phenomenon that is restricted to any one part of the country. It strikes in suburban Chicagoland as easily and as often as it does the Hopi Indian reservation in New Mexico or any other part of the nation. Children and youth from poor and wealthy families, failing and achieving in school, with and without friends—all have taken their own lives. Witnesses at our hearings testified about the warning signals and cries for help some of these children made before attempting suicide.

It would be the purposes of this bill to increase awareness of the problem of youth suicide among families, school personnel, and community leaders; to train school personnel and community leaders in schoolwide suicide prevention strategies; to coordinate these prevention efforts with other community and government programs, such as alcohol and drug abuse programs; and to fund model suicide prevention programs that would not only have a local impact, but would serve as models for other communities across the country.

Two major changes were made in H.R. 4650 as it moved through the Education and Labor Committee which made the bill more acceptable to Members on both sides of the aisle. First, the authorization level for fiscal 1987 was reduced from $10 million to $1 million. In addition, for fiscal 1987, the $1 million authorization would be taken from the Secretary of Eduction's existing discretionary funds and thus would entail no new appropriations. Second, an evaluation and dissemination component was added by Mr. MCKERNAN. Successful results will be documented and submitted to the National Diffusion Network. Thus, other school districts and agencies will readily learn of effective suicide prevention programs being conducted in all parts of the country.

With these changes, I support H.R. 4650. I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort to help prevent youth suicide by voting in favor of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN], one of the main sponsors of this bill.

Mr. ACKERMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of millions of American families, as well as the 600,000 young people who attempted to take their own lives last year alone, and especially the 6,000 of them who succeeded, I strongly urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4650—the Youth Suicide Prevention Act.

Our country has treated youth suicide as an unspeakable taboo, often refusing to even acknowledge that it exists. While America remains silent, thousands of adolescents continues to be cut down each year by their own hands.

Young lives with bright futures are lost forever. Teenage suicide has, indeed, reached epidemic proportions in this Nation.

And yet, we are not doing enough to reach out to these troubled youngsters. We must declare war on this scourge of America's teenagers.

Earlier this year, Congressman LANTOS and I introduced a measure which we believe will be a responsible and necessary beginning to answer the silent cries for help from our youngsters.

Our breakthrough legislation would create a small grant program within the Department of Education. The Secretary would select proposals from local education agencies, and private, nonprofit organizations to design and operate suicide-prevention programs.

In addition, the measure establishes an evaluation mechanism for funded programs, and uses the National Diffusion Network to disseminate the prevention information to school districts and organizations interested in creating their own suicide prevention programs.

The bill, if enacted, would allocate $1 million from the Department of Education's discretionary fund. The bill does not authorize any new appropriation for 1987. In 1988 and 1989 Congress may appropriate such sums as are deemed necessary.

The programs that would be developed with the help of this legislation would reflect the valuable input of parents and community leaders, as well as school personnel, other experts, and teenagers themselves. Our approach appeals to the talents and expertise of all segments of the education and youth service field, and focuses them on the important task of saving the lives of America's kids.

Mr. Speaker, suicide is a plague that knows no boundaries. A troubled child stays behind no borders. Geography, education level, income, ethnicity, gender, and social strata—none of these is a limit on teenage suicide. This plague can strike a youngster in Scarsdale, Pacific Palasades, or Skokie as easily, quickly and fatally as it hits a child in Harlem, Watts, or South Chicago.

While the level of teenage suicide has exploded over the last 30 years, we are only now fully understanding the dimensions of this human tragedy. Schools that have established programs are handicapped by underfunding and isolation, and unfortunately these efforts often do not begin until too late—only after the loss of another precious young life.

We are experiencing a national crisis which cries out for national leadership. Today, this body can take the first bold step toward attaching the roots of a horrifying disease that has become the third largest killer of our young people.

We know that, with enough commitment, we can stop the madness. The communities, the schools, Mr. Speaker, the parents of this great Nation are turning to Congress to wake us all from our collective nightmare.

Other Members have joined Mr. LANTOS and myself in this crusade. My good friend from New York, Mr. BIAGGI, demonstrated his strong concern on this issue by conducting a field hearing on youth suicide in Westchester County, NY; my distinguished colleague from New York, Mr. DIOGUARDI, has shown great leadership in this issue by introducing the youth suicide prevention month resolution for 2 consecutive years and working hard for the passage of H.R. 4650; Mr. FAWELL has shown continued interest and support, and my esteemed friend from California, Chairman HAWKINS, has shown great commitment to this issue by shepherding the act through his committee and bringing it now to the floor.

And during committee and subcommittee markups, Mr. GOODLING, Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. MCKERNAN offered constructive amendments, which I believe have improved the Youth Suicide Prevention Act.

Before I conclude my statement, I would like to pay tribute to two special young people who testified before Chairman HAWKINS' subcommittee. These two teenagers shared with subcommittee members their experience in intervening in suicide attempts.

Fred Wyatt and Beth Corney are two young Americans who took it upon themselves to do directly that which all of us here today have the opportunity to do indirectly—to stand between a troubled youngster and death.

Mr. Speaker, any loss of life is tragic. The loss of a child is devastating. The self-inflicted death of a youngster is an unthinkable horror. Yet think we must—so we can understand it and prevent it.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of H.R. 4650.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, every 17½ minutes, someone in the United States turns to suicide. In 1984, more than 5,000 teenagers committed suicide; some experts estimate that the figure may be closer to 6,000.

Dr. Fred Weldon, director of the Center for Student Development, University of Montana, informs me that as of 1981, Montana ranked fourth with 17.1 suicides per 100,000. In 1981, Montana had 136 reported suicides.

Dr. Marv Miller, a renowned suicidologist at San Diego Suicide Information Center, indicates that half of all suicides could be prevented if procedures and training were available to make more of us familiar with the warning signals.

I support H.R. 4650, the Youth Suicide Prevention Act. I am pleased that two of my amendments are included in the bill.

The first amendment ensures that family members in addition to school personnel and community leaders are the targets of efforts to increase awareness of the warning signs of teenagers who may attempt suicide.

The second amendment requires coordination of a school's suicide prevention efforts with school-based and community-based alcohol and substance abuse programs. Studies show that drinking, for example, is a big factor in suicides.

For some individuals, alcohol and drug use cause depression, affect one's judgment, and may pave the way for a suicide attempt. Although we don't know exactly how the relationship between substance abuse and suicide is played out, whether it is causal or not, we do know it is important. I would hope that these programs will help us discover this important link.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today we have been given the opportunity to discuss one of the most serious epidemics to have plagued our Nation. The epidemic to which I am referring today is sinister and elusive in its appearance. In fact, most cases are not diagnosed until it is too late. I am of course referring to the high rate of suicide amongst our Nation's youth.

My colleagues in the House have been carefully monitoring the dramatic increase of youth suicide. It is with great relief, then, that we are able to witness the speed with which a compromise measure, H.R. 4650, has come before us today for our consideration. H.R. 4650 is the product of the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN] tireless devotion to waging a war against an elusive enemy. I congratulate my colleagues for their efforts to write legislation to address the preventable catastrophe when a young person has lost hope for the future.

Suicide is a preventable disease, in that it is really a mental disorder, induced by a wide variety of factors including drugs, family, and societal pressures. Suicide is spreading among this Nation's youth and is a troubling matter for parents, teachers, and legislators alike. In the past 5 years, suicide has become the second leading cause of death, following accidents, for young persons ages 15 to 24. Although the suicide rate for the population at large has remained essentially steady for many decades, for young people it has increased 25 percent between 1960 and 1983.

As ranking minority member of the Select Committee on Narcotics, I have become conversant in the myriad of ways in which substances abuse can aggravate depression, and destabilize an otherwise normal youth. More importantly, I have seen the ways in which drug prevention programs on a large scale can put such substance abusers back on the right track. Why not apply this theory to suicidal individuals as well?

School districts, until now, have had no systematic way in which to deal with depressed or potentially suicidal students. Now, as we are beginning to recognize the magnitude of this problem, we must ask ourselves how we can best coordinate a community, government, and private effort to stem the tide of youth suicide.

As a cosponsor of H.R. 4650, I believe that this measure is a step in the right direction. The Youth Suicide Prevention Act would create a special $1 million grant program in the Department of Education in fiscal year 1987 and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal years 1988–89, to assist school districts and private nonprofit organizations in establishing suicide prevention programs. I believe that the combination of Government and private sector involvement is essential for obtaining maximum results. Indeed, parents, teachers, school administrators, and other counseling service professionals would be deeply involved in making sure that these "youth-at-risk" never reach the point where they feel they cannot cope with everyday pressures or tragedies.

H.R. 4650 sets out to educate and train school personnel and community leaders in individual and schoolwide strategies for the prevention of teenage suicide. This is one educational program which I am certain you will agree is noncontroversial. Let us then join together and support this legislation which at best might be instrumental in saving the lives of our most precious national resource—our children.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, every 90 minutes an American teenager commits suicide. Last year more than 5,000 young people took their own lives. The tragic enormity of this problem is only partially captured by this appalling figure. As many as 500,000 youths attempt suicide each year, while another million or more contemplate it. During the past 20 years, the suicide rate for young people aged 15 to 24 has tripled.

Three years ago, Mr. Speaker, a wall of silence in Congress was broken when I introduced the first legislation in Congress to deal with teenage suicide. At that time, youth suicide was a topic reluctantly discussed. It was obscured by unspoken taboos. I conducted, in San Francisco, the first public hearings specifically devoted to this tragic topic. When the legislation was introduced, many of my courageous colleagues joined me in cosponsoring the initial bill to focus Federal attention and resources upon this problem.

I am delighted that in this session of Congress my distinguished colleague from New York, [Mr. ACKERMAN], and I have joined forces to continue to press for action on this serious issue by introducing H.R. 4650, the Youth Suicide Prevention Act which is being considered today. Over 50 of our colleagues in the Congress, from both sides of the aisle, have joined us in the effort to address this harrowing problem in supporting H.R. 4650 and my eariler similar bill. This historic legislation will help stem the horrible hemorrhage of youth suicide, and will salvage and repair the lives of many youth in crisis. It is but the first step in reversing an acknowledged tragic trend—but it is an essential first step that can lead to further sustained action to preserve our country's youth.

Despite the magnitude and seriousness of this problem, no one can completely understand the causes of youth suicide. It is impossible to draw a single, simple portrait of the typical young suicide victim. Victims come from all socioeconomic and ethnic groups.

Family problems, loneliness, depression, and desperation appear to be important factors, as do poor communication within the family, a sense of isolation, feelings of rejection, and lack of self-esteem. Many youth lack the skills or opportunity to constructively communicate their unhappiness, anxieties, and frustrations. They find that efforts to vent their feelings or express their fears are either unacceptable to adults, ignored or met by defensiveness. As a consequence they are driven further into isolation, reinforcing the belief that life is hopeless.

Family problems, however, cannot carry the full brunt of responsibility for the epidemic of youth suicide. A broad array of indicators of stress and destabilization in contemporary society, as well as new adolescent rituals associated with old rites of passage from childhood into adulthood, are also significant factors. No single element necessarily brings about suicidal behavior; but, when they occur in combination, they are indicators of possible suicidal behavior.

The Youth Suicide Prevention Act of 1986 will play a significant part in battling this tragedy. The individual school districts, parent-teacher groups, churches, and other local organizations have the principal responsibility for meeting this crisis. These local organizations, however, do not have the resources to undertake the research and program development necessary to identify and exploit effective suicide prevention programs. Our legislation can provide the critical help essential to develop pilot programs and then disseminate information to other groups which can benefit from that knowledge.

Our legislation will provide a series of grants totaling $1 million over the next year to local educational agencies and private nonprofit organizations to establish demonstration youth suicide prevention programs. The funds will be available from the Department of Education's discretionary fund with no additional cost to the taxpayer. This innovative bill will greatly increase national awareness of this crisis among our youth by taking positive action to deal with it.

Mr. Speaker, San Mateo County, which I have the honor to represent, is fortunate to have the San Mateo Suicide Prevention and Crisis Center. Under the direction of my constituent Charlotte Ross, the center has established a model program on suicide prevention and education. The legislation, which the House is considering today, will encourage the development of other such model programs and will assure that information about such successful programs is made available to local education agencies and private nonprofit organizations.

I would like to take this opportunity to extend my thanks to my dear friend and fellow Californian Chairman HAWKINS. His personal interest in this bill has made its passage possible. I would also like to commend my colleagues from New York, [Mr. ACKERMAN], whose leadership was crucial in this effort, and Mr. DIOGUARDI, Republican from White Plains, whose active support demonstrated the bipartisanship that characterizes this problem and which is essential to the successful passage of our legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4650, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE INCORPORATION OF THE VILLAGE OF LINCOLNWOOD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call to the attention of my colleagues that the village of Lincolnwood, located in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois, which I am honored to represent, will be commemorating its 75th year of incorporation during the weekend of July 19 and 20.

It will be my privilege to join with Major Frank J. Chulay of the village of Lincolnwood, the members of Lincolnwood's Diamond Jubilee Committee, public officials and dignitaries, business and community leaders, as well as the citizens of Lincolnwood, in participating in the festivities of this gala celebration.

The village of Lincolnwood was incorporated in 1911, as Tessville, named after one of the early farmers in the region. Tessville officially became the village of Lincolnwood in 1936. The guiding force in the development of Lincolnwood was Henry A. Proesel, who was first elected mayor of Tessville in 1931, and served as mayor until April 1977.

During his 46 years of continuous service, Mayor Proesel transformed the village of Lincolnwood from a small farm community into a thriving and model residential area. In 1933, he planted 10,000 elm trees on all the village parkways, and during the mid-1940's, he established primary school facilities to attract young families into the village as homeowners. Also, he encouraged the development of light industry which benefited the community not only by providing job opportunities, but also by ensuring minimal residential tax rates.

Mayor John C. Porcelli, as mayor from 1977 to 1985, served the people of Lincolnwood conscientiously and with total commitment, ensuring that the village remained an outstanding place to live. Mayor Frank J. Chulay, the current mayor, continues in the proud tradition of providing quality service for Lincolnwood's residents.

Today the village of Lincolnwood has a population of about 12,000 people living in a 2½-square-mile area, just north of and adjacent to the city of Chicago. With about 3,800 homes, the village is one of the most attractive and desirable neighborhoods in the Chicago suburban area in which to live. Boasting a large library and cultural center, six health care facilities, an outstanding elementary school district with a 17-acre campus in the heart of the village, and a village park with a pool and athletic facility, the village of Lincolnwood remains an ideal community in which to live, to work, and to raise a family.

Mr. Speaker, on the 75th anniversary of the incorporation of the village of Lincolnwood, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Mayor Chulay, the village trustees, and the other past and present public officials in the village, who have so diligently worked to achieve the commercial and industrial growth of Lincolnwood, while at the same time remaining committed to the highest standards of residential living. I would like to extend to these officials and to all of the residents of Lincolnwood, my best wishes for future success as their community continues to prosper in the years ahead.

STATUS OF THE GENEVA ARMS CONTROL TALKS: ROUND V

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, consistent with the Foreign Affairs Committee and its Subcommittee on Arms Control's continuing oversight of the Geneva arms control process, I am inserting in the RECORD at this time an updated chart that summarizes the United States and Soviet arms control proposals tabled at Geneva as of June 1986. The chart is based on the best available information from unclassified sources.

As round V of the Geneva talks ended a few weeks ago, it was evident that some movement had been made. It remains to be seen whether such movement will result in steps forward or backward. At any rate, the Soviets seemed to signal some important changes from their previous position. One of the most important of these proposals is in the defense and space area. The Soviets have called for a pledge by the United States and the Soviet Union not to withdraw from the ABM Treaty for 15 years and that work on SDI-related strategic defenses be limited to laboratory research as provided in the ABM Treaty of 1972. In previous rounds, the Soviet Union has held firmly to a ban on all SDI-related research.

While both the United States and the Soviet Union are engaging in an informal moratorium on ASAT testing, there remains much disagreement over how best to implement a permanent formal ban on ASAT weapons.

Previous Soviet proposals in the START area have included INF missiles and aircraft in their proposed ceiling on strategic arms. The Soviet's June 1986 proposal drops their insistence on including these systems in the ceiling on strategic arms. Along with this part of their proposal, the Soviets increased the number of allowed nuclear charges or warheads from 6,000 in past proposals to 8,000, with no more than 4,800 on any leg of the triad—ICBM's, SLBM's, or bombers. The United States proposes 1,250 to 1,450 ICBM and SLBM launchers, with freedom to mix, while the Soviets propose 1,600 ICBM's, SLBM's, and heavy bombers.

In the INF area, the United States has proposed the elimination of long-range INF systems in Europe over a period of 3 years, that is, zero U.S. Pershing 2's and GLCM's and zero Soviet SS–20's. The Soviets have also proposed the elimination of U.S. Pershing 2's and GLCM's and the elimination of SS–20's to the west of the 80 degree longitude. As part of the Soviet proposal, they would not increase their SS–20s in Asia and any reductions in SS–20's would be contingent on a reduction of the threat posed by U.S. nuclear systems on ships and aircraft in Asia. Great Britain and France would also have to pledge not to build up their nuclear arsenals under the Soviet proposal. The U.S. proposal places no constraints on British and French INF systems. The Soviets have expressed willingness to agree to appropriate verification measures, including on-site inspection in the INF area.

As is clear, "something" has transpired in Geneva. Hopefully, this will lead to real and lasting as opposed to illusory and transient progress in arms control as both parties prepare for the sixth round that is scheduled to begin this September.

In an effort to enhance the prospects of success in Geneva, the House last month passed a bipartisan measure, House Concurrent Resolution 350, by a vote of 256 to 145, which urged the President to honor the SALT agreements. U.S. national security interests are enhanced by the SALT agreements which contain important constraints on Soviet nuclear force developments. House Concurrent Resolution 350 also includes language supporting our negotiators in Geneva in their efforts to reduce the nuclear arsenals of the superpowers below SALT II levels. As we preserve the main controls and constraints of the SALT agreements, it is my hope that important progress can be made in arms control in the upcoming round of talks and at any future summit meetings between President Reagan and Soviet leader Gorbachev.

I. STATUS OF GENEVA NEGOTIATIONS, JUNE 1986—STRATEGIC

Category	United States proposal [1]	Soviet proposal [2]
Linkage	Agreement on strategic arms should not be dependent on a resolution on space and strategic defense issues.	Strategic arms reductions are linked to agreement on space and defensive weapons.
Delivery vehicles:
Strategic missile launchers	1,250–1,450 ICBM and SLBM launchers, with freedom to mix	1,600 ICBM's, SLBM's, and heavy bombers,. The June 1986 proposal drops the earlier Soviet insistence that United States INF missiles and aircraft be included in the ceiling on strategic arms. The proposal reportedly does, however, call for a freeze on these systems.
Strategic bombers	350 United States: B–52, B–1, Stealth Soviet: Bison, Bear, Blackjack, Backfire
Weapons:
Strategic missile RV's	4,500 with no more than 3,000 on ICBM's	8,000 "nuclear charges"—i.e., warheads, gravity bombs, SRAM's, cruise missiles—on strategic delivery vehicles—with no more than 4,800 on any leg of the triad (ICBM, SLBMs, or bombers).
Weapons other than ALCM's on strategic bomber	Not limited
ALCM's	1,500—Ceiling contingent on Soviet acceptance of RV and throw-weight limits	Previous proposal called for a ban on all long-range cruise missiles (those with a range greater than 600 km). Whether the ban on ALCM's has been retained in the new proposal has not been made public.
SLCM's	Not limited	Long-range SLCM's to be included in 8,000 total. Reportedly to be permitted on submarines, but not on surface ships.
Throwweight	6 million lbs.	Not addressed in previous proposal, and as yet, there has been no indication that throwweight is mentioned in the new proposal.
New systems	United States: Ban on Midgetman Soviet: Ban on SS–24, SS–25, and SS–18 follow-on Prohibitions result from ban on mobile missiles and new or modernized heavy missiles	Previous proposal called for a ban on new types of strategic delivery systems, with "new type" reportedly intended to apply to systems not flight tested as of an unspecified date. Press reports have not indicated whether this ban is retained in the new proposal.

[1] The U.S. proposal is discussed in Nitze, Paul H. Negotiations on Nuclear and Space Arms. Remarks Before a Symposium at the Department of State's Foreign Service Institute on March 13, 1986. Department of State Bulletin, v. 86, May 1986, p. 50–53.

[2] The latest Soviet offer was reportedly put on the table on June 11, 1986. In a speech before the CPSU Central Committee on June 16, General Secretary Gorbachev acknowledged the new proposal, and provided sketchy information that confirmed some of the reports that had appeared in the Western press. Details on the June 1986 Soviet proposal are scant. The aspects of the proposal that have been made public are described in Gordon, Michael. U.S. Arms Officials Finding Problems in Offer by Soviet. New York Times, June 17, 1986, p. A/, A6.

II. STATUS OF GENEVA NEGOTIATIONS—INF

Category	United States proposal [1]	Soviet proposal [2]
Eurpope:
United States and Soviet long-range INF (LRINF)	United States: 0 P–2's; 0 GLCM's Soviet: 0 SS–20's Elimination phased over 3 years, with reduction to 140 launchers in the first year, to 70 in the second, and to 0 in the third. Missiles and launchers withdrawn would be destroyed. During the reduction period, the United States would reserve the right to possess a number of LRINF systems equal to the Soviet LRINF total in Europe and Asia. The excess over allowed deployment's in Europe would be retained in the continental United States.	United States: 0 P–2's; 0 GLCM's Soviet: 0 SS–20's to the west of 80° longitude United States undertakes not to transfer medium-range or strategic missiles to other countries. Missiles withdrawn would be destroyed.
British and French INF systems	No constraints	Great Britain and France pledge not to build up their nuclear arsenals.
Shorter-range INF missiles	Ceiling on SRINF, either at current Soviet levels, or at levels both sides had on January 1, 1982.	No limit formally proposed, but stated willingness to withdraw SRINF if United States P–2's and GLCM's are eliminated.
Asia: LRINF missile launchers	0 SS–20's. Reductions phased over 3 years, in proportion to SS–20 reductions in Europe	SS–20's in Asia would not be increased. Reductions said to be contingent on reduction of the threat posed by United States nuclear systems on ships and aircraft in Asia.
Verification	Count each side's missiles to set totals from which reductions would be made; designate deployment areas; establish procedures for monitoring production and destruction, possibly involving some on-site inspection.	Expressed willingness to agree to appropriate verification measures, including on-site inspection.

[1] The United States proposal described here was advanced in February 1986, in response to the Soviet proposal of January 15. Ambassador Paul Nitze presented an outline of the U.S. proposal in Negotiations on Nuclear and Space Arms, Remarks Before a Symposium at the Department of State's Foreign Service Institute on March 13, 1986, Department of State Bulletin, v. 86, May 1986, p. 50–53. In addition to the proposals to eliminate LRINF missiles, an earlier U.S. offer to freeze INF launchers at 140 reportedly remains on the table in Geneva. See, Gordon, Michael, Arms Talks Adjourn With No Gains, New York Times, March 6, 1986, p. A3. The U.S. proposal on INF verification is reported in Oberdorfer, Don and Walter Pincus, U.S. Offers Nuclear Inspection Plan, Washington Post, March 15, 1986, p. A1, A18.

[2] The Soviet proposal to eliminate LRINF in Europe, first presented by Gorbachev on January 15, 1986, was formalized in a draft treaty introduced in Geneva on May 15. III. STATUS OF GENEVA NEGOTIATIONS—SPACE AND DEFENSE

Category	United States position [1]	Soviet position [2]
Strategic defenses	Permit research on strategic defenses within ABM Treaty constraints; seek "a Soviet commitment to explore * * * how a cooperative transition could be accomplished, should new defensive technologies prove feasible".	Pledge not to withdraw from the ABM treaty for at least 15 years; limit work on SDI-type strategic defenses to laboratory research, "that is, the threshold which the United States has already approached."
Antisatellite weapons (ASAT's)	An ASAT agreement is not in U.S. national security interests at this time	United States should join the ASAT testing moratorium that the Soviet Union is currently observing.

III. STATUS OF GENEVA NEGOTIATIONS—SPACE AND DEFENSE—Continued

Category	United States position [1]	Soviet position [2]
Verification	"Open laboratories" arrangement for exchanged briefings on each other's strategic defense programs, and for reciprocal visits to laboratories where the research is being conducted.	Expresed willingness to agree to necessary verification measures.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 2095. An act to reauthorize the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 and the Navajo Community College Act; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

S. 2147. An act to extend the authorization for not-for-profit organizations operated in the interest of handicapped and blind individuals to receive procurement contracts under the Small Business Act; to the Committee on Small Business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. ANNUNZIO, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker pro tempore:

H.R. 237. An act to amend the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act to provide that any attorney who collects debts on behalf of a client shall be subject to the provisions of such Act;

H.R. 4420. An act to amend title 10, United States Code, to revise the retirement system for new members of the uniformed services, and for other purposes;

H.R. 4515. An act making urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes;

H.R. 4801. An act to amend section 994 of title 28, United States Code, to clarify certain duties of the United States Sentencing Commission;

H.R. 5036. An act to make technical corrections to the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965;

H.J. Res. 429. Joint resolution to designate July 2, 1986, as "National Literacy Day"; and

H.J. Res. 664. Joint resolution to designate July 3, 1986, as "Let Freedom Ring Day," and to request the President to issue a proclamation encouraging the people of the United States to ring bells on such day immediately following the relighting of the torch of the Statue of Liberty.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1625. An act to permit the use and leasing of certain public lands in Nevada by the University of Nevada.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ANNUNZIO, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on the following day present to the President, for his approval, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On July 1, 1986:

H.J. Res. 429. Joint resolution to designate July 2, 1986, as "National Literacy Day";

H.J. Res. 664. Joint resolution to designate July 3, 1986, as "Let Freedom Ring Day", and to request the President to issue a proclamation encouraging the people of the United States to ring bells on such day immediately following the relighting of the torch of the Statue of Liberty;

H.R. 237. An act to amend the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act to provide that any attorney who collects debts on behalf of a client shall be subject to the provisions of such act;

H.R. 4420. An act to amend title 10, United States Code, to revise the retirement system for new members of the uniformed services, and for other purposes;

H.R. 4515. An act making urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes;

H.R. 4801. An act to amend section 994 of title 28, United States Code, to clarify certain duties of the U.S. Sentencing Commission;

H.R. 4841. An act to amend the Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act with respect to State allotments under the act; and

H.R. 5036. An act to make technical corrections to the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p.m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 15, 1986, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

3802. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a review of the deferral of budget authority affecting the Farmers Home Administration submitted by the President in his fourth special message on March 12, 1986, pursuant to 2 U.S.C. (H. Doc. No. 99-243); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

71-059 O-87-50 (Pt. 11)

3803. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the status of budget authority that was proposed for rescission by the President in his sixth special message for fiscal year 1986 dated April 25, 1986, pursuant to 2 U.S.C. 685 (H. Doc. No. 99-240); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3804. A letter from the Executive Associate Director, Office of Management and Budget, transmitting notification that appropriations to the Department of Justice have been reapportioned on a basis that indicates the necessity for supplemental estimates of appropriations, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 1515(b)(2); to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 4510

By Mr. ENGLISH:

—Page 9, after line 2, add the following new section:

SEC. 12. LIMITATION ON ASSISTANCE WHICH WILL ADVERSELY AFFECT AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION IN THE UNITED STATES.

Section 2(b) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 (12 U.S.C. 635) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(11) LIMITATION ON ASSISTANCE WHICH WOULD ADVERSELY AFFECT AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION IN THE UNITED STATES.—The Bank may make no loan, loan guarantee commitment, or other extension of credit if such loan, loan guarantee commitment, or other extension of credit will directly assist the production or export of any agricultural product which the Secretary of Agriculture has determined to be in surplus in the United States.".

By Mr. RAHALL:

—Page 9, after line 2, add the following new section:

SEC. 12. LIMITATION ON ASSISTANCE WHICH WILL ADVERSELY AFFECT THE UNITED STATES ECONOMY.

Section 2(b) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 (12 U.S.C. 635) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(11) LIMITATION ON ASSISTANCE WHICH WOULD ADVERSELY AFFECT THE DOMESTIC ECONOMY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The Bank may extend no direct credit or financial guarantee in support of any export to any foreign entity if—

"(i) the export will be used or is intended for use in the production or manufacture of any commodity, mineral, material, or product which is produced or manufactured in substantial quantities in the United States; and

"(ii) the production or manufacture of such commodity, mineral, material, or product by such foreign entity will result in—

"(I) the importation of more than an inconsequential quantity of such commodity, mineral, material, or product into the United States; and

"(II) a net domestic increase in unemployment in the United States over the period during which any portion of the amount of such credit or guarantee is outstanding.

"(B) EXCEPTIONS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply with respect to any extension of credit or a financial guarantee which the Bank determines is—

"(i) in the strategic interest of the United States; or

"(ii) necessary to counter any unfair trade practice or unfair and predacious export financing practice of a foreign country.".

SENATE—Monday, July 14, 1986

The Senate met at 12 noon and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Just at this moment, David Joy, of the Photography Department, is undergoing complicated surgery. Father in Heaven, we commend him now to Your loving care.

God of all comfort, Father of us all, the Senate convenes today, painfully aware of the absence of one of its respected Members. We thank you for Senator JOHN EAST—for his dedicated service to God and country. We thank You for his brilliant mind—his profound understanding of constitutional government—his sense of history. We thank You for his unfailing ability to see issues in their larger context, in the perspective of permanent values, in the light of tested tradition, and in the long view ahead. We thank You for his courage and perseverance under great personal difficulty—his gentleness—his response to duty and his commitment to the trust which sent him to the Senate. We join in loving concern and prayer for Mrs. East, the family, the faithful staff who served him so well, and hosts of admiring, sorrowing friends. Gracious, compassionate Father, give to them the peace which only You can give at this time of pain and loss.

And, Father in Heaven, as Senator JAMES BROYHILL is sworn in, we pray for him a special measure of Your wisdom and Your guidance and Your blessing upon him as well as his family and his staff.

In the name of Him who Senator EAST trusted for life eternal. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able and distinguished majority leader, Senator ROBERT DOLE, is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate under the standing orders the leaders have 10 minutes each, but not to come out of the time of the majority leader, I now yield to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, Senator HELMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader.

THE DEATH OF JOHN P. EAST, U.S. SENATOR FROM NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, it is my sad duty to report formally to the Senate that our distinguished colleague from North Carolina [Mr. EAST] died on June 29 at his home in Greenville, NC.

However, Mr. President, it is far more than a formality for me to try to convey the sadness that I feel. You see, JOHN EAST was far more than a colleague. He was a friend to every Member of the Senate, a great American who was admired across the Nation as a man of enormous courage, extraordinary dedication, and keen intellect.

At a time like this, one remembers personal vignettes. How many times have we seen Senator EAST roll his wheelchair into the Senate Chamber, at all hours of the day and night, to cast his votes? And he came always with a smile on his face—when, frankly, other Senators were grousing about all-night sessions.

Mr. President, the distinguished majority leader [Mr. DOLE] put it well a couple of weeks before Senator EAST's death. Senator DOLE, speaking to an audience in Charlotte, paid tribute to Senator EAST, describing Senator EAST as "One of the most remarkable men I've ever known. I wonder," Senator DOLE said, "how many of us ever stop to think what a struggle it is for Senator EAST just to be there. The rest of us walk into the Senate Chamber; JOHN EAST has to come in a wheelchair."

So in a very real way, Mr. President, Senator JOHN P. EAST was a profile in courage. The thought occurred to me, incidentally, that the words of praise from Senator DOLE had a special meaning, because BOB DOLE is himself another profile in courage. Badly injured in battle while serving his country overseas, Senator DOLE has never once complained about the infirmity that would have devastated other men.

And so it was with Senator EAST. He never complained. And although, as Senator DOLE said, it was a struggle for Senator EAST to comply with the rigorous schedule of a U.S. Senator, you could always count on JOHN EAST to be there when needed, and on time.

Mr. President, I shall not consume the Senate's time with a lengthy review of JOHN EAST, the man, the Senator. But there are little things which will linger forever in my mind. For example, on the last night before the Senate recessed for the Independence Day holiday, JOHN EAST entered this Chamber from that door. He cast his final vote from his customary position just to the right of the Presiding Officer.

A new group of Senate pages had arrived just a few days earlier. JOHN pointed to those fine young people, and said to me: "JESSE, have you noticed? Every time a new group of young people shows up, I decide that they couldn't be any better. But somehow they are." Then we discussed how encouraging it is to observe the character and wholesomeness of the majority of today's young people.

That is the point, Mr. President, JOHN EAST helped build the character of thousands of young people. As a teacher, he was superb. He caused students to think about America, and the greatness of this blessed land. He spoke of principles that deserve to survive. He made sure that the young people enrolled in his classes realized the uniqueness of America, and that that uniqueness is no happenstance. He caused young people to understand that freedom is both precious and fragile—and that it can be lost through apathy and indifference.

In short, this scholar-teacher-statesman loved America, and he conveyed that love to all who knew him.

Mr. President, I have a selection of news accounts, editorials and commentaries published and broadcast in the aftermath of the death of Senator EAST. I feel that these should be made a part of the permanent RECORD of the Senate. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that these be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. HELMS. And as I conclude, Mr. President, I would express my appreciation, and that of Senator EAST's family, for the countless expressions of love and sympathy that poured into North Carolina during the past 2 weeks. And in particular, I am grateful—as are Mrs. East and her daughters—for the fact that so many of our colleagues and their wives went to Greenville for the memorial services on July 1.

At those services, conducted by Senator EAST's pastor, Rev. J. Malloy Owen, the essence of JOHN's life was described in a most notable way.

Mr. President, I obtained a transcript of the remarks by the Reverend Mr. Owen, and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD at this point.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR SENATOR JOHN P. EAST—REV. J. MALLOY OWEN III, MINISTER

I am the resurrection, the truth, and the life. He who believes in me, though he die, yet shall he live. The eternal God is your dwelling place, and underneath are the everlasting arms. The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the stronghold of my life; of whom shall I be afraid? Blessed be the Lord! for He has heard the voice of my supplications. The Lord is my strength and my shield; in Him my heart trusts. For we know that if this earthly tent we live in is destroyed, we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens.

Let us pray: O God, may we accept today your grace and peace through our Lord, Jesus Christ. May we remember with joy and gratitude a man of conviction, strength, and courage whom we sent from this campus to help lead our nation and our world. We praise you today for such a man, through Jesus Christ, Our Lord. Amen.

Now hear the word of God as we find it in the 121st Psalm: "I lift up mine eyes to the hills. From whence does my help come? My help comes from the Lord who made Heaven and earth. He will not let your foot be moved. He who keeps you will not slumber. Behold, He who keeps Israel will neither slumber nor sleep. The Lord is your keeper. The Lord is your shade on your right hand. The sun shall not smite you by day nor the moon by night. The Lord will keep you from all evil. The Lord will keep your going out and your coming in from this time forth and forevermore."

Among the most obvious facts in the life of John East was his commitment to the Christian faith and to our heritage as Americans. Central to that faith, important to that heritage, is the Affirmation of Faith which comes to us from the Second Century and is shared by so many of the Christians of the world and of our nation. It is called the Apostles' Creed.

After we have stood and said it together, we will turn to Hymn No. 305, "Onward, Christian Soldiers." We will sing the first stanza only. Let us stand now and affirm the faith.

In what do you believe? I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord: who was conceived by the Holy Spirit, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, died, and buried; the third day He rose from the dead; He ascended into Heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence He shall come to judge the quick and the dead. I believe in the Holy Spirit, the holy Catholic Church, the communion of saints, the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting. Amen.

John's Bible was so marked up. His family shared this with me as we planned this service. The markings indicate that he read his Bible. He studied it. He knew it. And the beliefs to which he so irrevocably committed were based in this Book. Two verses come to mind immediately. One has a picture in it that he used in a recent speech. It is a picture of leaven from I Corinthians 5:6. "A little leavens the whole lump." John knew that it didn't take many people to influence a nation. It just took some people who knew what they believed, were thoroughly convinced that they were right, and were willing to pay the price of being different. John East was willing to pay the price, and he led. And before too many years, people followed. And then, of course, the last chapter of I Corinthians includes this beautiful statement, "Be on your guard; stand firm in the faith; be men of courage; be strong; do everything in love."

John was a man of strength and courage. He had to discipline himself, especially in view of his handicap. His accomplishments are utterly amazing. How often I have heard people say, "Most of us would have crawled into a corner and watched television for the rest of our lives." But not John East. He knew what he believed. And if you knew him, you knew where he stood. He was tolerant of others, always willing to listen attentively to them as they presented their positions, really listening, and expecting from them like courtesy. He loved his family, and he is loved by his family.

Last night at the Greenville Rotary Club we sang it again as we did here last Sunday, "Who more than self their country loved." And I thought of John East. Although we are stunned and shocked at this tragedy, let us go from this place praising God for this man of strong convictions and amazing courage. Dr. East was an intelligent, articulate person who was engaged in civil and thoughtful debate on a myriad of issues. America is richer for having had him, and the lives of his thousands of former students are forever enriched from what he taught them. Who will take up the torch of this brave man?

Let us pray: O God, the strength of your saints and the one who redeems the souls of your servants, we call to remembrance your loving kindness and your tender mercies to this your servant, John. For all your goodness that did not withhold his portion in the joys of this earthly life and for your guiding hand along the way of his pilgrimage, we give you thanks and praise. Especially we bless you for your grace that kindled in his heart the love of your dear Name and of your precious Word that enabled him to fight the good fight. We praise you for giving John wisdom and knowledge, strength of character. For the contribution he made to the lives of his students and to the life of our country and our world, we are forever grateful. We praise you for this strong but gracious man as we remember his use of this prayer of Francis of Assisi:

Lord, make me an instrument of Thy peace.
Where there is hatred, let me show love;
Where there is injury, pardon;
Where there is doubt, faith;
Where there is despair, hope;
Where there is darkness, light;
Where there is sadness, joy.
O Divine Master, grant that I may not so much seek to be consoled, as to console;
Not so much to be understood as to understand;
Not so much to be loved as to love:
For it is in giving that we receive;
It is in pardoning that we are pardoned;
It is in dying that we awaken to eternal life.

Father, we would add only this, the prayer that our Lord Jesus taught us to pray when He taught us to say, "Our Father which art in Heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the Kingdom, the Power, and the Glory forever. Amen."

Please stand for the benediction. And now the God of peace who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ, Our Lord, to whom be glory now and forever. Amen.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, needless to say, Dorothy and I extend our deepest loving sympathy to the lady whom we know as "Sis" East, and her two daughters, Martha and Kathryn, and other members of the family.

And now, Mr. President, as I yield the floor, I renew my unanimous consent request concerning the various editorials and articles mentioned earlier.

The articles follow:

SENATOR EAST LAUDED BY SORROWFUL COLLEAGUES

(By Todd Cohen and David Perkins)

Sen. Jesse A. Helms said Sunday that Sen. John P. East was "a man of good cheer, but I expect that he will be most remembered for his astonishing intellect. He was a very wise man. He understood this country as few people do in terms of its principles and its fundamentals. And he did not hesitate once defending those principles."

Helms, East's political mentor, was one of many North Carolina politicians who reacted with shock and with praise for East, who committed suicide in his Greenville home.

Helms, whose political organization helped lift East from his job as an East Carolina University professor to the U.S. Senate in 1980, said he would remember East "because of the personal affection that I had for him. No senator ever had a finer colleague than he."

Helms said he had notified President Reagan, who was in California, at 10:30 a.m. of East's death.

"The president was stunned and saddened," Helms said at a Raleigh news conference. "He greatly admired Senator East."

Republican Gov. James C. Martin said in a written statement that East's death was "a tragic loss for North Carolina and the people he represented so valiantly and so well. Our hearts go out to Mrs. East and their family as we uphold them in our prayers."

Martin said he had directed that flags on all state property be flown at half staff. His aides said the tribute would continue for an indefinite period.

Rep. James T. Broyhill, the Republican Senate nominee expected by some political observers to be appointed by Martin to fill East's unexpired term, said he was "shocked and grieved at the news of Senator John East's death. He was my friend and colleague, and I am just shocked at this news."

Broyhill characterized East as "a patriot and a leader for North Carolina and our country—a man of keen intellect and courageous stature. My heartfelt prayers go to his wife, Sis, and his daughters, Marty and Chip, and their families."

Former Gov. Terry Sanford, the Democratic nominee for East's seat, said he was "sure that all North Carolinians are deeply distressed by this tremendous personal tragedy. Mrs. Sanford and I extend our sincerest sympathies to Mrs. East and their family."

In 1980, East upset incumbent Sen. Robert B. Morgan after a bitter race in which East's campaign was directed by the National Congressional Club, Helms' political organization.

Morgan, now director of the State Bureau of Investigation, said Sunday by telephone from his home in Lillington that he was "saddened at the news of his death. And I'm awfully sorry. His family, his wife and his children certainly have my condolence and my prayers."

U.S. Rep. Walter B. Jones, a Democrat from Farmville who defeated East in a special and regular Congressional race in 1966, said East had been a tough adversary.

"We remained good friends, and those two races increased my admiration for him as a high-class gentleman," Jones said. "I think his strength was his personal appeal and the fact that he's very articulate. He had a certain amount of charisma that was hard to deal with. He did better in the special election (for the vacated seat of Herbert C. Bonner) than any Republican had in many years, carrying two of the 14 counties at that time."

Secretary of State Thad Eure, a Democrat who staved off a challenge by East in 1968, described East as "a very smart man. he was well-educated. And he was very loyal to his party."

Former Gov. Dan K. Moore said East "was a very fine, honorable Christian gentleman. . . . He was sincere in every action that he took."

Helms, who spoke at length about East, described him as "a scholar, a teacher, a statesman. And he touched thousands of lives constantly, dating back to his days as a teacher . . ., particularly the young people. He touched them with his never-failing willingness to explain and defend the principles of America."

Thomas F. Eamon, an associate professor of political science at East Carolina University, where East taught before going to the Senate, remembered East as "an excellent classroom teacher, always very popular with students, a very thought-provoking individual. As a colleague I found him to be a person with a great sense of humor and easy to talk with."

Eamon, a Democrat who knew East at ECU for about eight years, recalled that, "always in personal political conversation with him, he would be really objective."

Eamon said he had not seen East much in recent years. He said that last year he had sent a letter to East in Washington "and got back an extremely nice, hand-written letter from him . . . saying that things had been difficult and he appreciated the thought."

East last year suffered from a glandular condition affecting his thyroid.

William C. Friday, former president of the University of North Carolina System, said East always had attended quickly to university matters that involved the federal government.

East played a role in discussions with former Secretary of Education Terrell Bell that led eventually to the resolution of the university's desegregation lawsuit with the Department of Education, Friday said.

"Every time that I called upon him for assistance, he was helpful to us," Friday said.

Lt. Gov. Robert B. Jordan III, the state's highest-ranking Democrat, said East "was a very intelligent person who voted his convictions. He and I didn't always agree. He was very dedicated to continuing and completing his term even though his health was working against him. I regret very deeply that this has happened."

State Senate Republican Leader William W. Redman Jr. of Iradell County said East had been "a friend of mine, a man I had a great deal of respect for. He was probably the most intelligent man I knew in the United States Senate. I think it's a great loss to this nation."

A STEADFAST CONSERVATIVE

(By Elizabeth Leland)

Few North Carolinians knew John East when he announced in January 1980 that he wanted to be their U.S. senator.

One newspaper editor described him as "the obscure professor at a little-known university."

But with sophisticated direct-mail money-raising and forceful campaign rhetoric, East won an upset in November 1980 over incumbent Sen. Robert Morgan, D-N.C. He entered the Senate in a wheelchair and with a determined devotion to conservative ideals.

East, 55, worked mostly in the shadow of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., his friend and soul mate. He served only one term, announcing through aides last September that he was too ill to seek reelection.

In an interview after he made his decision, East said he hoped to be remembered as "an intelligent, articulate person who was engaged in what I thought was civil and thoughtful debate on a myriad of issues."

He said he disagreed with critics who had labeled him a Helms clone, but acknowledged they agreed on most issues. "I think if I had been in a position to be here longer, that different identities would certainly have emerged," East said.

STAUNCH CONSERVATISM

As senator, East quickly earned the reputation as one of the Senate's most conservative members. Just hours after Ronald Reagan took the oath for his first term as president, East voted against confirming Caspar Weinberger as defense secretary. The only other senator who voted against Weinberger was Helms. They said he wasn't hawkish enough for the job.

The spotlight focused on East in April 1981, when he sponsored a bill to overturn the Supreme Court decision that struck down anti-aboriton laws and held controversial hearings on when life begins. But for the most part, he kept a much lower profile than Helms. In his first 238 votes—during his first year in the Senate—East sided with Helms on all but 16.

In 1985, his health became a problem in his Senate work. He was hospitalized in February 1985 for a urinary tract blockage and in April 1985 for hypothyroidism. He missed much of the Senate's work that year, and rumors abounded that he didn't like the job and wouldn't seek reelection.

East was a private, reserved man. Some of his staff didn't know he had entered the hospital for a second time until reporters told them.

EARLY YEARS.

Born in Springfield, Ill., East was a scholar and a football player. He played lineman at University High School in Normal, Ill. Burton O'Connor, athletic director at the time, remembers East as an average player and one of the school's "most distinguished graduates."

He graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Earlham College in Richmond, Ind., in 1953 and came to North Carolina that year as Marine lieutenant at Camp Lejeune near Jacksonville. Within 30 days of his discharge in 1955, he contracted polio, and his leg muscles were paralyzed. He used crutches and a wheelchair.

Despite that, East was not outspoken on behalf of disabled people. He said his life served as an example for them.

"I, of all people, have been proving the opportunities for disabled people in American society," he once said. "So I find myself in the awkward position of sometimes appearing to be at odds with people that supposedly I should have the most profound affinity with."

East earned a law degree in 1959 from the University of Illinois and practiced law. A year later, he enrolled in the University of Florida, where he received his master's degree in political science in 1962 and a doctorate two years later.

ACADEMICS, POLITICS

He returned to North Carolina to teach at East Carolina University in Greenville. He once described himself as "one of those rare creatures in academe, a conservative political science professor." His students described him as brilliant.

In 1966, East tried his hand at politics. He filed as a GOP candidate in a special February election against Democrat Walter Jones in the 1st Congressional District, for the vacant seat of the late Rep. Herbert Bonner. Of the 142,700 registered voters in the sprawling coastal district, 138,000 were Democrats and 4,700 Republican.

"It will be a long, tough, fight . . . but it will be worth the effort," East, then 34, said of the race. East, described as "a zestful campaigner on crutches or in a wheelchair," campaigned against the politics of then-President Lyndon Johnson. His slogan was "Help Defeat LBJ, Vote The John East Way."

East won a surprising 40% of the vote and impressed political observers.

He decided to challenge Jones again in November. He lost again.

ROAD TO SENATE

In February 1968, East picked another battle. He challenged Thad Eure, N.C. secretary of state since 1936. East lost but again surprised observers with 44% of the vote.

For the next 12 years, he stuck with party politics. In 1976, as a delegate to the national GOP convention, East drafted platform planks for the party's conservative wing: unequivocal opposition to abortion, a constitutional amendment to prohibit busing and criticism of détente with the Soviet Union. Some of his proposals went farther than Ronald Reagan wanted.

By 1979, East had decided to run again for office. He said the state needed a "stronger, clearer voice" in the Senate and hinted he would challenge Morgan. On Jan. 26, 1980, he announced he would.

Hardly anyone knew him beyond Greenville and the inner circle of the Republican Party, and he was uncertain how being in a wheelchair would affect compaigning and his public perception.

CONGRESSIONAL CLUB

But East was handpicked by Helms, and Helm's National Congressional Club ran East's campaign and financed television ads that made East a household name. The campaign was bitter.

East's commercials tied Morgan, once ranked among the most conservative Democratic senators, with such liberals as Sens.

Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and George McGovern, D-S.D.

The commercials faulted Morgan for voting to cut funds for the B1 bomber and for approving the Panama Canal treaties.

The strategy irked Morgan supporters, but it worked.

East won by 10,411 votes, out of about 1.78 million cast.

1,000 ATTEND MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR JOHN EAST

GREENVILLE.—U.S. Sen. John P. East was remembered yesterday as a forceful figure with strong convictions as his family, friends and colleagues gathered at a memorial service in his hometown church.

A standing-room crowd of about 1,000 packed into the sanctuary of Jarvis Memorial Methodist Church in downtown Greenville to pay their last respects to East, who committed suicide in the garage of his home here early Sunday morning.

The Rev. J. Malloy Owen III, noting that East, a victim of polio, was paralyzed in his legs and had other severe health problems, told the crowd: "He had to discipline himself. Especially in view of his handicaps, his accomplishments were absolutely amazing. Most of us would have curled into a corner and watched television for the rest of our lives."

In the only reference to East's suicide, Owen said, "Although we are stunned and shocked at this tragedy, let us go from this place praising God for this man of strong convictions and amazing courage."

Sen. Jesse A. Helms, East's political mentor and close friend, sat on the front pew of the church with Gov. James G. Martin, their wives and members of East's family. Among the mourners were Barbara Bush, the wife of the vice president; Elizabeth Dole, the U.S. secretary of transportation; and at least eight members of the U.S. Senate.

Also present were the Rev. Jerry Falwell and officials of East Carolina University, where East had agreed to resume teaching political science when his Senate term expired in January.

After the 2 p.m. service, which lasted about 20 minutes, East's body was cremated in accordance with his family's wishes. The senator was 55 years old.

A spokesman for the funeral home handling the arrangements said the family requested no other private memorials or services.

Owen, the pastor of the church, repeatedly evoked East's image as a serious—almost scholarly—public servant who was willing to match his strongly held conservative principles against often long odds.

"John knew that it didn't take many people to influence a nation," Owen said. "It just took some who knew what they believed and were thoroughly convinced that they were right, and were willing to pay the price and be different."

During the service, Owen read verses from I Corinthians that East sometimes cited in his speeches and public statements. At the request of East's family, he concluded the service with the Prayer of St. Francis of Assisi.

Afterward, many of the mourners waited patiently to offer condolences to members of the immediate family. East's widow, Priscilla, better known as "Sis," dabbed at her face with a tissue but appeared generally composed as she greeted the mourners, often with warm hugs. Mrs. East was flanked by the couple's two adult daughters, Kathryn East of Greenville, and Martha Vainwright of Maryland, and East's son-in-law.

Falwell, who has known East since his election to the Senate in 1980, said he talked with Mrs. East by telephone yesterday.

"I think she's very strong," Fawell said. "She's a real trouper, having stood by him all these years. . . . She's a good lady, and I'm sure God will sustain her."

Virginia "Lou" May, the manager of East's two-person constituent services office in Winston-Salem, said her home phone and office phone has been ringing constantly with callers offering condolences.

Mrs. May said she talked with East by telephone on Thursday and last saw him on June 4, when she picked him up at the Regional Airport for a rally featuring President Reagan on behalf of U.S. Rep. James T. Broyhill, the Republican nominee to succeed East.

"He looked better than he looked in 1980," Mrs. May recalled.

"His spirits were real high, and he gave Congressman Broyhill about the best endorsement he could give."

Richard Viguerie, who operates a direct mail firm in Falls Church, Va., and is one of the most prominent behind-the-scenes activists in the New Right political movement, said that East's death leaves a political and personal void for him.

"Senator East's loss is a major loss," Viguerie said. "There's no kidding ourselves—he was a key leader, one of our most important elected officials. He represented a new breed of conservative who was dedicated to making change."

JOHN P. EAST

Tenacious describes well the attitude John P. East exhibited in facing adversity. He fought the odds and won. He achieved a notable academic and political record in spite of polio, which left him confined to a wheelchair. He survived defeats as a conservative Republican before his election to the U.S. Senate.

East seemed undaunted by the prospect of leaving the Senate at the end of his first term. He contemplated a return to the classroom at East Carolina University as a political science professor. He was reading proofs for a book he expected to publish. He appeared prepared to meet battles against ill health or other obstacles with the tenacity he had shown in the past.

His death at the age of 55 would be a shock under any circumstances. His apparent choice to end his life adds a sorrowful note to the culmination of his public career, and makes the loss to family and friends doubly saddening. Such a tragedy can be experienced, but not adequately explained.

Close associates obviously were as baffled as the general public. Perhaps that simply denoted the private nature of the man. East never gave the impression of a typical politician, eager for the spotlight's glare.

His approach was more apt to be intellectual, and his positions defined by ideology rather than situations. He may have struggled alone with doubts and depression, but he made no public show of it, nor did he ask for sympathy.

From President Reagan to Gov. James G. Martin, leaders expressed shock and sorrow. East was lauded as a dedicated public servant and loyal friend. The reaction illustrated the personal integrity and tenacity East brought to his public duties.

He had to call on courage early in life. An Illinois native, he was a Marine lieutenant at Camp Lejeune when he was stricken by polio at the age of 24. He earned a law degree from the University of Illinois, and a Ph.D. in political science from the University of Florida. As a young professor at East Carolina, he ran on the Republican ticket against Democrat Walter Jones in the 1st Congressional District in 1965. The loss didn't deter him from running again, and losing, the next year. He remained active in GOP politics and defeated Democrat Robert B. Morgan, the incumbent, for the U.S. Senate in 1980.

East's record was too brief to allow substantial achievement. He did the best he could in the circumstances under which he served. It would be unfair to say less or more. In one term, he had little opportunity to really distinguish himself. Poor health further inhibited him. By choice or constraint, he never moved far beyond the shadow of Sen. Jesse A. Helms, his mentor and model. Detractors called him merely Helms' echo in the Senate. There's no doubt he wouldn't have been elected without the money and campaign direction of the Congressional Club, the organization closely tied to the senior senator. In stepping aside, he endorsed the club's choice as his successor.

The campaign opened by East's decision not to run could be further influenced by his death. The appointment to fill out his term will be up to Gov. Martin. If the choice, as seems probable, is Rep. James T. Broyhill, the GOP nominee, that could bestow an advantage in the general election. The governor, appropriately enough, turned a deaf ear to the speculation for the time being. He praised East and ordered state flags flown at half-mast in his honor.

Whatever reasons figured in East's fateful last decision lack of courage was not among them. His death is a tragic loss that must be accepted, but which cannot be adequately explained.

[From the Durham Morning Herald, July 1, 1986]

SENATOR JOHN EAST: BRAVE AND LIKEABLE

One of the unfortunate aspects of Sen. John East's life was that he rarely moved beyond the shadow of Sen. Jesse Helms and their unbending conservatism. Behind Sen. East's voting record—often scored because it seemed no more than an echo—was a brave and likeable man, one who had overcome enormous physical setbacks and had proved that the measure of a man is his mind and heart and not his body.

Oddly for a United States Senator, Mr. East was a quiet politician who served not to build a biography but to establish his cause. That cause was inflexibly conservative. In the Senate votes, he was Mr. Helms' twin. In personality, he was an opposite.

Mr. East was a scholar. He rarely yielded to anger or flaming rhetoric. He thought out his views, cast his votes most predictable, and didn't flinch when criticism rained upon him from the liberal—and sometimes conservative—press.

He seemed steeled against the nay sayers, and while his political ideology was tested severely, his excellent character was never damaged. He was strong and gentlemanly, a man of deep piety and strong social and political convictions.

What built such resolve? Why didn't Mr. East occasionally fly off the handle? There may be no easy answer, but his life serves some clues. Physically, John East had been wracked by more than his share of pain and suffering. He was a young Marine officer when he was crippled by polio and confined to a lifetime in a wheelchair.

Lesser men would have been discouraged, but Mr. East, who had won the Phi Beta Kappa Key in college, went on to earn law and Ph.D. degrees and become a college professor in political science. He shunned the trendiness of the liberal perspective of political science, and students who eagerly signed up for his courses heard a teacher who could expertly and wisely shake the foundations of the politics of welfarism and a weak defense.

He became a U.S. senator because of hard-hitting television commercials financed by Mr. Helms' Congressional Club—commercials that destroyed the political career of Democrat Robert Morgan without really saying much about John East. But if the Tar Heel electorate had been his classroom, North Carolina might have voted for him anyway. Mr. East could be powerfully convincing without theatrics. His suasion was didactic rather than volcanic.

It has been said that his life was a profile in courage, and that seems true enough. Yet it pains to think that one so brave, for some unknown reason, could not continue to face life and more pain. If John East had chosen life after the Senate he might have been a grand teacher and statesman, a living testimony to man's ability to endure with dignity.

North Carolina has lost a plucky and brilliant public servant.

[From the Raleigh News and Observer, July 1, 1986]

EAST: COURAGE ON THE RIGHT

Ironically for a native of the Land of Lincoln, John Porter East can best be memorialized in terms usually reserved for stalwarts of the Old South—he fought well in behalf of a misguided cause. His death by suicide at the age of 55 deprives the nation's New Right of an intelligent, fiercely dedicated and articulate advocate. And it leaves North Carolina mourning a public servant who gave his utmost to the demanding task of being a U.S. senator.

For East, the demands of office were especially harsh. He accustomed himself to the glare of the political limelight even while coping with the physical limitations of his polio-induced handicap, which left him dependent on a wheelchair and crutches. The dignity and courage he displayed as he went about the arduous routines of Capitol Hill inspired admiration that surpassed differences over ideology.

Yet the rigors of poor health—in particular, the thyroid deficiency that last year sapped his vitality and forced him into the hospital for weeks at a time—may have contributed to his decision to take his own life. Colleagues and associates say the worst phase of the hypothyroldism and the depression it breeds had seemed behind him, but the senator may simply have outdone himself in putting up a brave front.

East's Illinois origins, his physical handicap and lack of a political base seemed to stack the deck against him when he challenged incumbent Democrat Robert B. Morgan in 1980. But he was not running as a traditional North Carolina Republican. He already was a leading theoretician of the party's New Right wing, whose national leader was North Carolina's senior senator, Jesse Helms. It was Helms' organization that catapulted East from the political science faculty at East Carolina University into the Senate, relying heavily on campaign advertisements that distored Morgan's record.

East in office was a vigorous champion of the New Right's jingoistic foreign policy and its repressive social agenda. For example, the legislation that most clearly bore his personal stamp was an outgrowth of the anti-abortion movement. It attempted to define human life as beginning at conception thus leading to protected status for fetuses, despite the Supreme Court's holdings that women have the right to choose an abortion.

East thus bent his considerable intellectual skills not as much to the advancement of individual liberties as to the furtherance of the moral code shared by him and others of his ideological persuasion.

As he neared political retirement, East was heading for the security and comfort of academic life back on the East Carolina campus in Greenville, the pleasant city he and his family called home. He could have taken pride in his years of hard work in behalf of his constituents and his dutiful decision not to seek re-election when health problems may have kept him from giving 100 percent.

But despair whose depths nobody had realized drove John East to forgo that comfortable and deservedly self-satisfied retirement. His death signifies how high were the personal standards he held.

[From the Greensboro News & Record, June 30, 1986]

JOHN EAST

Sen. John East was a fighter, which makes the circumstances of his death by apparent suicide all the more difficult to accept. From the age of 24, he fought the debilitating efforts of polio. Though confined to a wheel chair, he was a courageous man who was not easily discouraged.

He fought for his career in Republican politics, too. He was twice defeated for public office before narrowly winning his Senate seat in a bitter 1980 contest.

Above all, East fought for his staunchly conservative political beliefs. Those beliefs were deeply held and finely honed. Like his close friend and mentor, Sen. Jesse Helms, East represented a new breed of conservative Republican who preached against abortion and school busing and in favor of prayer in the schools. He was a keen debater in the Senate and admired for his intellect, even by those who profoundly disagreed with him.

But the continued effects of poor health may have been too much even for this fighter. He recently contracted a painful hypothyroid condition, that sapped his strength and kept him from much of his Senate work last year. It also forced him reluctantly to decide not to run for re-election.

It appeared to staff and friends in recent months that Senator East had improved. He returned to debate and vote in the Senate, and he was on the verge of resuming his career as a professor of political science at East Carolina University.

It was in that new phase of his career, in fact, that East might have made his most enduring contributions. In the Senate, despite his convictions, he seemed out of place. He loved the ideas of politics, but not the practice of compromise. He never established his independence from Senator Helms, perhaps because he didn't want to. Whether better health or a second term in the Senate would have given him more influence we will never know.

But we do know East was very well suited to the classroom. Made wiser by his Senate experience, he could have taught and influenced another generation of young scholars.

But, now, for reasons we will probably never fully understand, John East's voice has been stilled. His intellectual talents were too large to be so abruptly and tragically wasted. All North Carolinians are saddened by his loss.

[From the Washington Post, July 1, 1986]

JOHN P. EAST

Senator John P. East had been attending sessions at the Senate regularly, was described by aides as cheerful and in a good mood, and was preparing to edit proofs of a book of essays he had written. But as his colleague and fellow North Carolina Republican Jesse Helms said, "One never knows what's inside another person." Mr. East killed himself over the weekend in his Greenville home.

What we do know is that Mr. East pursued his political career under circumstances of surpassing difficulty. In 1955 he was crippled by polio while serving in the Marine Corps. He announced last fall that for health reasons he would not run for re-election this year. He was hospitalized in 1985 for hypothyroidism—a condition that tends to be accompanied by depression—and for treatment of a low white-blood-cell count and a urinary blockage.

Confined to a wheelchair, Mr. East earned a law degree and a PhD in political science, and became a professor at East Carolina University. A conservative Republican when that breed was scarce in eastern North Carolina, he ran for office twice unsuccessfully before being elected to the Senate in 1980.

Like all politicians, Sen. East was only partly successful in reaching his goals, and like many he may have regretted the circumstances—especially cruel in his case—prompting him to leave public office. But he had cause for satisfaction in his work, and his apparent decision that he could no longer carry on inspires sadness and sympathy.

[From the Washington Times, July 1, 1986]

THE DEATH OF JOHN EAST

After playing college football and serving in the Marines, John P. East contracted polio at age 24—one of the last casualties before the Salk vaccine—and learned that he would never walk again. So he climbed into a wheelchair and continued on to law school, graduate school, and a career of teaching political science and the conservative philosophers he so admired. This comeback culminated in his election to the U.S. Senate, where for five years he put his conservative principles into action.

Polio did not destroy him, but hypothyroidism did its best, perhaps succeeding. The disease is known to cause depression, mental impairment, and hallucinations. Last weekend the senator was driven home to Greenville, N.C., and dropped off at his empty home, his wife being on a visit to her mother. Then a note, then the gas fumes, then the end.

American politics has lost a generous and honorable man and that rare bird in practical politics, the intellectual ideologue, possessor of both scholarly breadth and philosophical commitment.

The moral tradition that John East so zealously upheld teaches that the Almighty has fixed his canon against self-slaughter, but it also teaches that He is, above all else, a loving and compassionate Father. Those who knew the junior senator from North Carolina and who knew of his battles and his sufferings in this world will have no fear for his condition in the next.

THE DEATH OF THE HONORABLE JOHN P. EAST, OF NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask that it be immediately considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the resolution.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A Senate resolution (S. Res. 442) relative to the death of the Honorable John P. East, of North Carolina.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of the Honorable John P. East, a Senator from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit an enrolled copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That when the Senate recesses today, it recess as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

SENATOR JOHN EAST—IN MEMORIAM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] for his statement. I want to express, on behalf of all my colleagues on both sides, our sympathy to Mrs. East and her daughters, the family, friends, and staff of Senator EAST.

As I have come to know the Senate, it is a lot like a family. We have our quarrels, we have our differences, we may fuss at one another, we belong to different parties. But, at the same time, we are human beings and we are sensitive to moments of tragedy and sadness as well as happiness. Like a family, when one suffers sorrow, we all suffer sorrow.

Today, as we return to Washington from nearly every corner of this great country from celebrations of this Nation's beginnings, we do have a devastating reality to face: the death of our esteemed colleague, JOHN EAST. Later, we shall stand together as a family when the Senate sets aside a time to eulogize Senator EAST. And I hope that through this united expression of our grief, we will help each other come to terms with his passing. But as the Republican leader, as Senator EAST's compatriot and friend, I could not start the Senate's business anew before paying tribute to this fine dedicated man.

I remember the last conversation I had with JOHN EAST. We were voting on a matter that was fairly close. It dealt with certain matters in the supplemental appropriations bill with reference to university grants. Senator EAST had a different view than I had.

I remember his rolling into the Chamber and saying, "Do you need my vote on this?"

I said, "I would really appreciate it."

He voted with me and departed. That kind of kindness typified JOHN EAST.

I would say to millions of disabled Americans, and there are millions, those who watched JOHN EAST, those who watched JOHN STENNIS on the Senate floor, have come to understand that these are men of courage, that they have overcome great odds, almost insurmountable odds, just to be here. The thing that was remarkable about JOHN EAST was that he never complained about his disability. There must be a plus factor there that just keeps someone moving as JOHN EAST was moving.

The bad side is that he is gone. The good side is that his courage and his willingness to tolerate what many people would not have tolerated has been an inspiration to disabled Americans, severely disabled Americans, all across America. There will be, I think, a very positive fallout. A lot of people can take hope, a lot of people can follow the example that JOHN EAST set.

Here is a man who was paralyzed at the age of 24 with polio. He trained himself to be a political scientist, a lawyer, a scholar. And he used his considerable intellectual gifts not for personal gain but unselfishly as a teacher and public servant.

I knew JOHN before he came to the Senate, knew him in Republican politics for a long time. But I really came to admire him when he became a Senator and I had a chance to become his friend. JOHN was called the resident scholar of the class of 1980 and he brought these scholarly talents to bear on issues of importance to him, whether it was the restoration of traditional family values or the fight for democracy in Central America.

JOHN was a quiet man, an unusual quality in the U.S. Senate. He did not seek to grab headlines or use his position to gain power for the sake of power. He came to the Senate to help carry out his commitment to the American way of life. And, in many important ways, he succeeded.

Mr. President, he is gone and there are no easy answers to explain why. But I know that he will not be forgotten because he left his imprint, not only on the Senate, but on our country he loved so well.

Robert Louis Stevenson once wrote, "To be what we are and to become what we are capable of becoming, is the only end of life." JOHN EAST more than fulfilled that dictum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished Democratic leader, Senator ROBERT BYRD, is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, while the Senate was in recess, we were all saddened to learn of the death of our colleague, JOHN EAST.

Any person's death is a tragedy and a reason to mourn. The death of a Member of this Chamber always seems to be more personal, the tragedy more deeply felt, and the sorrow more profound. An examination of his personal life leads one to conclude, as his colleague from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] said, that Senator EAST was a "profile in courage." As a young man, Mr. EAST was a college football player and a lieutenant in the U.S. Marines. But at the age of 24, he was stricken by polio in 1955—just 1 year before the vaccine was developed.

Although his bout with polio left him physically impaired, he proceeded to earn a law degree, a master's degree, and a Ph.D. in political science. As a professor of political science at East Carolina University for 16 years, Dr. EAST earned a reputation as an outstanding lecturer and author of numerous articles.

He was elected in 1980 to serve the people of North Carolina in the U.S. Senate. As a U.S. Senator, he was committed to serving the people of his State as his conscience dictated. He pushed for tougher antidrug laws, sponsored legislation to promote economy in Government, and in the Judiciary Committee's Courts Subcommittee which he chaired, he sought to address impediments to the efficient operation of the judicial system. He also was a strong legislative advocate for free enterprise and for meeting national needs through the efforts of the private sector. He was particularly determined to see that the United States remain strong militarily.

I respected his courage and much has been said about it today and rightly so. I respected his forthrightness. I have seen him in this Chamber when he stood almost alone—almost alone. Seldom did I have to wonder about his position on an issue. Now that he is departed, the causes in which he believed and which he promoted have lost an important and influential voice, and we in the Senate have lost an eloquent colleague. Having been born in the State of North Carolina, the motto of which is "To be, rather than to seem," I believe JOHN EAST lived up to that motto.

My wife Erma and I offer our condolences to Senator EAST's wife, the former Priscilla Sherk, and their two daughters, Kathryn and Martha.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 442) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be kept open for 10 days during which Senators may submit statements eulogizing Senator EAST and, at the conclusion of that time, the statements be collected and bound as a Senate document as provided by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I further indicate at this time that we will set aside a period of a couple of hours very soon so that Senators may come to the floor and make statements.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH TO JAMES T. BROYHILL, SENATOR FROM NORTH CAROLINA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the certificate of appointment of JAMES THOMAS BROYHILL of the State of North Carolina. It will be placed on file and the certificate of appointment will be read.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CERTIFICATE OF APPOINTMENT

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that, pursuant to the power vested in me by the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of North Carolina, I, James G. Martin, the Governor of said State, do hereby appoint The Honorable James T. Broyhill a Senator from said State, to represent said State in the Senate of the United States until the vacancy therein caused by the death of The Honorable John P. East is filled by election as provided by law.

Witness: His excellency our Governor James G. Martin, and our seal hereto affixed at Raleigh, North Carolina, this 14th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1986.

By the Governor:

JAMES G. MARTIN,
Governor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator designate will present himself at the desk, escorted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr HELMS], the Chair will administer the oath of office required by the Constitution and prescribed by law.

Mr. BROYHILL of North Carolina, escorted by Mr HELMS, of North Carolina, advanced to the desk of the President pro tempore; the oath prescribed by law was administered to him by the President pro tempore; and he subscribed to the oath in the official Oath Book.

[Applause, Senators rising.]

RECESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now be in recess.

Mr. DOLE. For 5 minutes.

Thereupon, at 12:24 the Senate recessed until 12:29 p.m., whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr GRASSLEY).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The acting majority leader is recognized by the Chair.

DEATH OF SENATOR JOHN P. EAST

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, it was a most impressive ceremony we have just concluded, one we have all shared in, and a most impressive series of remarks by the majority leader and by the Democratic leader and by Senator HELMS—all extraordinarily authentic and sincere. I will have more to say at an appropriate time in eulogizing our colleague, but indeed it is a great tragedy since our last gathering.

□ 1230

I recall so well my last visit with JOHN EAST off the floor, with the usual pleasantries: "How are you, JOHN? What's up?" Talking about voting and the strange hours and things of that nature that we talk of—but seldom get to the depth of ourselves.

Here was this great man of courage who conquered polio; this bright, inquisitive, probative, incisive mind of his; a teacher in every sense of the word.

I have lost a friend. He was my seatmate in the Judiciary Committee at each executive committee session. I know that the occupant of the chair [Mr. GRASSLEY] remembers the pleasure of sharing time with Senator EAST, as he sat on his right and I sat on his left. We had a great deal of rapport and a fine spirit among ourselves.

Then the twin hammers of polio and hypothyroidism brought him down. He told me often: "I could handle the one, but the other makes it tough." Indeed, the degree of that toughness will never be known to those of us here.

I was privileged to be at the memorial service in Greenville, NC—a very moving, swift ceremony—in which he was honored and eulogized.

I say to his wife, Sis, whom I have come to know, and their two dear children, whom I have not come to know well—I hope God will sustain them and strengthen them as they confront this awesome tragedy.

We welcome our new colleague, JIM BROYHILL, to the U.S. Senate. He is a sensitive and thoughtful man. I have come to know him and work with him on nuclear issues in conference committees. I am certain it goes unsaid that this is not the manner in which he wished to come here, but it is in the manner as directed by law under the appointment powers of their able Governor, Jim Martin.

So we greet him warmly as we grieve for our own fallen colleague. Senator EAST leaves a physical vacancy in this Chamber and a greater vacancy in our hearts and minds as we ponder and grapple with how better we might have responded to him or heard his quiet pleas of pain and anguish which were very real and indeed were there.

So we ask God to relieve us all, in our minds and hearts, as to why?—a word, interestingly enough, that does not appear in the Bible. That, I think, is very fortunate, because we cannot continue to wonder "Why?" Our faith and certainly the faith of his wife, Sis, and their two daughters and their love for each other will help us all to assuage the pain of his loss. He shall be deeply missed in so many ways by so many of us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEINZ). The acting minority leader.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, those of us on the Democratic side of the aisle did not very often vote with JOHN EAST; we did not very often agree with him on issues. We knew him as a man of great intelligence and high integrity. He was always pleasant, always smiling, and never complaining about the pain and the anguish and the suffering that was his lot. He was a fine Member of this body, a fine member of the family, and we all miss him very deeply.

We express our regrets to his wife and his daughters and other members of that family.

We are also in a mood of welcoming to this Chamber Senator JIM BROYHILL, who comes to replace Senator JOHN EAST. We look forward to working with Senator BROYHILL on the great issues that confront us all in this body and in the United States and in the world.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, it is with profound sadness that I take this opportunity to express my condolences upon the death of our friend and colleague, Senator JOHN EAST.

The death of Senator EAST removes an extraordinary American from our ranks. Author, philosopher, teacher, scholar, leader, and patriot, JOHN helped us all to better understand the principles and values upon which our way of life is based.

In Congress, Senator EAST handled the responsibilities of his office with unwavering dedication, honesty, and hard work. He supported calls for a restoration of traditional family values, frequently citing philosophers such as Plato, St. Thomas Aquinas, and Edmund Burke. He was strongly dedicated to his home State of North Carolina and our Nation, fighting for his constituents and his principles.

It has been my honor to know JOHN and to be among his many friends and admirers. Throughout his life, JOHN has served his God, country, State, and community. His life of public service will continue to be an inspiration to us all. JOHN EAST'S personal qualities, his sincerity, his friendliness, his dignity, and his character are the hallmarks of a remarkable human being. He has earned a prominent place in American history. I extend my deepest sympathy to his wife, Priscilla, and other members of his family.

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, it is with sadness that I rise in remembrance of Senator EAST. JOHN was a man of strongly held beliefs, great integrity and personal courage. He was a scholar, a compassionate man, a fine Senator and a good friend.

JOHN EAST was no stranger to adversity. As a young man he was stricken with polio. His response to adversity was typical of JOHN. He dedicated himself to the pursuit of knowledge, and having attained it, dedicated himself for 16 years to sharing it with others. In 1980 the people of North Carolina elected him to serve in this body and for the last 6 years he served North Carolinians and, indeed, all Americans steadfastly.

I will miss JOHN. Several of our colleagues have offered condolences to his wife, Sissy and his family, and I join with them in expressing my sorrow and my wish that JOHN'S great accomplishments will be a comfort to his wife and daughters as they are and will be to the multitude of people JOHN'S life touched.●

● Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, the death of Senator JOHN EAST has saddened us all. JOHN'S passing was sudden and unexpected, and our hearts and prayers are with Priscilla and the East family.

JOHN EAST and I came to the Senate at the same time, and I consider myself fortunate to have enjoyed JOHN'S friendship. His career in public service was extraordinary, and serves as a lesson for those who must overcome adversities. JOHN served in the Marine Corps until he contracted a debilitating illness that forced him to change paths. Undaunted, he obtained a law degree. He later turned his attention and enthusiasm to educational pursuits, after earning a doctorate degree in 1964.

For over 15 years, JOHN taught political science at East Carolina University, and, in 1980, he was elected to the U.S. Senate, where he strove to put into practice what he had been teaching and studying for much of his career.

Those of us in the Senate who knew JOHN EAST will never underestimate his courage, his thoughtfulness or his sincerity in taking tough positions on a variety of issues ranging from our national foreign policy to concern over family values.

I will deeply miss JOHN'S companionship, and the Senate will miss his wisdom.●

APPOINTMENTS TO THE COMMITTEES ON ARMED SERVICES AND JUDICIARY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution appointing Senator BROYHILL to the Committee on Armed Services and Judiciary, which are the same committees on which Senator EAST served. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 443) making appointments to the Committees on Armed Services and Judiciary.

Resolved, that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL] is hereby appointed to serve as a majority member on the Committee on Armed Services and Judiciary for the 99th Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

WELCOME TO SENATOR JAMES T. BROYHILL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as just indicated by the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON], today our great representative democracy continues in the wake of a tragedy. With the swearing in of our new colleague from North Carolina, the people's government moves on in a smooth and orderly fashion.

JIM BROYHILL is a skilled and dedicated public servant who has represented his district with distinction for more than two decades. But he will need all of that savvy and experience to bear the enormous responsibility that fate has placed on his shoulders. That is why I ask all of us—on both sides of the aisle—to lend a hand to our newest Member.

It will not be easy following the legacy of JOHN EAST: His tireless efforts on behalf of constituents set a high standard; his committee work was first rate; and his keen intellect was always a welcome addition to Senate floor debates.

But JIM BROYHILL is a special man, and I am confident that he can meet the tremendous challenge now before him.

So I am proud to welcome JIM BROYHILL, who has been my friend since 1962, to this Chamber. We look forward to working with him in the difficult months ahead.

FULL AGENDA AHEAD

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I welcome everyone back from what I hope was a restful and productive July 4 recess. The Senate had a grueling few weeks before we left, but at least this time we had something to show for our efforts—sweeping tax reform, a budget resolution, not the least among them.

But to paraphrase an old cliché, the Senate's work is never done. There are only 25 working days between now and the anticipated August recess—and that includes Mondays and Fridays, which I warn my colleagues now will be working days.

During that timeframe, we have serious business to do. I am not going to lay out a comprehensive list. I have learned that lists and deadlines often come back to haunt you. And I think most everyone here knows what essential work we need to do.

I have indicated to some extent, in a brief note to the distinguished minority leader [Mr. BYRD], some areas, and he may have additions to that, because we have a sort of joint responsibility to keep everything moving that we can.

I believe that most of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, whether they disagree or agree on a certain issue, understand that we have a mountain of work to do, and I hope we can start disposing of it this week. We have a couple of minor bills today, but at least we will be making progress, and I hope we can dispose of these two matters without rollcall votes, because we did not forewarn our Members that there will be no votes today. There will be no votes today, but we hope to dispose of at least a couple of matters.

Clearly, Congress must come to terms with the Supreme Court's decision on the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings balanced budget law. It is my hope that we can resolve the first issue—the fate of the initial March sequester order—quickly, by simply reaffirming the spending cuts. The next order of business is for the designated committees to draft reconciliation savings legislation—their deadline is July 25—and then for the Senate to act on the reconciliation package.

Also, on the economic front, we will have to increase the Federal debt limit soon.

There are a number of critical nominations for us to address, including Terrence Scanlon, Chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission, and two Supreme Court appointments—Justice Rehnquist and Judge Scalia.

In the foreign affairs arena, the Senate will have to revisit the Contra issue when we take up the military construction appropriations bill. There is also the United Kingdon-United States Extradition Treaty, which the administration wants us to complete.

And, it is very likely that we will deal with South Africa, in one context or another.

Finally, we have some internal business to take care of: Senator BOREN's PAC amendment; and, 1 hour after the close of business on July 29, the Senate will vote on whether or not we want television as a permanent fixture.

Right before we recessed for the Fourth of July, the minority leader, Senator BYRD, and I submitted a resolution that would allow the cameras to keep rolling through July 29. If we do not adopt this resolution, the cameras will be turned off at the end of business tomorrow.

It does not seem to me that pulling the plug and disappearing for 2 weeks makes much sense. We can assess the experiment just as well with the cameras on, as off. So, Mr. President, I hope we can call up the resolution and approve it today or tomorrow.

□ 1240

We have all kinds of matters. We have to reaffirm the spending cuts because of the Supreme Court decision. We have the reconciliation bill. We have a couple of Supreme Court nominees. We have the Terrence Scanlon matter, which we will dispose of tomorrow, to be Chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission. We have an agreement on that.

In the foreign affairs arena we will revisit the freedom fighter issue and take up military construction. There is also the United Kingdom-United States extradition treaty and a number of Members on each side who are concerned that we do more with reference to South Africa.

I know I had not had a chance to return the call of my colleague from Montana. There are a number of us concerned about beefing up the export possibility of American agriculture and hopefully we can work on that in a bipartisan way.

I also hope, and I think we are making some progress, that we can resolve the issue of TV in the Senate, if not today, tomorrow, and if it is not possible to do it by unanimous consent, perhaps if we could get some agreement to bring it up and debate the motion that I introduced with Senator BYRD to let us continue, in other words, not pull the plug tomorrow at the close of business.

So I would just suggest to my colleagues that we are in, I think, right now fair shape. We have a lot of work. There have to be appropriations bills passed and a lot of authorization bills.

I know Senator GOLDWATER would like to bring up the DOD authorization quite soon. We are advised that will take 5 days itself.

So once you start dealing out chunks of 5 legislative days, when you only have 25 days between now and August 15, I think it is an indication of just how much we have to do.

The last thing that I would want to indicate would be some change in the recess schedule, but again I believe there are some matters that we ought to try to focus on, maybe reach some agreement among the leadership on both sides that we are going to dispose of and, if we cannot do it, we may have to look to postponing the so-called Labor Day recess a few days.

Mr. President, I think I have used my leader time, but under the standing orders the distinguished minority leader has 10 minutes and there are special orders for Senator PROXMIRE and Sen.ator MELCHER of not to exceed 5 minutes and routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour—and I ask unanimous consent that be changed to 1:15 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. With Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

Then following morning business it will be the majority leader's intention to turn to S. 2324 and S. 2444, both bills out of the Labor Committee, and no votes will occur during today's session.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if the distinguished majority leader would like to have me yield him some time from my order, I will be happy to do it.

Mr. DOLE. I have sufficient time.

Mr. BYRD. Very well.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

While the distinguished majority leader is on the floor, with respect to the program for the upcoming 5 weeks, the distinguished majority leader has very correctly indicated that this is indeed a very full platter of legislation and other business that should be considered before the Senate goes out for the Labor Day recess.

Anent Contra aid, does the distinguished majority leader foresee that the military construction appropriation bill—to which that subject matter has been attached—will be before the Senate prior to the consideration of the defense authorization bill?

Mr. DOLE. I am advised, if the minority leader will yield, we are not likely to have the military construction bill earlier than July 24. I understand the DOD authorization bill may also not yet be ready. I am not quite certain but I will try to determine that before the day is out or before tomorrow at noon.

I am advised that the military construction bill was received from the House of Representatives this morning and it is my understanding Senator MATTINGLY is also trying to reach me and I have not returned his call, but he wants to do it as quickly as they could.

Mr. BYRD. I assume the majority leader would prefer to proceed to the authorization bill first before going to the appropriation bill. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. DOLE. That would be my preference. Again, we have discussed how long we are going to spend on that bill. Is the House going to do anything if we pass it? If we take 5 days on the authorization bill and nothing happens to it, we really have consumed a lot of our valuable time.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished majority leader has mentioned the two nominations, Mr. Rehnquist and Mr. Scalia.

What is the distinguished majority leader's plan with respect to the Manion nomination?

Mr. DOLE. I am not certain at this point whether I can say I have a plan. I did not have a plan when we took it up the last time, as the distinguished minority leader recalls. I was planning on having a vote on cloture that day. One thing led to another and now there is a motion to reconsider pending.

But, again, in accordance with the agreement that we made that is on the record, before it is brought up I would give the minority leader at least 24-hour notice. We have a similar problem on this side. Let us face it. The facts are that there is probably a one vote difference. We do not want to bring it up if anyone is out of town. The minority leader does not want it brought up if anyone is out of town. I am advised I have someone out of town all this week.

But I will keep in contact with the minority leader on that.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader.

I noted in the press——

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, if the leadership will yield a minute, there is a little confusion in this Senator's mind and I am sure many others. There was talk that the Manion nomination would not be brought up again at all and that it would succeed if it were not brought up. There would be no opportunity to reconsider.

I would like to have the majority leader's view on that because I am sure the majority leader is aware that was reported.

Mr. BYRD. I was about to say I note in the press that the distinguished majority leader, or at least it was reported, is planning not to bring this matter up for another vote but to wait until such time as the Senate might recess or adjourn over for a period of more than 30 days, which under rule XXXI paragraph 5 would allow the nomination, of course, to be sent by the Secretary to the President and the motion to reconsider would fall.

But what the distinguished majority leader has indicated to me this morning in response to an earlier question is, as I have interpreted it, and, of course, the majority leader may wish to expound on it further, that he still intends to call up this matter for a vote at some point depending upon when he feels that his votes are in town.

Mr. DOLE. If the minority leader will yield, let me indicate that I have not foreclosed that option. It seems to me we have a very sensitive matter here that I did indicate that one way to dispose of it would be to do nothing. That is still an option. I do not want to foreclose that option.

I think what I would need to do before making any final judgment would be to make certain who is in town and when they are in town and how many are in town. I would guess that would be the same judgment on that side.

Additionally some have suggested we start all over. I do not intend to do that.

The motion to reconsider is pending. I would hope that we could move to table that and that would end it.

But there is the option, as referred to by the distinguished minority leader, that we do nothing.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I can understand the distinguished majority leader's maintaining the rule XXXI approach as an option. I would hope that he would not resort to that approach. He would be within the rule, of course. But, really, the will of the Senate on this nomination has not yet been expressed. There have not been 51 votes for it. There have not been a majority of Senators who have been in support of the nomination.

I would hope that at some point the Senate will go to a vote so that the will of the Senate will be expressed. The distinguished majority leader certainly has it within his power to move to the Executive Calendar at any point and to move any nomination. He need not go to that particular nomination. As a matter of fact, I do not guess it is on the Executive Calendar any longer at this point. But in any event, except for the 24-hour notice to which the minority leader is entitled by virtue of the assurance of the distinguished majority leader—and I have absolutely no doubt as to the distinguished majority leader's intent to give the minority 24-hours notice—whether we have our votes in town or not, to use the distinguished majority leader's reference, we are more or less dependent upon what the majority leader intends to do here. As long as the majority gives us its 24-hour notice, we in the minority have very little recourse within our power to keep the Senate from going into executive session, and if that is done then the motion to reconsider would be pending before the Senate and the motion to table would be in order, and that is not debatable.

So I guess, aside from the 24-hour notice, which the minority will have, it is pretty much up to the distinguished majority leader to decide what the calendar says and the clock says and when he will give that notice. We in the minority will just have to abide thereby.

□ 1250

I do say again, in closing on this matter, that I hope that the Senate will have an opportunity to vote up or down this nomination. It is an exceedingly important one. There are only, I believe, about 13 appellate circuits in this country—11 of the regular ones, plus the District of Columbia, and the Federal circuit.

I will not go further into the importance of the nomination now, but just to say again that, whenever the distinguished majority leader indicates that we have 24 hours, we will certainly, on our side, do everything we can to have our Members present so that the Senate can, indeed, express its will on this matter.

I have another question with respect to another matter.

Mr. DOLE. Will the Senator yield so I may respond?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. Let me indicate that I think the record ought to reflect that I hope I have made no assumptions or no statements that would indicate, even before the vote on Manion, what the outcome would be because I knew it would be very close. I read some things that I do not believe really occurred. I understand there is a group now that has a radio spot condemning me for certain things.

But let me just repeat what I felt was happening in here the day the Manion matter came up. My view was we would have a cloture vote and probably not succeed, because we had been suggesting there should be a vote up or down. And I assume, sooner or later, we would have gotten that request.

But I was quietly enjoying a dish of ice cream in the Senate restaurant when I was told to rush to the floor, that there was something about to happen. And so I did. Then I had this so-called offer you can't refuse, which literally just gave us a couple of votes. And so I hope that we could dispose of this matter.

I hope no one feels they have been deceived on this side. I did not make any statement saying anything that I could not verify. Mr. PACKWOOD, I could not reach him on the telephone and I had the impression he was all right.

But, beyond that, the matter should be disposed of. I hope that we can do it without relying on the other, the last option, which is the one that would be adjourning for more than 30 days.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader.

Unless another Senator wishes to speak on this point——

Mr. CRANSTON. If I could just speak on this briefly.

I join in the hope that we will be able to vote up or down on this nomination with 24 hours' notice. The will of the Senate has not yet been expressed. I think it should be on a nomination that is this controversial, where the Senate is obviously very closely and possibly totally evenly divided.

I hope that the majority leader will not go to the option that he mentioned of simply letting everything go until the last minute and then adjourning so that we do not have a vote. That would lead us, if that was the plan, to have to consider other options which we would prefer not to have to consider, such as doing our best to prevent any vote on any nomination until there is a vote on the nomination of Mr. Manion. There are other judgeships pending and there are Supreme Court nominations pending. They should be considered on their own merits and there should be a vote on them.

But, if we are going to be deprived of a vote on this, after a motion to reconsider was duly recorded by the Senate or the request for that vote was made, we should have to consider all options available to us on this side, as the majority leader apparently is considering all options available to him on his side of the matter.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished minority whip. I hope it will not come to that, but that the Senate will indeed, be given an opportunity to express its will on the nomination in due course.

PROHIBITION ON INVESTMENTS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on the calendar of bills and joint resolutions read the first time, there is H.R. 4868, prohibitions on investments in South Africa.

I wonder if the majority leader would be willing to proceed at this time by unanimous consent so that we can further trigger rule XIV and put this matter on the calendar as of the next day of legislative session without waiting until morning business is completed today.

Mr. DOLE. Fine.

Mr. BYRD. Is that agreeable with the distinguished majority leader?

Mr. DOLE. That is agreeable.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for the second reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report H.R. 4868.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4868) to prohibit loans and other investments in, and certain other activities with respect to, South Africa, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I object to any further consideration of the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is placed on the calendar.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader.

If I have any time left, I yield it to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] who has been patiently waiting.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I thank my good friend, the minority leader.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I understand I have 5 minutes of special order time, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Thank you, Mr. President.

SENATOR JOHN EAST

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues in paying tribute to our departed colleague JOHN EAST, the Senator from North Carolina. He was a remarkable man. In the years I have been here—and I have been here 29 years—I cannot recall more than two or three Senators who had been wheelchair-ridden, and none during their entire career, except JOHN EAST. JOHN EAST has shown great courage. I think he was a most articulate, intelligent, very decent, and good man.

STAR WARS: ONE CHANCE IN A THOUSAND IT WOULD WORK

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, several months ago David Parnas caused a brief sensation by quitting his job at the Defense Department as a $1,000-a-day computer expert on the Star Wars Program. Parnas had built a long and distinguished record as one of the world's top computer experts. For years he had been one of the most valued advisers of the Department of Defense. Parnas' full-time job is professor of computer science at the University of Victoria, BC, Canada. Parnas advised the Defense Department on the computer problems associated with the Star Wars Program from its inception.

Why did Parnas resign? Here is why: star wars can only work if this enormously complex system can swiftly and precisely process a huge mass of data, very swiftly and accurately. This would be far and away the most difficult and demanding computer problem ever attempted. So what? Has not computer technology come on with a dazzling rush in recent years? Are not computers today achieving unprecedented breakthroughs that would have been considered impossible a few years ago? Is not the research and development of the star wars system likely to take at least 7 or 8 more years? Why is it not possible, indeed, likely that in the next 7 or 8 years this marvelous technology might provide the defense against nuclear attack we all yearn for and dream about? Could we not expect to bring the computer technology into new, even more spectacular advances by the midnineties when the Defense Department plans to deploy star wars? And is it not true that although the United States has an advantage over the Soviet Union in most military technologies, it is in computers where the advantage is most striking and where the United States is actually increasing its lead?

So if a star wars race between the superpowers should begin, here is one area where the United States could be dead certain to win and win going away. Since the computer technology is essential to star wars, it means that the United States if it proceeds can expect—thanks to computers—to enjoy an immense advantage for many years.

There is one huge problem with this happy scenario. We may be far ahead of the Russians in computer science. But computer science cannot begin to do the job required by star wars. Not now. Not 10 years from now. And not any time in the foreseeable future. David Parnas knew this. This is why Parnas walked out on a $1,000-a-day job. This top world expert concluded that computers just will not achieve this impossible dream. Here is why: There is no question that star wars will require thousands of sensors to determine when, where, in what direction and in what volume the Soviets are launching nuclear missiles. The job of computers will be to process and analyze this data. The computers must correlate the data from the sensors on each of thousands of missile firings. They must then compute the trajectories. They must discriminate between warheads and thousands, perhaps millions of decoys. Computers must aim and fire the star wars weapons. As Parnas has written:

All the weapons and sensors will be useless if the computers do not function properly. Software which controls the computers is the glue that holds such systems together.

Parnas sees software as the problem. What is this software? Software does not include the physical elements of computers, the main frame and so forth. Software constitutes the instructions, the judgment by experts operating the physical equipment as to what is critical and what is not. What does software require to achieve competence and reliability? It requires, demands, lives and breathes on testing. It requires that testing under realistic conditions. The more complex the data, the more varied the conditions, the more crucial is the testing and the experience. So how do we test star wars software? With the immense complexity and the enormous amount of data required, testing would require the experience of operating a star wars defense against actual nuclear attack not once, not four or five times but hundreds of times.

So why will our computer software experts not learn to handle this complexity over the years? There is a simple irrefutable reason why the star wars software experts cannot learn from experience. The overwhelming judgment of experts is that no nation could sustain even a single nuclear attack. So the SDI star wars defense would get only a single chance to work. That chance would come with no real experience whatsoever—none.

But wait a minute—how about simulations? Why could the integrated hardware and software not be tested with simulated attacks—many simulated attacks? Parnas tells us that "many potential problems would not be revealed by component testing, simulations or small-scale field tests." So there would be no opportunity to modify the software during or after its first battle.

Parnas offers a compelling analogy. He writes:

SDI software that works the first time it is used may be theoretically possible. It is also theoretically possible that 10,000 typing monkeys could reproduce the Encyclopedia Britannica. Both are highly unlikely.

Ah, there is the rub. We could spend a trillion dollars on star wars. We could devote 2 or 3 hundred billion a year maintaining and modernizing the system, but the level of our confidence that it could actually protect against a nuclear attack would be at best about 1 in a 1,000. That is why this Senator would choose not star wars, but arms control.

Mr. President, I yield the floor. I yield the remainder of my time, if I have any, to my good friend from Montana, Senator MELCHER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I wish to thank my good friend from Wisconsin for courteously yielding to me any time he might have remaining.

CONDOLENCES TO SENATOR EAST'S FAMILY

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I wish to express my sympathy and condolences to the family of Senator JOHN EAST. His passing from this world and his absence from this Senate leaves a void.

JOHN EAST was a man of great integrity, and great intelligence. He will be sorely missed here.

U.S. TRADE IMBALANCE

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I wish to address the situation inflicting the Nation on our trade imbalance.

The biggest, hardest, and toughest concrete roadblock seems to have been placed in the path of a good economic recovery for all of the United States. While there has been economic recovery in some areas, in basic industries of this country upon which we principally rely for continued and adequate economic activity, these industries simply are not doing very well at all. It is like some of them are on a tightrope. If they bend too much one way, they are going to drop off. If they stay on it, it seems to be a very treacherous, tortuous path that they must follow if they are going to keep in business, and if we are going to have true economic recovery spread throughout the United States reflected in economic activity that shunts aside and removes the strange signals that we are receiving right now in the markets and from economic analysis which seem to be telling us here in the United States that we indeed may be looking at part or perhaps the worst of times looming ahead of us.

Mr. President, I do not see gloom and doom, as a matter of fact. I do not think I am. But I think the warning that we are seeing in these rather heavy burdens that are placed upon the economic recovery should be looked at, examined, and that we should have some action on them and action promptly. So the two most significant points that face the Congress and the country is those twin debacles of a huge Federal deficit accompanied by a huge growing trade deficit.

Mr. President, there is no reason why we cannot control both of these deficits. We have taken some action on trying to control the Federal deficits and perhaps we will see some fruition of our efforts, both joint efforts by the Congress and administration to see some advance made in handling the Federal deficit.

Mr. President, there has not been any serious attempt in the past 6 months by either Congress or the administration to do something about handling this very severe and damaging imbalance of trade. We are in red ink from last year as we total it all up by about $146 billion from importing more than we exported from the United States. And from all indications this year as we have reached the halfway point in this year we see the trade imbalance has not been improved. We have more red ink, and we are likely to end up this year with even a more adverse trade imbalance for the United States.

It used to be that when we looked at agricultural exports that was a very bright spot in our situation of how much we exported compared to what we import. In 1981, we exported about $46 to $47 billion of agricultural commodities from the United States. Now we are looking for 1986 at a figure that will slice that in two. We are looking at a figure somewhere around $22 or $23 billion worth of agricultural exports exported from the United States, a 50-percent retreat—50-percent less. Indeed, in May we found the situation for the first time in 15 years for any individual month where the United States imported into this country more food than it exported. We can control that, Mr. President. I think it is time we start taking some action on those matters.

On Thursday of last week at my invitation 39 exporting companies and exporting cooperatives met here in Washington, DC. We had an open public meeting lasting from about 9:30 in the morining until 2 o'clock in the afternoon in the Dirksen Building in one of the hearing rooms there. Mr. President, these are people who are in the business of exporting agricultural commodities from the United States. They met here to discuss with me what should be done, what action should be taken not next year but what action should be taken this year beginning this month of July in order to get a handle on the agricultural export situation in order to start turning this around. Mr. President, the unanimity that was expressed by these 39 organizations indeed amazed me.

They agreed on three points. One, that the President should immediately appoint the special adviser on agricultural trade and food assistance that was called for in the 1985 farm bill. That was a provision of the farm bill that was placed there in order to untangle some of the redtape that thwarts agricultural exports from the United States. So far that position has gone vacant. The President has ignored it.

No. 2, all of these organizations agreed that we should immediately use a broad array of the food assistance programs that we have on our statutes. In other words, there are a number of programs, such as Food For Peace, but not limited to that. Other programs are very similar to that which utilize the surplus commodities from the United States as a donation, or a sale for less than full cost, or a sale on the basis of a long-term credit situation or bartering agreement.

These programs are already in place. They are not being used. They are being ignored. We cannot allow that to happen. The agricultural groups of the 39 organizations that met on Thursday asked for a bipartisan approach, both within Congress and down at the White House to emphasize that these are the types of sales and programs they believe should be used adequately, used very quickly in order to regain part of our lost markets, and to increase our agricultural exports abroad.

□ 1310

Mr. President, they also agreed on a third point. That is very simply to complement the first two points. Very simply, it is that our message should be delivered and should be delivered rather forcefully to point out what the urgency is and the need for rapid action. We are preparing a statement to the administration and to the Congress to be delivered to Secretary of Agriculture Lyng to acquaint the White House with the need for adequate attention to these problems right now, and for the rest of us who are cognizant of how serious that situation is to visit with our counterparts, our colleagues, in both the House and the Senate, so that rapid action can be taken.

Mr. President, I received today a letter from one of those in attendance at Thursday's meeting. I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AG PROCESSING INC.,
Omaha, NE., July 11, 1986.

Hon. JOHN MELCHER,
U.S. Senate,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of Jim Lindsay, CEO of Ag Processing and myself, we wish to again commend you and thank you for providing the leadership in getting representatives of American Agri-business together to discuss the problems facing U.S. Agricultural exports.

We were pleased to see the unity and agreement on the many issues presented and discussed by the people in attendance from all different segments of the U.S. Agribusiness community.

I know you appeared to be extremely pleased, and at times almost amazed at this unity and agreement on the basic recommendations which came forth. Your emphasis and acceptance of a by-partisan effort to get action started, hopefully will provide some political clout with the administration in the immediate future because time is running out on some of the funding provided in the Food Security Act of 1985.

As we stated, the current provisions of the Farm Bill provides the necessary tools and funds to get action started on the exportation of wheat, feedgrains, soybeans, and their products.

We also know that you and other Members of Congress are concerned gravely about the lack of exports of agriculture, as we are, and the May figures helped to bring this problem to a head. I know that Secretary Lyng is also concerned and needs our support as he attempts to tell and position our concerns with the President, Cabinet and their advisors.

In a recent visit, representing the Soybean Industry with Secretary Lyng, we emphasized that by the time OMB, Treasury and the State Departments posted their objections, under the criteria laid down, there were basically no customers left with which to trade.

It is imperative that the U.S. let the rest of the world know that we will be the low cost producer, and to stop expanding production and processing of wheat, corn, feedgrains, soybeans, and their products for subsidized sale into the international market.

We feel strongly that this signal must be given and quickly. Even after this is done, as was pointed out, it will take time to work off the large inventories currently on hand, and we have a large crop of corn, soybeans, and feedgrains projected even with 25 million real acres removed from production. It will take some type of supply management for a few years to get things back to some form of supply-demand balance. We cannot expect to stop current in-place world production, but we can stop expansion of new production, and let world demand catch up.

Jim Lindsay and I look forward to coordinating and setting up another meeting of this group in Washington around the middle of August. We will keep you and your staff informed, and would appreciate your comments on who, in your opinion should be invited from Congress, to the next meeting in the Spirit of By-Partisan Unity.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM C. LESTER,
Vice-President,
Member and Public Relations.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold?

Mr. MELCHER. Yes, Mr. President, I withhold.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1420

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. ABDNOR]. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DOMESTIC VOLUNTEER SERVICE ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 714, S. 2324, a bill to reauthorize programs under the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2324) to reauthorize programs under the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. That this Act may be cited as the "Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1986".

VOLUNTEERISM POLICY

SEC. 2. (a) The Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Act") is amended by inserting immediately after the table of contents the following new section:

"VOLUNTEERISM POLICY

"SEC. 2. (a) Because of the long-standing importance of volunteerism throughout American history, it is the policy of the Congress to foster the tradition of volunteerism through greater involvement on the part of both young and older citizens.

"(b) It is the intention of the Congress, through ACTION, the Federal domestic volunteer agency, to foster and expand voluntary citizen service, and coordinate its efforts with other Federal agencies. The ACTION Agency shall utilize to the fullest extent the energy, innovative spirit, experience, and skills of all Americans to serve local communities in activities designed to help the poor, the disadvantaged, and the vulnerable through the application of volunteer service.".

(b) The table of contents of the Act is amended by inserting before title I the following new item:

"Sec. 2. Volunteerism policy.".

VISTA LITERACY CORPS

SEC. 3. (a) Part A of title I of the Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating sections 104, 105, 106, 107, and 108 as sections 105, 106, 107, 108, and 109, respectively; and

(2) by inserting after section 103 the following new section:

"VISTA LITERACY CORPS

"SEC. 104. (a) As part of the Volunteers in Service to America program established under this part, the Director shall establish a VISTA Literacy Corps for the purpose of developing, strengthening, supplementing, and expanding efforts of both public and nonprofit organizations at the local, State, and Federal level to mobilize local, State, Federal, and private sector financial and volunteer resources to address the problem of illiteracy throughout the United States.

"(b)(1) The Director shall assign volunteers to projects and programs that provide assistance to functionally illiterate and illiterate individuals who are unserved or underserved by existing literacy education programs, with special emphasis upon disadvantaged individuals having the highest risk of illiteracy, and individuals with the lowest reading and educational level of competence.

"(2) The Director shall ensure an equitable distribution of volunteers under this section in accordance with the equitable distribution requirement of section 414 of this Act. The Director shall give priority consideration to—

"(A) projects and programs operating in unserved and underserved areas with the highest concentration of illiteracy;

"(B) projects and programs serving individuals reading at the zero to fourth grade levels;

"(C) projects and programs focusing on providing literacy services to high risk populations;

"(D) projects and programs operating in areas with the highest concentration of individuals and families living at or below the poverty level; and

"(E) projects and programs providing literacy services to parents of disadvantaged children between the ages of two and eight, who may be educationally at risk.

"(3)(A) In assigning volunteers under this section, the Director shall assure that the organization sponsoring the project to which the volunteer is assigned meets the requirements of subparagraph (B).

"(B) The organizations to which subparagraph (A) applies are local, State, and national literacy councils and organizations; community-based nonprofit organizations; any local and State educational agencies; any State and local agencies administering adult basic education programs; educational institutions; libraries; anti-poverty organizations; local, city, and State governmental entities; and any other appropriate organization that meets the criteria set forth in section 103(a) of the Act.

"(c) The VISTA Literacy Corps shall consist of all volunteers serving under this section and all VISTA volunteers working on literacy projects and programs under section 103(a)(3).".

(b)(1) Section 112 of the Act is amended by striking out "sections 103(f) and 104(d)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 103(f) and 105(d)".

(2) Section 113 of the Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "section 104" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 105"; and

(B) by striking out "section 105(a)(1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 106(a)(1)".

(3)(A) Section 122(c)(1) of the Act is amended—

(i) by striking out "section 105(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 106(b)"; and

(ii) by striking out "section 104(c) and 105(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 105(c) and 106(b)".

(B) Section 122(c)(2) of the Act is amended—

(i) by striking out "section 105(a)" in clause (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "section 106(a)"; and

(ii) by striking out "104(d), and 105(a)" in clause (B) and inserting in lieu thereof "105(d) and 106(a)".

(4) Section 402(12) is amended by striking out "section 108" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 109".

FOSTER GRANDPARENT PROGRAMS

SEC. 4. Section 211 of the Act is amended by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (f) and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e)(1)(A) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (B), pursuant to regulations which the Director may prescribe, individuals may serve as foster grandparents under this part who are not low-income persons if the individuals serve without stipend or reimbursement for expenses other than transportation, meals, and out-of-pocket expenses incident to the provision of services under this part.

"(B) No individual may serve as a nonstipend volunteer under this subsection in any community in which there are volunteers serving under part A of this title, relating to retired senior volunteer program.

"(2)(A) Each nonstipend volunteer shall comply with requirements of this part.

"(B) No appropriated funds may be diverted from direct volunteer benefits for low-income stipend volunteers to direct volunteer benefits for nonstipend volunteers under this part. The costs associated with nonstipend volunteers authorized by this subsection shall be paid from solicitations received pursuant to section 402(b), from locally generated contributions, or from resources contributed by the volunteer.

"(C) Volunteers not in the low-income category serving without stipend under this part shall not replace low-income volunteers serving with stipend.

"(3) The Director may not require as a condition of, or a criterion for, receiving any grant under this title that a grant recipient use nonstipend volunteers authorized by this subsection or solicit locally generated contributions for local use.".

SENIOR COMPANION PROGRAM

SEC. 5. Section 213 of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d)(1)(A) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (B), pursuant to regulations which the Director may prescribe, individuals may serve as senior companions under this part who are not low-income persons if such individuals serve without stipend or reimbursement of expenses other than for transportation, meals, and out-of-pocket expenses incident to the provision of services under this part.

"(B) No individual may serve as a nonstipend volunteer under this subsection in any community in which there are volunteers serving under part A of this title, relating to retired senior volunteer program.

"(2)(A) Each nonstipend volunteer shall comply with requirements of this part.

"(B) No appropriated funds may be diverted from direct volunteer benefits for low-income stipend volunteers to direct volunteer benefits for nonstipend volunteers under this part. The costs associated with nonstipend volunteers authorized by this subsection shall be paid from solicitations received pursuant to section 402(b), from locally generated contributions, or from resources contributed by the volunteer.

"(C) Volunteers not in the low-income category serving without stipend under this part shall not replace low-income volunteers serving with stipend.

"(3) The Director may not require as a condition of, or a criterion for, receiving any grant under this title that a grant recipient use nonstipend volunteers authorized by this subsection or solicit locally generated contributions for local use.".

AUTHORITY OF THE DIRECTOR

SEC. 6. Section 402 of the Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" after the section designation; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(b)(1) The Director is authorized to accept in the name of the ACTION Agency funds received through solicitation of profit and nonprofit entities and to employ or dispose of the funds in furtherance of the purposes of this Act, or of any title thereof. Consistent with the provisions of clause (5) of subsection (a) of this section, all funds so received shall become part of the gift fund account of the ACTION Agency and shall remain available until expended.

"(2) The Director shall assure that a majority of the aggregate amount in each fiscal year of all unrestricted gifts to the ACTION Agency will be spent to support volunteer projects carried out at the community level.

"(3) In carrying out the solicitation authorized by this subsection, the Director may not require local directors of volunteer projects to conduct solicitations at the community level.".

ADVISORY COUNCIL

SEC. 7. (a) Title IV of the Act is amended by inserting after section 404 the following new section:

"NATIONAL VOLUNTARY SERVICE ADVISORY COUNCIL

"SEC. 405. (a)(1) There is established in the ACTION Agency a National Voluntary Service Advisory Council (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'Council') to be composed of not more than 25 members appointed by the Director. Such members shall be representative of VISTA volunteers and beneficiaries of the VISTA program, Older Americans volunteers and beneficiaries of the Older Americans volunteer program, national and local volunteer organizations, antipoverty organizations, national and local older individuals organizations, and other public and private organizations, groups, and individuals interested in serving programs or benefited by programs carried out by this Act. The Director shall assure that there will be an equitable distribution of members representing both the public and private sector.

"(2) The Director and Deputy Director of the ACTION Agency shall be ex officio members of the Council.

"(b) The Council shall—

"(1) advise the Director with respect to policy matters arising in the administration of this Act; and

"(2) upon the request of the Director, review the effectiveness and the operation of programs under this Act and make recommendations (including such proposals for changes in this Act as the Council deems appropriate) concerning (A) the improvement of such programs, (B) the elimination of duplication of effort, and (C) the coordination of such programs with other Federal programs designed to assist the beneficiaries of this Act.

"(c)(1) Members of the Council shall serve for two-year terms. No individual shall serve for more than two consecutive terms.

"(2) The Council shall meet at least twice, but not more than four times, each year.

"(3) Members of the Council, other than individuals regularly employed by the Federal Government shall, while away from their homes or regular places of business, be paid travel expenses (including per diem in lieu of subsistence) as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons in the Government service employed intermittently.

"(d) Each member of the Council shall, pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Director, disclose any financial interest of the member with respect to any matter before the Council.

"(2) No member of the Council may participate in any decision or action taken by the Council with respect to any matter in which the member has a financial interest required to be disclosed pursuant to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

"(e)(1) The Director shall designate a temporary chairperson from among the members of the Council and shall call the initial meeting of the Council within 30 days after appointment of such Council. Members of the Council shall designate a permanent chairperson from among the members of the Council and shall meet at the call of the chairperson.

"(2) All meetings of the Council shall be open to the public and the Council shall provide notice as to the time, place, and purpose of each such meeting.

"(f) Not later than January 1 of each calendar year, the Council shall make an annual report of its findings and recommendations to the President for transmittal by the President to the Congress, together with his comments and recommendations. The Council may make such interim reports of its findings and recommendations as the Council deems appropriate.".

(b) Title IV of the table of contents of the Act is amended by inserting after item "Sec. 404." the following new item:

"Sec. 405. National Voluntary Service Advisory Council.".

EVALUATION

SEC. 8. Section 416(a) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Director shall measure and evaluate the impact of all programs authorized by this Act, their effectiveness in achieving stated goals, in general, and in relation to their cost, their impact on related programs, and their structure and mechanism for delivery of services. Each program shall be evaluated at least once every four years. Evaluations shall be conducted by persons not immediately involved in the administration of the program or project evaluated.".

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, before we proceed with this bill, I want to point out some errors that appeared in the committee report to accompany S. 2324. Staff members on both sides of the aisle are to be commended for their hard work during what was to have been their recess. Many staff members rearranged their vacations in order to have the committee report filed in time to consider this bill today. I am grateful for their efforts and their cooperation. The errors that are contained in Senate Report No. 99-332 are inadvertent and normally would have been spotted and corrected by the Labor and Human Resources Committee editor, James Powell. But Jim spent the Fourth of July vacation recuperating from a broken leg. He was sorely missed and we are glad that he is back with us.

The most obvious mistake was that the names of the committee members who signed the additional views on S. 2324 were not listed in the committee report. It is my understanding that the additional views were signed by the minority members of the Labor and Human Resources Committee.

The committee report should have noted that the additional views were signed by Senators KENNEDY, PELL, METZENBAUM, MATSUNAGA, DODD, SIMON, and KERRY.

Mr. President, we are in the process of correcting this mistake through an errata sheet that will be distributed with the report.

Mr. President, S. 2324 establishes new authority for the Director of ACTION for the enrollment of nonstipended volunteers in the Foster Grandparent and Senior Companion Programs. However, this authority has been substantially modified since the original introduction of S. 2324 and I wish to take this opportunity to explain the committee's intent regarding this new authority.

This authority was given so as to expand the ability of the Older American Volunteer Program to tap the resources of older Americans willing to donate their time and talents to serve the community. Traditionally, the Foster Grandparent and Senior Companion Programs have limited their enrollment to the low-income elderly who receive a small stipend for the 20 hours a week that they serve and individuals with higher incomes who are willing to serve without stipend volunteer through the RSVP Program.

Because of the desire by committee members to preserve the low-income aspect of the Senior Companion and Foster Grandparent Programs, the enrollment of nonstipended volunteers is limited to those communities where a Retired Senior Volunteer Program is not available.

The Retired Senior Volunteer Program differs from the other two Older American Volunteer Programs in that it does not have an income requirement for its volunteers. Since it has a long history and administrative mechanism already established that can utilize the resources of nonstipended volunteers, it is the committee's intention that older Americans who do not meet the low-income criteria yet want to volunteer their time and talents to work in Foster Grandparent and Senior Companion type activities should be directed instead to existing RSVP programs. But it is my understanding that the RSVP directors will place these willing volunteers in programs serving the frail elderly or children with special needs upon request. Mr. President, I would like the opinion of my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], who is the ranking minority member on the committee.

Mr. KENNEDY. That is my understanding. Senator DODD offered the amendment which was accepted unanimously in committee to direct older Americans who do not meet the low-income criteria to existing RSVP programs. And such RSVP volunteers who wish to work with special needs children or the frail elderly will be allowed to do so. This has already occurred in a number of communities. However, not all communities have an RSVP program to which they can refer these willing volunteers. Therefore the authority for nonstipended volunteers in the Senior Companion and Foster Grandparent Programs is intended as a method to tap this valuable resource of older volunteers. The bill contains several provisions designed to ensure that the nonstipended volunteers will not adversely affect the low-income stipended volunteer, including a prohibition on Federal appropriations being diverted to pay for the administrative expenses associated with the supervision of the nonstipended volunteer, and a prohibition against using participation in this program as a criteria for grant award. The bill also prohibits the Director from requiring directors of local projects to solicit private sector contributions.

Mr. President, I wish to stress that we intend that the decision whether or not to enroll nonstipended volunteers in the Foster Grandparent and Senior Companion Programs is entirely up to the discretion of the local project director. No local volunteer project should fear that they will be in any way penalized for their decision to expand their program to accept the nonstipended volunteer.

I want to also point out that since we do not want to divert any of the scarce Federal resources away from the low-income volunteer, we have prohibited Federal appropriations from being used to pay the administrative costs associated with supervising these nonstipended volunteers. Naturally, a nonstipended volunteer is not cost free, and there will be additional administrative costs associated with their enrollment, but the bill directs that these costs should be borne by the Directors' gift fund, locally donated contributions that exceed the required match or even contributions by the nonstipended volunteers themselves.

Mr. President, I extend my congratulations to the Senator from Utah and thank the members of the committee for the strong bipartisan support that we have had in bringing this measure to the Senate floor.

We have just returned from a legislative recess and the Senate is not crowded. However, I know the Senator from Utah, myself, and the other members of the committee, feel very strongly that this is important legislation that deserves swift action today.

Mr. President, I will take a moment of the Senator's time to speak briefly on this bill.

Mr. President, we are considering legislation to provide reauthorization of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act which includes the VISTA Program, and the Older American Volunteer Programs which are so vital to thousands of individuals who receive critical assistance from our Nation's volunteers.

The VISTA Program has been a triumph of self-help for America's poor and represents the tireless work and dedication of committed and unselfish citizens who have been a part of VISTA over the past 20 years.

VISTA volunteers provide service and community activities that help reduce or eliminate poverty and poverty-related problems, such as homelessness, illiteracy, and enemployment.

VISTA is a proven effective program that has helped thousands of individuals out of poverty over its 20-year history.

The Retired Senior Volunteer Program provides volunteer opportunities for senior citizens through a wide range of activities, including youth counseling, drug abuse prevention, and illiteracy. The Foster Grandparent Program provides developmentally disabled children with a volunteer senior companion and the Senior Companion Program provides our frail and elderly citizens with in-home care and assistance.

All these programs utilize vital, largely untapped American resources—our senior citizens.

The volunteer programs under the ACTION Agency provide a hand up, not a handout to thousands of low-income families and senior citizens across the country.

Mr. President, the United States is facing a serious crisis. We are experiencing serious problems and many citizens are suffering. There are 34 million poor Americans in this country. One out of every four children under the age of 6 lives in poverty. Over 20 million Americans are hungry.

The programs under the ACTION Agencies are needed today more than ever. By reauthorizing the Domestic Volunteer Service Act today we will send a message of hope to millions of Americans who can benefit from these important services as we reaffirm our support for the thousands of volunteers who devote their time and their energy to helping fellow citizens in need.

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I urge my Senate colleagues to join me in supporting S. 2324, legislation to reauthorize the Domestic Service Volunteer Act. ACTION was established in 1971 as the Federal agency for volunteer service. It has been very successful in its mission to advocate, promote, and support the voluntary efforts of citizens and public and private organizations in solving vital problems confronting the poor, the disabled, the elderly and youth with special needs.

The VISTA Program, Volunteers in Service to America, strives to alleviate poverty by enabling individuals to perform meaningful and constructive volunteer service. VISTA volunteers direct their efforts at problems of hunger, homelessness, illiteracy, unemployment, drug and alcohol abuse, domestic violence and child abuse and the needs of low-income seniors and the handicapped.

The older american volunteer programs, which include Senior Companions, Foster Grandparents, and the Retired Senior Volunteer Program, provide opportunities for older citizens to utilize their skills and talents while serving their communities. Last year over 400,000 older volunteers served the ill, the frail, the isolated elderly and the young people who are emotionally, mentally or physically disabled.

The 383,000 volunteers in the 749 RSVP programs make significant contributions in local efforts to address community needs. The RSVP program has been involved in youth counseling, literacy enhancement, long-term care in nursing homes, and crime prevention.

According to ACTION, about 17,300 foster grandparents assist over 62,000 children on a given day in all 50 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. These foster grandparents are part of an interdisciplinary team which helps to alleviate the problems faced by these special children through supportive, person to person services with a healthy emphasis that develops between a child and an older adult.

Senior companions volunteer their time and effort to help their peers, older individuals who have physical, mental, or emotional impairments which put them at risk of being institutionalized. There are currently 7,300 volunteers in 97 senior companion programs. Given the tremendous need for older volunteers to moderate the consequences of growing old alone, frail and afraid, I am helpful that the House and Senate Appropriations Committees will provide full funding for this important program.

Mr. President, S. 2324 contains several important modifications to the Domestic Service Volunteer Act. First it provides a statement of purpose for the ACTION Agency as a whole. While subordinate programs under ACTION have statements of purpose and intent, the Agency has lacked an overall comprehensively stated purpose and mission in its legislation.

The bill expands VISTA's role in combating illiteracy by establishing a new literacy component within VISTA. The literacy corps would be authorized at $2 million in fiscal year 1987, $3 million in fiscal year 1988 and $5 million in fiscal year 1989. The bill also continues a requirement that the title I part A VISTA programs receive funding sufficient to continue 2,400 volunteer service years before other title I programs are funded. The bill provides for level funding of the title I service learning and demonstration programs in fiscal years 1988 and 1989, but authorized funding for title I part A VISTA programs is $25 million, a substantial increase over current funding and it is increased by 3 percent each subsequent fiscal year.

The bill also reauthorizes the older American volunteer programs through fiscal year 1989. The Retired Senior Volunteer Program is reauthorized at a level of $31,100,000 for fiscal year 1987, $32,033,000 for fiscal year 1988 and $32,990,000 for fiscal year 1989.

The Senior Companion Program is authorized at $28,600,000 for fiscal year 1987, $29,458,000 for fiscal year 1988 and $30,341,740 for fiscal year 1989. The Foster Grandparent Program is authorized at $58,700,000 for fiscal year 1987, $60,461,000 for 1988 and $62,274,830 for 1989.

The bill reestablishes a National Voluntary Service Advisory Council to advise the Director on policy matters associated with the administration of programs under this act, including recommendations concerning how to improve such programs, eliminate any duplication of effort and coordinate programs with other Federal programs. The bill specifies that the 25 members selected to serve on the Council be representative of local and national poverty, older American, and volunteer organizations including volunteers and beneficiaries of VISTA and older American volunteer programs. Members of the Council serve for 2 year terms with no individual serving more than two consecutive terms. The Council is directed to meet at least twice but not more than four times a year, with Council members reimbursed for their travel expenses. Council members are required to disclose any financial interest they may have in any matter before the Council and are prohibited from participating in any action taken by the Council in which they might have a conflict of interest.

The bill directs the Agency to measure and evaluate impact and effectiveness of all programs authorized by this act at least once every 4 years. The bill also makes technical amendments to the act to ensure that it is gender neutral.

Mr. President, the legislation that the Labor and Human Resources Committee has developed to reauthorize the Domestic Service Volunteer Act is an important step in mobilizing the vast resources of volunteers in our Nation. I urge my Senate colleagues to support S. 2324.●

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, unfortunately there was an error printed in the Senate Report No. 99-332 filed on July 8, 1986, to accompany S. 2324, the reauthorization of the ACTION programs.

In the summary of the legislation, it states that:

The Director of ACTION is authorized to develop regulations in which older individuals who do not meet the income criteria may be enrolled in Foster Grandparent or Senior Companion Programs if a Retired Senior Volunteer Program is not available in their community or those programs do not serve the frail elderly or disadvantaged children populations.

However, the phrase "* * * or those programs do not serve the frail elderly or disadvantaged children populations" was erroneously included and should be struck from the report.

The bill reported by the Committee on Labor and Human Resources and agreed to by the members states clearly that nonstipened volunteers are only allowed to serve in Foster Grandparent or Senior Companion Programs if a Retired Senior Volunteer Program is not available in their community. I would like to ask my distinguished colleague from Florida to corroborate this. She chairs the Subcommittee on Children, Family Drugs and Alcoholism on which I serve as ranking minority member. I would also like the distinguished ranking minority member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Mr. KENNEDY, and the distinguished chairman of the committee, Mr. HATCH, for their views on this.

Mrs. HAWKINS. The bill as reported by committee is clear on this point.

Mr. KENNEDY. I concur with my colleagues from Connecticut and Florida about the bill as reported out of committee and agree we should delete the erroneous report language before the legislation is adopted on the floor.

Mr. HATCH. As floor manager of the bill, I can assert that my colleague from Connecticut has given an accurate reading of the bill as reported from committee. I thank him for raising this matter and pointing out the erroneous language which appeared in report 99-332. That error now stands corrected.●

AMENDMENT NO. 2198

(Purpose: To evaluate the impact of programs supported by the ACTION Agency relating to services that assist families caring for frail and disabled adult family members.)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Senators GLENN, HAWKINS, PRYOR, DODD, and BINGAMAN, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk reas as follows:

The Senator from Utah (Mr. HATCH), FOR MR. GLENN, MRS. HAWKINS, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. DODD, and Mr. BINGAMAN, proposes an amendment numbered 2198.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follow:

On page 22, line 20, insert "(1)" after "(a)".

On page 23, line 2, strike the end quotation marks and the period the second time it appears.

On page 23, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

"(2) Director shall evaluate and report to the Congress not later than December 31, 1989, at a cost of not to exceed $250,000, on the impact of ACTION Agency programs relating to services that assist families caring for frail and disabled adult family members. The evaluation study required by this paragraph shall include information on—

"(A) the range and extent of service needs of, and the services provided to, family caregivers assisted by volunteers;

"(B) the characterics of volunteers and the skills, training, and supervision necessary to provide various types of volunteer assistance to family caregivers;

"(C) administrative costs, including recruitment, training, and supervision costs, associated with volunteer assistance to family caregivers; and

"(D) such other issues as may be relevant to provide services to assist family caregivers.".

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to S. 2324, The Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1986, reauthorizing ACTION Agency programs. I am pleased to be joined today by Senators HAWKINS, and DODD, the distinguished chairperson and ranking member of the Subcommittee on Children, Family, Drugs and Alcoholism, which has jurisdiction over the ACTION Agency. Also joining me in offering this amendment are Senators PRYOR and BINGAMAN, my distinguished colleagues on the Special Committee on Aging.

My amendment will require ACTION, as part of its obligation to evaluate the programs it administers, to exmine the aspects of their programs which provide volunteer support or assistance to families who are caring for their frail and disabled adult members. This study will focus on the Older Americans Volunteer Programs [OAVP] particularly the Senior Companion Programs [SCP] and the Retired Senior Volunteer Program [RSVP]. Volunteers from these programs provide a variety of services to assist family caregivers to ease the stress and burden of caregiving.

An estimated 80 percent of the long-term care needs of the elderly and disabled population are provided by informal caregivers. In other words, most of the care in this Nation is provided by family and friends and others on a voluntary basis; not by local, State, or Federal Government or social service agencies. For many caregivers, this is a round-the-clock responsibility that often leaves them emotionally and physically exhausted.

The availability of assistance by community volunteers may make a tremendous difference in the ability of individual families to continue to provide care, rather than be forced to place their loved ones in a nursing home or some other institutional setting. By relieving the stress of the caregiver, volunteers may play a role in reducing incidents of abuse or neglect of the frail or disabled by family members. I say volunteers may do these things because, at this time, very little is known about the impact of volunteers.

ACTION programs have an impressive history of success in utilizing volunteers of all ages in providing a wide range of service to their communities. Unfortunately, however, little is known about the impact of volunteers who provide services which assist family caregivers. In fact, ACTION does not know the full range or scope of services its volunteers provide to assist the family caregiver. Careful examination of these supportive services is important. As funding sources become increasingly restrained, and as our population becomes increasingly older, there will undoubtedly be greater demand for volunteers to provide these vital services. Assisting family caregivers is an extremely demanding and stressful volunteer role, and it is crucial that we learn as much about it as possible.

It is assumed that ACTION volunteers provide a wide array of services to family caregivers, including respite care, homemaking services, meal preparation, personal care, handyman services such as building ramps in the home for those who are wheelchair-bound, and companionship. My amendment will provide answers to questions such as: What services are in the greatest demand? Does assistance from volunteers reduce stress and enable families to continue their caregiving? What training or skills can improve the services provided by volunteers and how are they best recruited and supervised? What factors contribute to high attrition rates, and how can volunteer burn-out be reduced? Furthermore, we need information about the characteristics of those who serve as volunteers in this role, such as information about demographics (for example age, sex), rural versus urban distribution, economic standing and types of incentives most beneficial to volunteers.

The ACTION programs represent a great deal of direct experience with volunteers who assist family caregivers. In undertaking this study, it is my expectation that ACTION will call upon those who actually run these programs to assist in the design of the study—not only do they have the best knowledge of volunteers but they also will face the challenge of gathering the information for this study. I expect that ACTION will utilize the expertise of the associations that represent their programs, such as the National Association of RSVP Directors and the National Association of SCP Directors in implementing this amendment. I also wish to emphasize that this study is not intended to replace or substitute other evaluation projects of ACTION, but rather to supplement and enhance current efforts.

ACTION's long-time involvement in volunteer services should provide a wealth of information that deserves close study. It is time that this information is gathered and analyzed to help us in examining policy issues related to meeting the long-term care needs of our Nation's elderly and disabled. I believe that this amendment will provide us with much better insight into ways to encourage and support the tens of thousands of families who face great challenges in caring for those they love.●

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I support Senator GLENN's amendment to S. 2324 which would require ACTION to evaluate the impact of ACTION programs that assist family caregivers. The assistance given by VISTA volunteers, by Senior Companions and RSVP volunteers to frail and disabled adults is an important component of these volunteer programs.

I agree that it would be beneficial to have information on the range and extent of the service needs of family caregivers that are assisted by the ACTION volunteers, the services provided to these families, the skills, training, and supervision necessary to provide the various types of volunteer assistance to family caregivers, the administrative costs associated with volunteer assistance to family caregivers, and other issues that the Director determines may be relevant to provide services to assist family caregivers.

Mr. President, I support the Glenn amendment to S. 2324.●

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this amendment requires the Director of the ACTION Agency to conduct a study on the impact of ACTION Agency programs related to services that assist families caring for elderly and disabled family members.

We are all aware of the human benefits as well as the cost savings involved in providing support for elderly and disabled individuals to remain at home. I think it is important that we also concentrate assistance and help to those family members who are providing care to these individuals.

The volunteer programs under the ACTION Agency provide services to frail and elderly individuals and disabled adults. This study will tell us what volunteer services are being focused on the family caregivers, the skills needed by volunteers helping these families, and the range of services now available to these families.

Support to elderly and disabled adults living at home is crucial. Aid and support to families who care for these individuals at home can often be the one saving factor to providing a home environment for the elderly and disabled.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, Senators GLENN, HAWKINS, and others are offering an amendment which has been accepted on both sides. It will require the Director of the ACTION Agency to evaluate the effectiveness of volunteers as caregivers for frail and disabled adult family members. This evaluation cannot exceed and shall not exceed $250,000. It is to be completed by December 31, 1989.

I move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I do want to indicate that I think this kind of a study is useful in determining the efficacy, the efficiency, and the soundness of providing volunteer assistance to family caregivers. With this information, it may be possible to expand this type of volunteer service to family caregivers across the country.

These activities are currently taking place to a limited degree within the existing legislation. An assessment and evaluation of the effectiveness of these current volunteer efforts is the key to having such a program expanded at a time when hopefully we have some additional resources to be able to do so.

I think it is a useful addition to the legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2198) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as the Senate author of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973, Public Law 93-113, and several laws amending it, I am pleased to support this legislation reauthorizing appropriations for the domestic volunteer programs authorized under the 1973 act. The legislation before the Senate today, S. 2324, provides a 3-year extension of the authorization of appropriations for the VISTA Program and the Older American Volunteer Programs—RSVP, Foster Grandparents, and Senior Companions—as well as other activites carried out by the ACTION Agency.

Throughout my service in the Senate, I have been closely involved with these successful and vital programs. As the chairman of the authorizing subcommittee from 1971 through 1980, I had the privilege of authoring much of the legislation relating to these programs that came before the Senate during that period. These programs and the volunteers who breath life into them continue to represent the finest instincts of the American people—caring and compassion for those less fortunate and the willingness to volunteer to help each other. Through these programs, volunteers have shared their time, their energy, and their resourcefulness for the betterment of their communities and our society.

Mr. President, each of the domestic volunteer programs is unique. VISTA, the oldest of these programs, has provided tens of thousands of men and women with the opportunity to be of service to America. Since this program's inception more than two decades ago, VISTA volunteers have worked to reduce poverty and the devastating conditions of poverty such as homelessness, illiteracy, and joblessness. VISTA is a proven, successful endeavor to match volunteers who have the energy and the will to serve with those individuals and communities in need of their talents. There are an average of 150 VISTA volunteers serving each year in my own State of California. Over the last 20 years, thousands of Californians have served in the VISTA ranks.

Of equal success have been the three other older American volunteer programs which have enjoyed remarkably strong support from their start. Since 1969, the RSVP Program has provided retired men and women of public spirit with volunteer opportunities within their communities. These volunteers serve part time in a great variety of settings, involving services such as youth counseling, tutoring in reading and writing, crime prevention, and refugee assistance.

Included also among the older American volunteer programs are the Foster Grandparents and Senior Companion programs. Both of these programs provide to older Americans who possess the public spirit, but not the financial means, a modest stipend to enable them to volunteer in part-time positions assisting others, low-income individuals. Foster grandparents help children with emotional, mental, or physical disabilities, and for some children they may be the first person in their lives to show concern and to provide warmth and guidance to them.

Mr. President, it is especially gratifying for me to see the growth of the newest of these programs, the Senior Companions Program. Established in 1973 through legislation that I authored as chairman of the authorizing subcommittee, its success has been truly rewarding. As Senior Companions, older volunteers help elderly, frail men and women in a number of daily tasks and provide them human contact so that neglect and loneliness do not drive them from their homes into institutions.

Mr. President, with respect to the Foster Grandparent and Senior Companion programs I note that this legislation includes provisions to allow older persons who are not needy to participate. The committee bill limitations on the participation of nonneedy volunteers in these two programs reflect a legitimate concern that a fundamental purpose of these programs—to help alleviate the conditions of poverty among the volunteers as they themselves help others in need—would be otherwise endangered. The language relating to this matter apparently reflects a compromise aimed at preserving a vital objective of these programs. The option of enrolling this new category of volunteers would be available only where an RSVP Program does not already exist. RSVP, of course, is open to volunteers of all income levels and does not provide stipends. Despite this compromise, I have strong reservations about the wisdom of allowing such a fundamental change in the nature of the Foster Grandparents and Senior Companion Programs.

Mr. President, I am pleased to see the strong bipartisan support for these four important volunteer programs. They have earned that support through decades of democratic success.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today we are trying to gain passage of the Federal ACTION Agency program. These are really important programs that are committee overviews and which I as chairman of the committee have to work with all the time. Of course, I am very pleased to work with Senator KENNEDY and others in making sure that these programs continue.

Mr. President, today I am pleased to request Senate consideration to the reauthorization of Federal ACTION Agency programs. Through the Federal ACTION Agency, voluntarism is promoted throughout America. Volunteers recruited through these programs help children in our cities; assist frail elderly within their homes, and provide volunteers throughout America with a sense of helping and sharing their good will.

The legislation under consideration today is S. 2324. Sponsored by Senator PAULA HAWKINS, this bill was unanimously reported from the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources on June 25, 1986. During a time when Federal resources are becoming more scarce, this legislation makes creative adjustments to ensure no reduction in volunteer efforts. This legislation continues to support volunteers who help people. In so doing, there has been some compromising—some readjustment in administrative costs; some flexibility in allowing the Federal Agency to fund raise; and greater administrative decisionmaking at the local project level. However, these proposals in no way diminish the Federal support for ACTION volunteers. In fact, they strengthen their longevity at a time when our discussion for most Federal programs turns to how can we trim and refine.

Let me take a moment and discuss the specifics. The bill would reauthorize the 3 years the VISTA Program, Service Learning and Demostration Programs, the Retired Senior Volunteer Program, the Foster Grandparent Program, and the Senior Companion Program. The Volunteers in Service to America Program [VISTA], gives opportunities for persons of all ages to serve the disadvantaged in their community. VISTA volunteers are providing service to the homeless, the jobless, the hungry, the illiterate, and persons with special needs relating to alcohol and substance abuse. The legislation projects the funding for VISTA volunteers by maintaining a floor of 2,400 volunteer service-years for the next 3 years.

Through the Senior Companion Program [SCP], low-income senior companions are helping thousands of their homebound peers maintain independent living, through a new authority I worked to establish in 1983. Trained Senior Companions serve in acute-care discharge and respite-care settings and assist psychologically disabled elderly, homebound elderly living alone, terminally ill and elderly with substance abuse problems.

The Retired Senior Volunteer Program [RSVP], sponsors volunteers who serve through nonprofit organizations and local public agencies in more than one-third of the Nation's counties. They contribute to the community by serving youth in operating runaway shelters and emergency food banks, organizing support groups and offering occupational counseling to juvenile offenders, to name but a few of their activities.

The Foster Grandparent Program [FGP], perhaps the best known of ACTION's programs, has volunteers who serve youth in need by working in schools for mentally retarded, disturbed, and learning-disabled children, Head Start Program, juvenile detention centers; in boarding schools and foster care homes, and in some cases in the child's home.

S. 2324 provides for an authorization of $25 million for VISTA in 1987, $2 million for a new literacy corps component for VISTA, $1,800,000 for service learning activities and $1,984,000 for citizen participation and demonstration activities. The VISTA title I programs are increased by 3 percent in outyear funding.

The authorization levels for fiscal year 1987 for the older American volunteer programs are $31,100,000 for RSVP Program, $58,700,000 for the Foster Grandparent Program, and $28,600,000 for the Senior Companion Program. The programs are increased by 3 percent in outyear funding.

Further the bill establishes new authority for the Director of ACTION for the enrollment of nonstipended volunteers in the Foster Grandparent and Senior Companion programs. The Director is authorized to develop regulations in which older individuals who do not meet the income criteria may be enrolled in Foster Grandparent or Senior Companion programs in a Retired Senior Volunteer Program is not available in their community. The bill contains several provisions designed to ensure that the nonstipended volunteers will not adversely affect the low-income stipended volunteer, including a prohibition on Federal appropriations being diverted to pay for the administrative expenses associated with the supervision of the nonstipended volunteer, and a prohibition against using participation in this program as a criteria for grant award.

S. 2324 also establishes a National Voluntary Service Advisory Council to advise the Director on policy matters.

I want to take this opportunity to thank Senator HAWKINS for the development of this bipartisan legislation and for her leadership. I applaud her unflagging support of these programs. I also want to thank Senators DODD, SIMON, and GRASSLEY for the fine tuning amendments they offered.

I urge my colleagues to support S. 2324 as amended.

Mr. President, I call up H.R. 4116.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill is discharged from the committee.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, what is the request?

Mr. HATCH. I am calling up H.R. 4116 at this time. I move to strike all after the enacting clause and substitute this bill, S. 6343.

Mr. BYRD. That is the companion bill to the Senate bill?

Mr. HATCH. That is correct, Mr. President.

Mr. BYRD. I have no objection.

Mr. HATCH. I call up H.R. 4116.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill is discharged from the committee.

The Senate will proceed to its consideration. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4116) to extend and improve the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to strike all after the enacting clause and insert the text of S. 2324.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote on that action.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

HUMAN SERVICES REAUTHORIZATION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today we are considering legislation which reauthorizes four programs that are critical to millions of needy children and families across this country. The bill we are considering authorizes the Head Start Program, the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program, the Community Services Block Grant Program, and the dependent care block grant, and I urge its swift passage.

HEAD START

Head Start is a comprehensive child development program for disadvantaged 3- and 4-year-old children that utilizes the skills of parents, teachers, and volunteers. The over 22,000 Head Start programs across the country provide 452,000 disadvantaged children with the necessary education, health, and support services they need to get an even start with other children in school. Head Start also equips parents with the resources they need to insure that their children are healthy both physically and developmentally.

We know that the Head Start Program is successful and that it is cost effective. A recently released 20-year followup study of students who attended a preschool program like Head Start showed the positive results of preschool programs. The study documented the success of preschool graduates compared to their peers on standardized tests, in college, and on the job.

Head Start works and Congress has a responsibility to authorize this successful program for 4 more years. This proven program is now only serving about 18 percent of the poor children in this country who need its services. At the very least, we should maintain current services capacity.

LOW-INCOME ENERGY

The Low-Income Energy Assistance Program provides aid to 6.8 million eligible households for home heating and cooling, weatherization, and energy-related emergencies. This aid has been a vital lifeline for millions of senior citizens and economically disadvantaged families who are unable to meet the expenses of heating their homes. Many times this aid has saved the lives of elderly citizens who often risk death by not turning on their heat in the winter because they were unable to pay. And, many older Americans have not escaped death because they attempted to stay warm without heat in their apartments.

It is clear that the LIHEAP assistance is vital to low-income families and our Nation's elderly. Our legislation continues this critical aid for 4 more years.

COMMUNITY SERVICES BLOCK GRANT

The community services block grant helps local community action agencies implement many of the existing anti-poverty programs at the local level. Community action programs help to improve the standard of living for our Nation's poor people and are able to respond to local community needs. Many of the proven poverty programs such as Head Start and the Low-Income Energy Assistance Program are implemented through local community action agencies.

CSBG also offers many local programs which work to alleviate the causes of poverty. Emphasis is placed on ensuring that all individuals become self-sufficient and are able to enter the mainstream of life in their community. Some of these services include assisting people to secure and retain meaningful employment, to attain an adequate education, to obtain and maintain adequate housing, and to achieve greater participation in community affairs. The Human Resources Act requests funding that will merely maintain the current programs under CSBG and which will continue these important services through 1990.

DEPENDENT CARE

Last, our bill calls for the reauthorization of the dependent care block grant which encourages the use of public school buildings for pre- and after-school care for schoolage children between ages of 5 and 13 years. The changing demographics of our society show us that of all mothers with children under the age of 18 years, 59 percent were in the labor force in 1982. No longer can mothers greet their children as they come home from school each day. In increasing numbers, mothers are working in order to provide a decent standard of living for their families. Many women are the sole wage earner in a family and many women provide the critical needed supplement to their husband's earnings. The dependent care block grant provides the necessary incentive for the development of after-school care programs for our young children whose parents are working to make their future brighter. Funding for the development of child care information and referral services is also included in the dependent care block grant.

Just this year, Congress reaffirmed its commitment to the dependent care programs by providing $5 million in the 1986 appropriations. Our reauthorization request asks for small authorization increases so that these valuable activities will continue to help young Americans and their families.

I hope that at a very early time we will have an opportunity to run through the parliamentary situation in such a way that we can favorably consider the legislation.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, before I move final passage of H.R. 4116, I understand the distinguished Senator from Illinois would like to make some comments about the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the committee and the ranking member, Senator KENNEDY, for their leadership in this whole field.

I am pleased that we are moving ahead on the VISTA Program. The VISTA Program really is important and there are three things, two of which are in the bill, and on one of which we have a commitment from the Director, that I think are important. One is that we have a floor in the VISTA Program so that we can continue to protect the program. The second is one that is a small step of what I hope will be many steps and that is on literacy. VISTA is an ideal entity for us to be using to move ahead on the literacy question. There are now about 112 VISTA literacy projects. Using data from six projects, we can see that on the average one VISTA volunteer has been able to recruit 91 community volunteers, so that in theory—and I am not saying this is going to happen exactly, but in theory we could have 118,000 community volunteers on literacy as a result of this one modification in this bill. I think this is extremely important and let me just add we are just tiptoeing around what is a major national problem. I hope one of these days we assault it the way we should.

Then, finally, we have a letter from the head of the agency saying that we are going to move on recruitment.

My distinguished colleagues were there when I brought out the poster, the only poster they have. It looked like it was a poster for blue jeans. It does not look like it has anything to do with helping the poor. It was obviously a white male. It mentioned nothing about blacks, Hispanics, females, older people helping through the VISTA Program. It is perhaps a minor thing, and yet if you are going to have volunteers, you have to have an adequate recruitment program. And we have a commitment from the Director of the Agency that we will now have an adequate recruitment program. This is a chance to help people who really need help. We ultimately are judged whether we are a civilized society not by whether we help the rich and the powerful but whether we help people who really need it. That is what VISTA is all about, and this is a step forward.

I commend my colleagues for their leadership on this and I appreciate the fact that I have been given a chance to have a little bit of an input on this important program.

Mr. HATCH. I thank my colleague for his comments. He has worked very hard to make this an effective program. I agree with his characterization of the poster. We need to do a better job in the Government today to express and pervade for this tremendous program.

I also want to thank my distinguished colleague, Senator KENNEDY, for the leadership he has given. For many years he has served in the Senate, and addressed programs like this. I think these programs are good ones. And without Senator HAWKINS' leadership, this bill would not be in the form it is today.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I want to also commend the Senator from Illinois for his initiative in this area. I am somewhat distressed that we have not been able to get the letter that we wanted from the administration for 2 weeks but I understand we have assurances that we are going to be able to get it. The Senator from Illinois had an amendment in committee to assure that there will be adequate out-reach efforts so that Americans who want to participate in VISTA may do so. We have seen a very dramatic reduction in the efforts of the ACTION Agency to bring in new people into the VISTA Program. The VISTA commitment and awareness budget was actually zeroed out at one time in 1982. We know that there has been a serious deterioration in the Agency's commitment to promote VISTA. We now have a new Director of the ACTION Agency. I understand the Director has given assurances to the Senator from Illinois, but I want to indicate to my good friend and colleague, Senator SIMON, that he will certainly have all of my support to assure that that Agency is going to meet the kinds of requests that the Senator from Illinois and others have made.

Mr. SIMON. If my colleague will yield, I have not seen the letter but I understand the——

Mr. HATCH. The letter is in the report.

Mr. SIMON. You have it?

Mr. HATCH. We have the letter in the report. It is filed on page 13.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will suggest the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest that we dispense with the quorum call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill (H.R. 4116), as amended, was passed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I want to thank all concerned including our staff members: Dr. Marvin Fifield, Nancy Taylor, and Wendy Higginbotham of my staff, Robin Rushton of Senator HAWKINS' staff, Debbie Curtis of Senator KENNEDY's staff, and Marsha Renwanz of Senator DODD's staff, who have done an excellent job on this bill. I think we worked well together, both the majority and the minority. In particular I would like to praise Senator HAWKINS and Senator KENNEDY for the extraordinary work they have done, as well as our other colleagues on the committee.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 2324 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(Later the following occurred.)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendment to H.R. 4116 and request a conference on the disagreeing votes thereon and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer [Mr. GORTON] appointed Mr. HATCH, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. DODD conferees on the part of the Senate.

HUMAN SERVICES REAUTHORIZATION ACT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S.

2444, the Human Services Reauthorization Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2444) to reauthorize the Head Start Act, the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981, the Community Services Block Grant Act, the dependent care State grant program, and for other purposes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today I am pleased to focus full Senate consideration on S. 2444, the Human Services Reauthorization Act. This legislation includes several programs that help our Nation's citizens most in need of support.

The individual programs bundled in the Human Services Reauthorization Act share common objectives. They focus on the community, providing flexible and cost-effective assistance to low-income individuals and families. The programs include the Head Start Act, the Low-Income Energy Assistance Program, the Community Services Block Grant Act, the Dependent Care Development Act, and the Child Development Associate Scholarship Assistance Act. All of these programs have a similar purpose: To assist people to develop their potential and move from continued dependency to self-sufficiency. Much thoughtful care and research went into the preparation of the bill by Senator HAWKINS, members of the Family, Children, Drugs and Alcoholism Subcommittee, and members of the staff.

I want to briefly describe the various programs. First, the Head Start Program has a 20-year history of success. I believe we are all acquainted with this program and the service it provides. S. 2444 makes some adjustments to the funding levels for the Indian and migrant programs and adjusts the training and technical assistance provisions. These are funding ratio adjustments. The authorizing level for Head Start is approximately 4 percent above current appropriations with an additional 4-percent increase in subsequent years.

Second, the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program [LIHEAP] provides grants to States to assist low-income families in meeting the rising cost of home energy. States can help make payments to help households pay their fuel bills for either heating or cooling. Changes contained in S. 2444 clarifies congressional intent that the neediest households in America receive the maximum assistance and also provide greater flexibility in the organizational entities that can administer the State's Energy Crisis Program.

S. 2444 also includes changes in the community services block grant. This program funds antipoverty activities in States. Changes in this program were also made to refine and perfect the act. Provisions are included regulating the process for termination of funding of community action agencies, and clarification as to what types of projects the Secretary of Health and Human Services is authorized to fund from the discretionary fund.

This legislation also continues the Dependent Care Development Grants. This program provides States with incentive grants for the development of after- and before-school child care programs and for the development of resource and referral programs for families wanting information on dependent care programs within their communities. S. 2444 continues the authority for this program at $20 million for 3 years for the development of after- and before-school child care programs either in school facilities or in community facilities. Part of this money also is utilized for resource and referral programs which could provide information on elderly care, handicapped care, and child care programs.

Finally, the Child Development Associate Scholarship Assistance Act will provide scholarships to encourage individuals to pursue Child Development Associate [CDA] credentials. This assistance will not only encourage low-income individuals to gain self-sufficiency but will train them to be high quality child care providers—an area where there is a critical shortage of personnel.

S. 2444 is supported by many of our colleagues, I would like to take a moment and thank especially Senator HAWKINS for the development of this bill, Senator STAFFORD for his expertise on this legislation, Senator DODD for his help in refining this package, and Senator KENNEDY for his continued leadership in these programs.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support S. 2444, the Human Services Reauthorization Act.

(By request of Mr. HATCH, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:)

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I am delighted that the Senate is giving such expedited consideration to S. 2444 today. As reported from committee, S. 2444 amends and extends the Head Start Act, the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act, and the Community Services Block Grant Act through fiscal year 1990. The Dependent Care Act, and the Community Food and Nutrition Act are authorized through fiscal year 1989. In addition, S. 2444 authorizes the funding of two new programs, a demonstration partnership agreement under the community services block grant addressing the needs of the poor authorized at $10 million annually through 1989 and a Child Development Associate Scholarship Act Program authorized at $1.5 million annually through fiscal year 1989.

Authorization levels for Head Start provided in the bill are $1,130,542,000 for fiscal year 1987, $1,175,764,000 for fiscal year 1988, $1,222,795,000 for fiscal year 1989, and $1,271,717,000 for fiscal year 1990. This represents a 4-percent increase over last year's funding level.

Changes to the Head Start Program are minor. The bill eliminates the cost-of-living adjustment for Indian and migrant Head Start staff and specifies that the Indian and migrant programs receive 7.1 percent of the total Head Start funding. The bill specifies that training and technical assistance shall receive 3 percent of the total Head Start funding. The bill clarifies that the Head Start agencies should coordinate their programs with State and local preschool services and child day care programs. The bill also continues through 1990 a prohibition of any administrative revision in Head Start's criteria for eligibility which would result in any reduction in, or exclusion from, participation of persons in the program.

In 1983 and 1984, Senator HATCH took the lead in championing legislation which established a dependent care block grant. Because of his efforts, an amendment to Public Law 98-578, the Human Services Reauthorization Act of 1984, authorized funding for the dependent care programs at $20 million a year through 1986. S. 2444 extends this authorization through 1989. Modifications to the dependent care block were based on Senator HATCH's legislation, S. 2386, and are designed to strengthen and improve the implementation of this act. The bill provides that the listing of the types of information of dependent care services made available by dependent care resource and referral systems are desired rather than required. The bill does require the State to provide assurances that resource and referral programs receiving grant funds under this act will not list programs that are not in compliance with State and local laws and that the information that is provided is complete and kept up to date. S. 2444 eliminates the preference that is contained in the act toward school-based child care programs thus enabling community-based child care providers to compete on an equal basis for funds available under this act. The bill also clarifies the definition of a school-aged child and the types of licensing laws and regulations which grantees must comply with in order to be eligible for Federal financial assistance under this act.

The Low Income Energy Assistance Program is also reauthorized for an additional 4 years. Authorizations for the LIHEAP Progam are $2,163,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, $2,227,890,000 for fiscal year 1988, $2,294,726,000 for fiscal year 1989, and $2,323,567,000 for fiscal year 1990. This represents a 36-percent increase over the previous year's funding and for each subsequent year.

The bill reiterates that LIHEAP payments or allowances can not be used in determining the eligibility of individuals applying for other public assistance programs. It stipulates that community-based organizations such as Agencies on Aging or Community Action Programs are the types of entities which must administer at least a part of the energy crisis portion of the program. The bill provides the Secretary with more flexibility in the manner in which he determines the amount of a grant to Indian tribes. S. 2444 reorganizes the requirements for the annual application that the States must submit each year and includes new language to stress that the neediest households receive maximum assistance under LIHEAP. I am very grateful to Senator STAFFORD and his staff for their assistance in developing this section of S. 2444.

The community services block grant has been the subject of a great deal of criticism and controversy. After reviewing the testimony presented before my subcommittee and the General Accounting Office report on the role and activities of the community service block grant, I support the continued funding of this program. Therefore the authorization levels for the community services block grant are $381,409,000 for fiscal year 1987, $392,851,000 for fiscal year 1988, $404,636,000 for fiscal year 1989, and $416,775,000 for fiscal year 1990. The Community Food and Nutrition Program is authorized at $2.5 million annually through 1989 and a new program for the development and implementation of innovative approaches to the poor is authorized at $10 million annually through 1989.

The definition of an entity eligible to receive funds under this block grant is expanded and the provisions regarding transfer of up to 5 percent of States allotment of CSBG funds is clarified. The bill modifies the duties of the Secretary regarding a proposal of a State to terminate funding to an entity. The bill requires the Secretary to assume funding to an eligibility entity if a State terminates funding prior to completion of its own procedures and requires the Secretary to provide a written review including the reasons for approving or disapproving the State's action in terminating funding to an eligible entity. S. 2444 increases the areas of evaluation and fiscal review that the Secretary of HHS should cover in their review of the States compliance with the provisions of the act. It requires the Secretary to evaluate how the grants given under this act are impacting on children, homeless families and elderly poor. The Secretary shall send recommendations to the States on how to enhance their programs serving the disadvantaged and the States will be required to submit a plan of action on how they will act upon the Secretary's recommendations.

The legislation details the authorized uses of the Secretary's discretionary funds under the CSBG, clarifies what is meant by a community development corporation, and directs the Secretary to give special priority to rural community assistance programs under the special emphasis program on rural housing and community facilities development. S. 2444 directs the Secretary to reserve $100,000 from administrative expenses to fund a national conference that will review the past approaches to problems of poverty and develop strategy for future approaches. The bill directs the Secretary to provide a summary of projects funded under the discretionary grants, including a list of grantees who received their awards outside of the competitive process and submit this list annually to the chairmen of the House and Senate committees of jurisdiction over CSBG.

CHILD DEVELOPMENT ASSOCIATE SCHOLARSHIP ACT

A new program of scholarships for candidates for a Child Development Association credential is authorized at $1.5 million annually through 1990. S. 2444 sets forth the criteria for eligibility for the scholarships, the assurances that the State applying for the grants must give to the Secretary and specifies the manner in which the Secretary shall distribute these funds to the States and territories. The bill requires the States receiving grants under this act to submit an annual report detailing the number of individuals receiving assistance under this act and how the CDA credential improved the candidates financial status.

Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to thank all the Senators who worked with me to develop this legislation. Senator HATCH, Senator STAFFORD, Senator KENNEDY, and Senator DODD all made major contributions to the development of this bill. I also want to thank certain staff members whose work on this bill went far beyond the call of duty. Nancy Taylor and Mike Francis in particular put in long hours to ensure that this reauthorization legislation improved this important human service programs.

Mr. President, S. 2444, was favorably reported by the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee on May 20 without any dissent. It is supported by a bipartisan majority of members of the committee, and I hope my colleagues in the Senate will give this bill their support.●

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, S. 2444 the Human Services Reauthorization Act provides critical services to economically disadvantaged citizens by reauthorizing four programs essential to their well being: Head Start, Low Income Home Energy Assistance, the Community Services Block Grant, and the Dependent Care Block Grant.

The Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program has proven absolutely vital to the health and well being of our Nation's poor and elderly. The LIHEAP Program provides aid to eligible individuals for home heating, cooling, weatherization and energy related emergencies. Last year this program served approximately 7 million households, yet over 20 million households were eligible for aid according to the eligibility criteria. The administration in a recent letter called the LIHEAP funding levels in this act, "excessive." I find such comments unconscionable at a time when we as law makers are witnessing a Federal program that is only able to serve one-third of its eligible population, thus forcing the States to choose between the very neediest of the needy. Although the program does not fully absorb the cost of home heating and cooling for low income households, LIHEAP payments do however offset high energy related costs so that badly needed resources can be used for other essential needs.

Poverty has many different causes and certainly requires different remedies. The Community Services Block Grant begins to address the range of problems associated with poverty. Through nutrition and transportation programs, housing and employment services, as well as education, outreach, information and referral, CSBG succeeds in filling in the gaps. More importantly, the CSBG Program helps to improve the standard of living of low-income persons and to encourage self-sufficiency and increased community involvement. Despite the proven track record of the CSBG Program, the Reagan administration opposes its continuation and for the fourth year in a row this administration has proposed to eliminate the program and has recommended that it be combined with the Social Services Block Grant. In the past 4 years Congress has wisely ignored the administration's request and continued this important program which helps indigent individuals become self-sufficient. I feel certain that today Members of the U.S. Senate will reaffirm their commitment to this critical program by voting for full funding of the CSBG Program.

The Head Start Program also has a proven track record. Head Start is a comprehensive development program for economically disadvantaged preschoolers which provides essential education and health support to prepare less fortunate children so that they can enter the school system on the same equal basis as their peers. Over the past two decades, the Head Start Program has assisted more than 9 million low-income children at the preschool age. All evidence has shown that this type of preschool program enjoys a remarkable level of success in helping to prepare these children for a promising educational career.

Last, the Dependent Care Block Grant is a program that provides critical day care services to school children who are frequently left unattended before and after school, often referred to as "Latch Key" kids. Today, America has witnessed a dramatic increase in both two-parent working families and single-parent headed households. As the number of working mothers increases so does the need for adequate day care services. Unfortunately the demand for day care has not been adequately addressed and the future in this area remains uncertain. I want to also point out that while the Congress has taken this issue very seriously, the present administration has not. Last year Congress appropriated funds for the Dependent Care Block Program, yet in an effort to block the release of funds for this important program, the Department of Health and Human Services has failed to draft distribution regulations. Quite frankly Mr. President, in an era where 14.7 million children in this Nation ages 6 to 13 have mothers in the labor force, I find it distressing to watch as the Reagan administration blatantly turns its back on the working mothers and their children through out America by opposing such a needed program. The Department Care Block Grant is a worthy program which I strongly endorse.

Mr. President, I support this complete legislative package as it supplies critical services to a number of well deserving Americans. And I strongly urge that my colleagues unanimously pass the Human Services Reauthorization Act of 1986.●

● Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I speak today in support of S. 2444, reauthorizing legislation for a number of critical programs including the community services block grant [CSBG]; Head Start; low-income energy assistance; dependent care; and the Community Food and Nutrition Program.

Despite the optimistic scenarios propounded by economists and financial whiz kids regarding our current state of economic health, we cannot permit concern and caring to be replaced by complacency and mean-spiritedness. On the contrary, Mr. President, the need for the services provided by these programs in many parts of the country is great, if not greater, than what we have seen evidenced in the past.

In my own State of North Dakota, times are tough. An ailing farm economy coupled with an oil industry that can best be described as crippled and a high rate of unemployment have contributed to the present set of circumstances. The people in need of the services these programs provide are out there. Consequently, I would hope that as Congress continues its efforts to strengthen the Nation's economy and revitalize these ailing industries, we do not overlook or negate the human factor.

We tend to hear a great deal about pragmatism and fiscal restraint. As a member of the Senate Budget and Appropriations Committees, I have a deep appreciation for the taxpayer's hard-earned money. I also believe that my colleagues heed the fact that Members of this body are charged with the responsibility of ensuring that the expenditure of the Federal dollar is carried out effectively and efficiently. At a time when all sectors of the economy are feeling the budget crunch and the burden imposed by a whopping Federal deficit weighs heavily upon us, there is simply no room for wasteful spending. Here, Mr. President, is where programs such as the CSBG, Head Start and LIHEAP come into play.

One of the primary objectives of this administration has been a concerted undertaking to get Americans off the welfare rolls. The focus of the CSBG is precisely that, Mr. President—to get individuals off the welfare rolls and keep them off by moving them out of dependency into self-sufficiency.

Similarly, the effectiveness of Head Start has been more than adequately documented. Recently, the program celebrated its 20-year anniversary, which I believe provides additional confirmation as to Head Start's value and importance. The fact is that studies have shown that Head Start participants are less likely to repeat a grade or require remedial education classes than their nonparticipant counterparts. Furthermore, studies indicate that children in Head Start or similar programs are more likely to complete their secondary education.

Suffice it to say, Mr. President, the programs addressed in this legislation focus on an aspect that we as a compassionate society cannot afford to neglect—our human resources. Fiscal restraint is necessary—let there be no doubt on that point. However, when such restraint results in lack of concern for our fellow man, we must draw the line.

Mr. President, as an original cosponsor of S. 2444, I strongly urge my colleagues to support and ensure prompt passage of this legislation.●

● Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, the bill S. 2444 provides for a 4-year reauthorization of four programs that serve our low-income and elderly citizens. The committee has provided for very modest growth in the programs over the next 4 years even though we are painfully aware the need far outstrips the current level of appropriations for the programs.

Title I of the bill reauthorizes the Head Start Program for $1,130,542,000 for fiscal year 1987. This is a 4-percent increase over the fiscal year 1986 appropriation level pre-Gramm-Rudman-Hollings March 1 cuts. In fiscal years 1988–90 the authorization level would increase by 4 percent each year.

For the past 20 years, Head Start has helped children who start life with the innumerable disadvantages that stem from poverty. It has given them the skills and confidence necessary to begin their school careers on more of an even footing with their more advantaged peers. The program's multifaceted approach to working with these children is ultimately sensible. Head Start youngsters not only participate in an education program but also are provided with health and nutrition services. Head Start staff work closely with families to help them overcome the problems which accompany poverty ranging from inadequate housing, poor health, and lack of a job to a basic lack of confidence in their own ability to help themselves.

Head Start's formula has worked well. Head Start children are less likely to be held back a grade or assigned to costly special education classes. Children in Head Start obtain markedly higher levels of health care than children not in the program, have fewer absences from school, and perform better on physical tests. In the program year 1983–84, 100 percent of children enrolled for 90 days or more completed medical screening, including all of the appropriate tests; 96 percent of those identified as needing treatment received treatment; 95 percent of the children were brought up to date in their immunizations.

Head Start also works for parents. Four out of five of Head Start children's parents are providing a volunteer service in the program. Thirty-one percent of the program's paid staff are parents of current or former Head Start children.

S. 2444 is a bill which will help to ensure that Head Start continues to effectively reach these children and their families. It allows programs the option of continuing to provide more than 1 year of a Head Start experience, guaranteeing that the most vulnerable children and families can receive enough support from the program to make a significant difference in their lives. The bill also ensures that funds will be available to train Head Start staff. Head Start, like most child development programs, must cope with an extremely high staff turnover rate because of the low salaries it must pay its staff. Training is key not only because of this type of turnover but also because of the strong role that parents play in the program. Finally, research has identified training as one of the key indicators of positive caregiver-child relationships.

The bill also guarantees that Federal funds will continue to support the Child Development Associate [CDA] Credentialing Program. This program encourages caregivers to improve their skills by seeking a competency-based credential. It is now recognized in over 30 States' child care licensing requirements. In addition to maintaining our previous investment in the CDA Program, this legislation authorizes a very modest but important new program which will provide funds for scholarships for the CDA credential to low-income applicants. This fund will provide an incentive for low-paid child care staff as well as Head Start caregivers to seek this skill building credential.

Title I of the bill represents a wise investment in not only our children's future but in the future of this Nation. This first 5 years of a child's life represent a key developmental period. A strong Head Start Program can help our poorest youngsters make the most of these critical years so that they can grow up into productive, contributing citizens.

Title III of the bill would reauthorize the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program at $2,163,000,000 for fiscal year 1987. This is a 3-percent increase over the fiscal year 1986 appropriation level pre-Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cuts. The energy program would grow at a 3-percent rate for the next 3 fiscal years authorized.

The LIHEAP Program served 7 million households in fiscal year 1986 with an average benefit of $208, down $15 from fiscal year 1985. This means about 40 percent of the 17.6 million households eligible under the State-established standards received benefits equivalent to 23 percent of their residential energy expenditures.

Despite rumors to the contrary, most households have not benefited from the drop in world oil prices. While the 16 percent of low-income households using heating oil did get some small price break—albeit many months after the refineries and terminals benefited—the other 84 percent have not experienced any price drop. Indeed, indications are that electricity prices will continue to increase and that gas prices, once expected by DOE to stay level, may now rise higher than administration predictions as price controlled "old gas" disappears.

The poor continue to spend about 14 percent of their incomes on residential energy—more than twice as much as the average American household and a far higher proportion than they did 10 years ago. In fact, census figures recently distributed by the National Association for State Community Services Programs show that the average 3-person LIHEAP household, after paying for food, housing and energy, has $355 left per year for all other expenditures.

The LIHEAP block grant represents a partial response to the very serious problem energy continues to pose for the poor. This act provides only a 3-percent increase each year over the previous year's funding. Other resources are clearly needed to provide service to the majority of eligible households not now being served and to give more adequate aid to the neediest LIHEAP households whose energy costs can now exceed 30 percent of income.

A few examples presented to the committee during our hearings help give our concerns a human face: Take the Peters family of Barbourville, KY. The mother, Rhonda, and three children live on a $246 AFDC allotment and $265 of food stamps per month. Now LIHEAP funds have run out in Kentucky and she has received a shut-off notice. She owes $198 on her electric bill. She now plans to heat her house using space heaters and extension cords to her mother-in-law's house next door. The fire hazard is considerable in her very dilapidated rental unit.

There is the Portland, OR family with five children and one grandparent with $3,900 net income annually. Their oil bills have run $1,000 per year in the rental unit. Even with LIHEAP assistance of about $300, they have gone without food this winter to keep the heat on.

Or the 78-year-old Iowa widow, Jennie, who lives on $284 monthly and had a $47 budget bill payment due each month to Iowa Public Service Co. LIHEAP paid $305 or a little over 6 months of her heating costs. She tells her CAP she spends just $85 monthly on groceries.

In 1984, the Labor and Human Resources Committee reauthorized LIHEAP and determined that the program had developed into an effective delivery system which needed some elements of improvement and targeting to perfect it. Consequently, our amendments in the Human Services Reauthorization Act reduced the permissible amounts of carryover, required equal treatment for categorically eligible and nonwelfare households, prohibited States from excluding households under 110 percent of poverty, and required all States to reserve some funds for winter emergency assistance and provide effective aid to those facing energy crisis. In addition, of course, we retargeted the distribution formula.

Our oversight hearings this year found that indeed the program has matured further and is working well in the vast majority of States. Not only has program participation increased, but Federal, State, utility, private, and recipients alike testified to the success and effectiveness of most programs.

In addition, the LIHEAP Program has been the catalyst for millions of dollars of State contributions including large appropriations in Massachusetts, Michigan, and Indiana, as well as close to $40 million in fuel funds contributed by millions of American individuals who care about the energy problems of their less fortunate neighbors.

In the long run, these efforts, which are now relatively small, may begin to make up the lost purchasing power for LIHEAP households which the program cannot cover. But we need to keep at least this stable base of Federal funding to permit this to occur.

However, we identified a few problem areas in which a few States had apparently not read our intent clearly. This year's amendments are generally designed to restate the Senate's continuing concern more unequivocally.

For example, the provisions requiring that all States provide all, or at least some, energy emergency aid through community based organizations is the committee's general solution to the frustrating evidence that a few States are not providing the locally accessible, prompt form of aid that is essential to the elderly and others who face loss of heat.

The committee expects States to adopt any of the numerous model emergency programs which ensure round-the-clock, life-saving help but do not encourage households to avoid payments or invite emergency situations. The Department of Health and Human Services should support such efforts.

However, the birth of energy assistance funding over a decade ago, was a direct result of Congress' view that it is intolerable if any American should face illness or death by virtue of hyperthermia or hypothermia. State programs are still responsible for providing protection from those risks to the elderly and others at risk. Providing regular payments to those certified for the program early in the winter is not adequate when less than 40 percent of the eligible poor are participating.

The committee has learned through years of oversight of the program that in all States community based organizations can provide prompt, flexible, efficient services and that they are good at identifying those at risk. The provision intends that CAP's and other such agencies have a significant role in crisis programs. As stated in the report, the committee expects that all parts of each State will either have available CBO crisis programs or will have available the same type and level of services offered by CBO's elsewhere in the State.

Mr. President, I emphasize the last sentence because of a printers error in the committee report.

Another clarification apparently required in spite of our clear 1984 amendments is the bill's restatement of the requirement that LIHEAP may not be considered in determining benefits or eligibility in the Food Stamp Program.

This legislation definitively clarifies the treatment of LIHEAP benefits under 5(e) of the Food Stamp Act. LIHEAP benefits, whether received in cash, directly, or through payments to energy vendors, indirectly, shall not affect a household's eligibility for or benefits received under the Food Stamp Program.

The legislative history of LIHEAP makes clear Congress' intent that LIHEAP supplement other basic needs programs, including specifically the Food Stamp Program. Nevertheless, the USDA has attempted, through regulation, to undermine the intent of Congress expressed in LIHEAP, by prohibiting the deduction of LIHEAP benefits as all or part of a household's excess shelter deduction under section 5(e) of the Food Stamp Act.

The courts have found in all cases, consistent with the intent of Congress in LIHEAP, that LIHEAP benefits should be counted as all or part of a household's excess shelter deduction under section 5(e) of the Food Stamp Act. (These court decisions affect the eighth and ninth circuits and Indiana.) This legislation lays to rest this issue by affirmatively extending these court decisions nationwide.

The committee also rejected the administration's proposal to count a variety of other forms of Federal benefits in LIHEAP benefit and eligibility determinants.

Section 304 of the bill reiterates Congress' intent that the neediest households, as defined historically in section 2605(b)(5) of the act, are to receive the maximum assistance. This means that States must vary benefits according to the factors set out in that provision; that is, based on income and energy costs in relation to income, taking into account family size.

In other words, the committee amendments further require that States consider energy costs in relation to income and income and family size when setting benefit levels. We are concerend that, since resources will never be adequate to the need, the highest benefits always go to those in greatest need, which means those with the highest energy costs in relation to income and the lowest incomes. States are expected to target LIHEAP resources effectively to the need; our hearings showed that the vast majority of funds are distributed as we intend, but that a few States, for administrative convenience, were making uniform payments to all categorically eligible households regardless of their income or energy costs.

Finally, the committee made numerous changes in administrative and procedural requirements requested by the administration. It is our intent to permit streamlined rearrangement of the program but it is also our intent that the Federal managers of the program take whatever measures are necessary to promote and enforce program standards that assure a well-targeted program, readily accessible to all eligible households, with effective emergency aid and cost-effective coordination with private, State, and local energy programs.

Title IV of the bill reauthorizes the community services block grant at $381,409,000 for fiscal year 1987. This is a 3-percent increase over the fiscal year 1986 authorization level prior to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cuts. The authorization levels are increased by 3 percent for the 3 additional years in the bill.

The committee bill makes a number of changes in the discretionary authority of the Secretary. First, it was brought to the committee's attention that the existing statute was unclear regarding both eligibility of grantees and activities under the community economic development [CED] section of the law. Our intent, in drafting the CED section for the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981 was to continue to fund successful nonprofit community development corporations to carry out job creation and enterprise development projects to benefit low-income people and their communities. In my State, Northern Communities Investment Corp. [NCIC] is such an organization and I have been very impressed with its record of accomplishment. We have revised the statute to make clear that funds authorized under this section are to be used to fund projects sponsored by nonprofit community development corporations, which will promote job creation and business development in distressed communities.

In addition, the committee has added language requiring that all CED funds be administered on a competitive basis. Currently, most grants are made after a national competition. However, each year a few are made outside this system. We do not think this is fair and our amendment will ensure that all grantees must compete for funding.

Finally, in order to ensure that a national technical assistance program for rural communities with inadequate drinking water is continued, the committee has added language to the rural housing and community facilities section giving a priority to rural community assistance corporations.

Last but not least, title II of the bill reauthorizes the Dependant Care Services Program at $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1987 and the 2 succeeding fiscal years.

Mr. President, under Senator HAWKINS' sponsorship this bill will make further improvement in the delivery of human services to our elderly and low-income Americans. The continuation of these important programs is needed to meet the needs of elderly and low-income Americans.

Mr. President, I ask my fellow Senators support for Senate passage of this bill today.●

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the bill now before us reauthorizes the Head Start Program for 4 more years, thus assuring it of a future as successful as its past. I urge my colleagues to give it their most whole-hearted support.

Head Start seeks to close the gap between disadvantaged children and their more fortunate peers, providing educational, medical, and nutritional services to more than 450,000 lower-income preschoolers. In Rhode Island, it serves thousands of children and their families, with programs currently operating in Cranston, Newport, North Providence, North Scituate, South County, Providence, Riverside, Warren, Bristol, Warwick, and Woonsocket.

This bill reauthorizes the program through fiscal year 1990, increasing the authorized funding level by 4 percent each year. These modest increases will allow Head Start to continue its current responsibilities, helping to alleviate need for cutbacks in services.

Head Start is a program that works. Its effectiveness has been documented time and again, in study after study. Findings like these are typical: Head Starters score higher than non-Head Starters on standardized tests of intelligence, school readiness, math, language, vocabulary, and perceptual skills. They perform better in school, and less frequently require special education. In later years, they are more likely to hold after school jobs, and less likely to show signs of delinquency.

Thus, the good that Head Start does resounds through the years, as studies have shown. But it also resounds through entire communities, thanks to the program's consistent emphasis on parent and community involvement: for every five Head Start children, four parents volunteer their services to the program. Clearly, the program reinforces parents' commitment to their children's well-being, with results that last a lifetime.

All these factors account for the most convincing evaluation of all—Head Start's benefits, as compared to its costs. When one considers the special and remedial education that are not needed because of Head Start, the program's benefits outrun its costs by more than 2-to-1.

I urge my colleagues to support further Head Start successes by supporting this measure.●

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues today in voting to reauthorize the Dependent Care Block Grant Program, Head Start, the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program, the Child Development Associate Scholarships, and the Community Services Block Grant Program. In a recent letter circulated to Members of the Senate, I was very sorry to see the new Secretary of HHS is using the same, tired arguments the administration has used to oppose these vital programs over the past 5 years. Congress has repeatedly affirmed that these programs play an essential role in providing for the care and education of our Nation's children, as well as providing critical services to low income persons.

I am particularly pleased that this legislation reauthorizes the Dependent Care Grants Program because of the difficulties we have encountered in getting this program started. Mr. President, almost 2 years ago, Congress authorized this program in an attempt to address the tremendous problem that working parents face in finding suitable before and after school care for their children. We appropriated funds to get this program underway in December 1985, and the President signed the appropriation bill into law.

Since that time, Mr. President, the administration proposed a rescission of these funds, and HHS delayed promulgating the regulations until the end of April. HHS has finally issued the regulations for awarding and administering the grants, and States have begun to arrange the required matching funds and approve programs for this year. Because the regulations were released so late in the year, however, the program will barely be underway when the current authorization expires. Reauthorizing the program will provide the time and funds that are required to fully evaluate the effectiveness of this program.

Mr. President, finding suitable before and after school care is a serious problem for American families. In the intervening years since the program was authorized the number of so-called latchkey children has continued to grow because before and after school care is simply not available to meet the needs of working parents. Some estimate that as many as 20 percent of all children may be responsible for self-care while their parents are at work. This situation poses unconscionable risk to our children and creates needless worry for their parents. Despite Secretary Bowen's reassertion that the administration opposes the dependent care initiative, I believe it is essential that we reauthorize this program so that we can begin to help working parents devise solutions to the critical shortage of before and after school child care.

Other programs in this package, such as Head Start and other community service programs, have a well-documented history of success which provides compelling reasons for our continued support. The LIHEAP Program, for example, has proved to be an enormously effective way of ensuring that low-income persons have sufficient fuel to protect them from the extremes of the weather. Regardless of the ups and downs in the world oil market, we ought to be able to provide people with sufficient heat in winter—this is fundamental to maintaining the quality of life in our communities.

Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in reauthorizing these programs. These services are essential for keeping our communities vibrant, safe, and stimulating places for American children to grow up in.●

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I see that Senator HEINZ is ready to offer his amendment, and I defer to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

AMENDMENT NO. 2199

(Purpose: To make a technical modification in the Excellence in Education Act)

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ] proposes an amendment numbered 2199.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new title:

TITLE .—EXCELLENCE IN EDUCATION

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

SEC. . (a) Section 604(b)(2) of the Excellence in Education Act (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Act") is amended by inserting after "fiscal year" the second time it appears the following: "in which the appropriations for that year exceed $15,000,000".

(b) Section 604(b)(3) of the Excellence in Education Act (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Act") is amended by inserting after "fiscal year" the second time it appears the following: "in which the appropriations for that year exceed $15,000,000".

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague, the chairman of the committee, Senator HATCH, for yielding to me at this time to offer this amendment, with which I know he has a considerable degree of familiarity.

I want to emphasize at the outset that this is a fairly technical amendment. It does not really change any substantive provisions of law, but unless it is adopted by the Senate, it will severely jeopardize the operation of a program, the Excellence in Education Act Awards, which the Senate has been funding for several years now, from operating the way the authors of the legislation originally intended.

The problem is that in our original bill, we had set aside some $3 million for matching private-sector initiatives out of an authorization level of some $15 million.

What has happened is that the level of appropriation, which in 1985 was $5 million and currently is $2.5 million, is causing the set-aside to operate in a perverse way. Namely, the set-aside, because it was written as an absolute dollar amount rather than as a percentage of the amount appropriated, threatens to capture and force the spending of the entire funding for the Excellence in Education Program and force all that money to be spent on the so-called private sector matching grants program. That was never the intention of any of the authors of the amendment.

For the benefit of a little legislative history, the Excellence in Education Program was created as title 6 of the Education for Economic Security Act of 1984. It is modeled after a successful program in Allegheny County, my home county, in Pennsylvania, and it provides small grants to individual school districts for the reform and improvement of educational activities.

It is a very small incentive grant program by which school districts from across the Nation compete and are limited to an amount of money—no more than $25,000 over 2 years—in order to bring about the modernization and improvement of curricula, administrative relief of teachers, new programs involving local communities, and demonstration programs of modified school hours and school years.

I guess the best evidence of the success of this program is the response it has stimulated. The Department has received roughly 1,000 applications for the first round of funding. That is far more than can be approved. The adoption of the amendment I have just offered will guarantee that the full $2.5 million appropriated for fiscal year 1986 will be available to help our schools improve and modernize.

So it is my hope that the authors of the legislation before us can accept the amendment. I have discussed it with the staff of Senator HATCH and I understand that he is amenable to it. We have been trying to work with the minority as well. I have not had a chance yet to talk to Senator KENNEDY. I do not know how he feels about it. But I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ] has offered this amendment, and I understand both sides are willing to accept it. It is technical in nature. It changes the current law by ordering the requirements in set-aside.

□ 1500

Instead of business being required to match Government funding with specific fixed dollar amounts, the match will be a percentage, 20 percent, based on the actual appropriation.

I yield to my distinguished colleague.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we welcome the suggested change of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

As I understand, there are some 800 applications for these funds now. It is a very, very limited amount of resource. We are talking about $2.5 million. We probably should be talking about $125 million to $150 million in funding for these important award grants to public school teachers who display excellence in their jobs. These awards permit them to develop new skills, ideas, and programs so that they can provide a more enriching educational experience to the young people who attend school across our country.

I welcome the opportunity to support it. I will try to come back at another time with my colleague from Pennsylvania to work on expanding this program. It is a very modest program, but I think it is a useful one. After it has, hopefully, been accepted and we have examined its effectiveness, perhaps we can build a case to gain additional support for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further comment on the amendment?

If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2199) was agreed to.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues, Senator HATCH and Senator KENNEDY, who supported the amendment.

I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2200

(Purpose: To amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to exclude from sections 6, 7, and 12 of that Act individuals of league baseball teams who serve as bat boys and bat girls)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on behalf of Senator QUAYLE and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] for Mr. QUAYLE, proposes an amendment numbered 2200.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is as follows:

At the end add the following new section:

TITLE.—TREATMENT OF BAT BOYS AND BAT GIRLS UNDER FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT OF 1938

AMENDMENT

SEC. —. Section 13(d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after the subsection designation; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) The provisions of sections 6, 7, and 12 shall not apply with respect to any individual who serves a league baseball team as a bat boy or bat girl for the team if the individual—

"(i) has attained 14 years of age but not 16 years of age;

"(ii) serves as a bat boy or bat girl not more than two nights per week; and

"(iii) while school is in session, works not later than 11 post meridian.

"(B) For the purpose of this paragraph, the term 'bat boy or bat girl' means an individual who provides the traditional services of a bat boy or bat girl for league baseball team, including a ball boy or ball girl, and shall not include services unrelated to the game of baseball, such as, but not limited to, laundry services for the team or policing the baseball field.".

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the Human Services Reauthorization Act. My amendment permits boys and girls age 14 and 15 to serve league baseball teams as bat/ball boys and girls. This amendment is necessary because the Department of Labor has recently ruled that young people who are bat/ball boys or girls, are violating Federal child labor laws which prohibit working past 9 p.m. on summer evenings and past 7 p.m. while school is in session. All Americans know that baseball does not fit into those times.

I think this ruling was wrong. Last April, I introduced S. 2277, a bill that would permit 14- and 15-year-olds to associate with league baseball teams as bat/ball boys and girls. My bill is now an amendment to this reauthorization.

Currently, there are several exceptions to the child labor provisions to the Fair Labor Standards Act. One of them is for newspaper deliverers. Another is for child actors, still another is for children who harvest live evergreens and shape them into wreaths. Children may also work for their parents, such as on a family farm. These are important exceptions. Bat boys and girls were left out of the list of exceptions, but until fairly recently, they continued to serve the teams, usually for the minor leagues, but not always.

This amendment is important because it permits young people to have fun and to share in the reflected glory of the baseball players. It is also important, because it contains restrictions on how late the kids can be at the games while school is in session. The amendment also makes it clear that a bat boy or girl is one who provides traditional bat/ball boy or girl services, and no laundry or grounds work shall be considered bat boy or girl services for the purposes of this amendment.

Baseball is a game for young people, even if grownups take it seriously. I am delighted that we can keep the fun in the game. To quote the Secretary of Labor in a letter that he wrote to Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth earlier this year, ". . . being a bat boy is a dream opportunity for many youngsters." He's right. We want to keep this dream alive for all the kids in America. I invite my colleagues to cosponsor my amendment, and I hope that Mr. Brock and Mr. Ueberroth will voice their support for the amendment as well.

I would like to say that I hope my amendment can be accepted to the Human Services Reauthorization Act by unanimous consent. The Human Services Reauthorization Act contains many programs and provisions that benefit young people, and I hope we can agree to make this one of them.

Finally, I would like to thank Max Schumacher of the Indianapolis Indians baseball team for bringing this problem to my attention and for his patience and help in helping to resolve it.

I thank the distinguished manager of the bill for this opportunity to speak on my amendment.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2200) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2201

(Purpose: To provide for the designation of a Regional Primate Research Center)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on behalf of Senator D'AMATO and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] for Mr. D'AMATO proposes an amendment numbered 2201.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

TITLE.—DESIGNATION OF REGIONAL PRIMATE RESEARCH CENTER DESIGNATION AUTHORIZED

SEC. . (a) The Secretary of Health and Human Services, through the Division of Research Resources of the National Institutes of Health, shall designate as a Regional Primate Research Center a laboratory for experimental medicine and surgery in primates which is in existence on the date of the enactment of this Act. The laboratory designated under this subsection shall be a laboratory which was initially established in 1965 and which became formally sponsored by an association of schools of medicine in 1967.

(b) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide the Regional Primate Research Center designated under subsection (a) with opportunities for consideration for core support and grants to support biomedical research equal to the opportunities for consideration for such support and grants provided to all other Regional Primate Research Centers designated by the Secretary.

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in support of legislation which enhances the biomedical research opportunities of this country.

LEMSIP, formally known as the Laboratory for Experimental Medicine and Surgery in Primates is located in Sterling Forest, NY. It is involved in the scientific exploration of the causes and treatments of a number of diseases affecting the lives of millions of individuals. Research efforts on alcoholism, hepatitis, sickle-cell disease, blood transfusions, reproductive problems, birth defects, and genetic disorders have progressed substantially as a result of the scientific excellence of this center.

Unfortunately, this particular primate research center has not been allowed to receive adequate funding to fully utilize its capabilities. Different from the many other primate research institutions in the country that receive substantial portions of their funding through Federal grants, LEMSIP lacks being designated as a regional primate research center. This designation provides research institutions with a special status which makes them eligible for numerous Federal grants. Without this designation, sufficient funding is difficult to obtain.

Because of my strong interest in biomedical, research, especially biomedical research that has proven to be effective for the treatment and prevention of serious human diseases, I support the designation of the Laboratory for Experimental Medicine and Surgery in Primates as a primate research center. I am confident that this designation will promote additional quality research in this country.

I am informed that both the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources support this amendment to the Human Services Reauthorization Act. I encourage my colleagues to lend their support to this worthy provision as well.

Mr. President, more than 15 percent of the Nation's biomedical research takes place in the New York metropolitan area. A facility serving the research scientists in the tristate area is the Laboratory for Experimental Medicine and Surgery in Primates [LEMSIP] at Sterling Forest, NY.

LEMSIP has had many significant achievements in medical research. It is well run, productive, and cost effective. Its staff has produced hundreds of research papers and publishes the world's leading journal in primatology.

To the detriment of medical research, LEMSIP's status and funding have not been included in the regional primate research center program, despite its accomplishments and the support and sponsorship of the Associated Medical Schools of New York and its 12 member medical schools.

To remedy this inequitable and counterproductive situation, we are offering an amendment to the legislation now before the Senate, S. 2444.●

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, 6 years ago, Senator Javits and I were very concerned about the possible closing of the Laboratory for Experimental Medicine and Surgery in Primates [LEMSIP] in Sterling Forest, NY. This would have been a great loss since researchers using LEMSIP have been involved in the development of important advances in the prevention and treatment of alcoholism, hepatitis, sickle-cell disease, blood transfusion, reproductive problems, birth defects, genetic disease, and other health problems. Today, I am pleased once again to offer my support to LEMSIP.

● Mr. D'AMATO. This amendment, designating LEMSIP a regional primate research center, will mean much to the continuation of the research efforts essential not only to the work of the scientific community in New York, but to the Nation as a whole. The amendment will direct the Division of Research Resources of the National Institutes of Health to designate LEMSIP as a regional primate research center with all that implies for NIH cooperation.

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. So that the record may be clear, in the Senator's view, does the amendment affect existing authority for other NIH-supported primate centers or expand the Nation's primate facilities?

● Mr. D'AMATO. No, it does not. It only opens up the competition. LEMSIP is a highly respected primate center and this amendment allows it to compete for grants. It does not guarantee that they will win. I have examined LEMSIP very carefully. I have concluded that it is worthy of the opportunity to compete.

● Mr. HATCH. I have no objection to the amendment offered by my distinguished colleagues from New York.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2201) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2202

(Purpose: To require the Secretary of Education to conduct a study of beginning reading instruction).

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on behalf of Senator ZORINSKY and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], for Mr. ZORINSKY, proposes an amendment numbered 2202.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

TITLE — BEGINNING READING INSTRUCTION STUDY AND LISTING

SEC. —. (a) The Secretary of Education (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary") shall conduct a study in order to complete a complete list, by name, of beginning reading instruction programs and methods, indicating—

(1) the average cost per pupil of such programs and methods, and

(2) whether such programs and methods do or do not present well-designed phonics instruction as recommened in the Report of the Commission on Reading, "Becoming a Nation of Readers".

The listing required by this section shall be written in such a way as to be understandable to the general public.

(b) In carrying out the study required by this section, the Secretary shall solicit public comments on beginning reading programs and methods.

(c) The Secretary shall prepare and submit to the Congress such interim reports of the study and listing as the Secretary deems advisable. The Secretary shall prepare and submit a final report containing the listing required by this subsection to the Congress not later than 12 months after the date of the enactment of this section. The Secretary shall publicize and disseminate nationally the listing required by this section to the education community, parents, and other interested parties.

● Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared on both sides. It simply follows up on last year's report of the Commission on Reading, "Becoming a Nation of Readers." This Commission was made up of the top U.S. reading experts, and their report was based on 20 years of research. It recommended that "well-designed" phonics instruction be used through the second grade, but it did not indicate specifically which beginning reading programs provide such instruction. Therefore, some confusion remains as to which programs meet the recommendations.

My amendment directs the Department of Education to compile a complete list, by name, of beginning reading programs and methods, indicating whether they do or do not present well-designed phonics instruction as recommended in "Becoming a Nation of Readers," as well as their average cost per pupil. The Department has agreed to do this study with existing funds.

There are schools which are getting excellent results with little-known methods of teaching reading. They include some with large numbers of low income and/or minority students who generally are not expected to perform so well. My amendment also directs the Department to solicit public comments on beginning reading programs and methods to ensure that programs such as these are included on the list.

When it is completed, it will be disseminated nationally so that parents as well as educators will have the specific information they need to determine whether their schools are using the most effective reading programs.

I have believed for some time that a serious national literacy effort must address prevention as well as remediation. Making available information to improve the teaching of reading in our schools will be an important first step in that direction.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2202) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2203

(Purpose: To make grants to States for children's justice)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on behalf of Senators HAWKINS and DENTON and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], for Mrs. HAWKINS and Mr. DENTON, proposes an amendment numbered 2203.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new title:

TITLE VI—CHILDREN'S JUSTICE

SHORT TITLE

Sec. 601. This title may be cited as the "Children's Justice Act".

CHILDREN'S JUSTICE GRANT

Sec. 602. (a) Grant Authorization.—Section 4 of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (d), (e), (f), and (f) (the second time such designation appears), as subsections (e), (f), (g), and (h), repectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) The Secretary (acting through the Center and in consultation with the Attorney General) is authorized to make grants to the States for the purpose of assisting States in developing, establishing, and operating programs designed to improve (A) the handling of child abuse cases, particularly cases of child sexual abuse, in a manner which limits additional trauma to the child victim, and (B) the investigation and prosecution of cases of child abuse, particularly child sexual abuse.

"(2) In order for a State to qualify for assistance under this subsection, such State shall—

"(A) fulfill the requirements of subsections (b) (2) and (4) or receive a waiver for such requirements under subsection (b)(3);

"(B) establish a task force as provided in paragraph (3);

"(C) fulfill the requirements of paragraph (4); and

"(D) submit an application to the Secretary at such time and containing such informaton and assurances as the Secretary considers necessary, including an assurance that the State will make such reports to the Secretary as may reasonably be required and will maintain and provide access to records relating to activities under this subsection.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a State requesting assistance under this subsection shall establish or designate a multidisciplinary task force on children's justice composed (hereinafter referred to as "the task force") of professionals with knowledge and experience related to the criminal justice system and issues of child abuse. The task force shall include individuals representing the law enforcement community, judicial and legal officers (including individuals involved with the defense as well as the prosecution of such cases), child advocates, health and mental health professionals, individuals representing child protective service agencies, individuals experienced in working with handicapped children, parents, and parents' groups.

"(B) As determined by the Secretary, a commission or task force established after January 1, 1983, with substantially comparable membership and functions, may be considered the task force for the purposes of this subsection.

"(C) Before a State receives assistance under this subsection, the task force shall (i) review and evaluate State investigative, administrative, and judicial handling of cases of child abuse, particularly child sexual abuse, and (ii) make recommendations in each of the categories described in paragraph (4). The task force may make such other comments and recommendations as are considered relevant and useful.

"(4)(A) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (B), the State shall adopt recommendations of the task force in each of the following categories:

"(i) investigative, administrative, and judicial handling of cases of child abuse, particularly child sexual abuse cases, in a manner which reduces the additional trauma to the child victim and which also ensures procedural fairness to the accused;

"(ii) experimental, model, and demonstration programs for testing innovative approaches and techniques which may improve the rate of successful prosecution or enhance the effectiveness of judicial and administrative action in child abuse cases, particularly sexual abuse cases, and which also ensure procedural fairness to the accused; and

"(iii) reform of State laws, ordinances, regulations, and procedures to provide comprehensive protection for children from abuse, particularly sexual abuse, while ensuring fairness to all affected persons.

"(B) As determined by the Secretary, a State shall be considered to have met the requirements of this paragraph if—

"(i) the State adopts an alternative to the recommendations of the task force, which carries out the purposes of this subsection, in each of the categories under subparagraph (A) for which the task force's recommendations are not adopted; or

"(ii) the State is making substantial progress toward adopting the recommendations of the task force or a comparable alternative to such recommendations.

"(5) For grants under paragraph (1), the Secretary may use the amount authorized by section 1404A of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984.".

(b) CRIME VICTIMS FUND.—(1) Section 1402(c)(1) of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10601(c)(1)) is amended by striking out "$100 million" and inserting in lieu thereof "$110 million".

(2) Section 1402(d)(2) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(2) The Fund shall be available as follows:

"(A) Of the first $100,000,000 deposited in the Fund in each fiscal year—

"(i) 45 percent shall be available for grants under section 1403;

"(ii) 45 percent shall be available for grants under section 1404(a);

"(iii) 5 percent shall be available for grants under section 1404(c); and

"(iv) 5 percent shall be available for grants as provided in section 1404A.

"(B) The next $5,000,000 deposited in the Fund in a particular fiscal year shall be available for grants as provided in section 1404A.

"(C) If the deposits in the Fund in a particular fiscal year excess of $105,000,000, 50 percent of the amount in excess of $105,000,000 shall be available for grants under section 1403 and 50 percent of such amount shall be available for grants under section 1404(a).".

(3) Such Act is amended by inserting after section 1404 the following new section:

"CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT GRANTS

"Sec. 1404A. The amount prescribed by section 1402(d)(2) for this section shall be made available to the Secretary of Health and Human Services for grants under section 4(d) of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act.".

(4) Section 1404(c) of such Act is amended by striking out "(c)" and all that follows through "The Federal Administrator shall—" in paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(c)(1) The Attorney General, acting through the (Assistant General for the Office of Justice Programs,) shall make grants—

"(A) for training and technical assistance services to eligible crime victim assistance programs; and 11 "(B) for the financial support of services to victims of Federal crime by eligible crime victim asssitance programs.

"(2) of the amount available for grants under this subsection—

"(A) not less than 50 percent shall be used for grants under paragraph (1)(A); and

"(B) not more than 50 percent shall be used for grants under paragraph (1)(B).

"(3) The Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Justice Programs shall—".

(5) Section 1404(a)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "not used for grants under section 1403" and all that follows through "subsection (c)" and inserting in lieu thereof "made available by section 1402(d)(2) for the purpose of grants under this section, or for the purposes of grants under section 1403 but not used for that purposes,".

THE NATIONAL CENTER ON CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT

SEC. 603. (a) STUDIES AND REPORTS.—Section 2(b) of the Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (3), (4), (6), (7), (8), and (9), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) compile, evaluate, publish, and disseminate to each State such materials and information as may assist the States in achieving the objectives of section 4(d), including an evaluation and prosecution of child physical and sexual abuse cases and resultant psychological trauma of the child victim;";

(3) by inserting after paragraph (4) (as so redesignated) the following new paragraph:

"(5) develop and disseminate, to appropriate State and local officials, model training materials to assist in training law enforcement, legal, judicial, medical, mental health, and child welfare personnel in appropriate methods of interacting during investigative, administrative, and judicial proceedings with children subjected to child abuse;";

(4) by amending paragraph (7) (as so redesignated) to read as follows:

"(7) conduct research on the causes, prevention, identification, and treatment of child abuse and neglect, and on appropriate and effective investigative, administrative, and judicial procedures in cases of child abuse;"; and

(5) by inserting after paragraph (9) (as to redesignated) the following new paragraph:

"(10) Not later than two years after the first fiscal year for which funds are appropriated under section 5(b), the Secretary shall—

"(A) evaluate the effectiveness of assisted programs in achieving the objectives of section 4(d); and

"(B) submit a report to the appropriate committees of the Congress of such evaluation and of technical assistance in achieveing the objectives of such section provided to the States through the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect.".

(b) DISSEMINATION REQUIREMENT.—Information and materials under sections 2(b)(2) and 2(b)(5) of the Act shall be made available to appropriate State officials not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

COORDINATION OF FEDERAL PROGRAMS CONCERNING CHILD ABUSE

SEC. 604. Section 6(a) of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act is amended—

(1) by inserting after the first sentence "The Advisory Board shall meet at least every six months."; and

(2) in the second sentence by inserting "in order to prevent unnecessary duplication of such programs, to ensure efficient allocation of resources, and to assure that programs effectively address all aspects of the child abuse problem" after "Board".

ACQUISITION OF STATISTICAL DATA

SEC. 605. (a) DATA ACQUISITION FOR 1986, 1987, AND 1988.—The Attorney General shall acquire from criminal justice agencies statistical data, for the calendar years 1986, 1987, and 1988, about the incidence of child abuse, including child sexual abuse, and shall publish annually a summary of such data.

(b) MODIFICATION OF UNIFORM CRIME REPORTING PROGRAM.—(1) As soon as practicable, but in no case later than January 1, 1989, the Attorney General shall modify the uniform crime reporting program in the Federal Bureau of Investigation to include data on the age of the victim of the offense and the relationship, if any, of the victim to the offender, for types of offenses that may involve child abuse, including child sexual abuse.

(2) The modification, once made, shall remain in effect until the later of—

(A) 10 years after the date it is made; or

(B) such ending date as may be set by the Attorney General.

AMENDMENT TO PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT

SEC. 606. (a) SECTION 523.—Section 523(e) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290dd-(e)) is amended by adding after and below paragraph (2) the following: "The prohibitions of this section do not apply to the reporting under State law of incidents of suspected child abuse and neglect to the appropriate State authorities.".

(b) SECTION 527.—Section 527(e) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 290ee-3(e)) is amended by adding after and below paragraph (2) the following: "The prohibitions of this section do not apply to the reporting under State law of incidents of suspected child abuse and neglect to the appropriate State authorities.".

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is considering this legislation today. I feel it is long overdue. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Children, Family, Drugs and Alcoholism, I developed and introduced the Senate counterpart to this House bill S. 140, the Children's Justice Act which was passed unanimously by the Senate on August 1, 1985.

This legislation is needed to improve the situation that young child victims of abuse find themselves in after they have made that cry for help. It is designed to improve the treatment of child abuse victims after they have reported the crime and turned to the child protection authorities and criminal justice system for help. I wish that I could say that our current systems protect that child victim from further abuse and guarantee justice for the child victim, but unfortunately I cannot. The tragic reality is that the child is often further traumatized by the administrative and legal proceedings.

The recent publicity regarding molestation of children has heightened the public's awareness of this age-old problem. As a society we have finally stopped whispering about this crime and started talking about it. Openly acknowledging the problem and addressing it. But the vast majority of the public are still unaware of the almost total lack of justice experienced by these child victims after they have made that cry for help.

Fortunately, as people recognize and become aware of this situation they are taking action to improve it. On the first day of this congressional session, I introduced S. 140, the Children's Justice Act. We held a very dramatic and emotional hearing on this bill in May. The bill received widespread support and was favorably reported by the subcommittee in June and full committee 2 weeks later. The Children's Justice Act passed the full Senate without opposition on August 1 of this year.

Because of the amendments that were added to my original bill, the legislation was referred to three separate House subcommittees that have jurisdiction over this legislation. The House held joint hearings on this legislation in December and since that time have been working on modifications to the Senate bill. The House Members have worked very closely with my office, with Senators GRASSLEY, DENTON, DODD, and CRANSTON, and others interested in this subject. They have developed modifications which I believe improve the legislation.

The major change from the Senate passed version of S. 140 involves the funding mechanism. S. 140 authorized $12 million in additional funding to the States to encourage the States to review and improve their handling of child abuse cases. The House decided to adopt a funding mechanism similar to that contained in Senator DENTON'S S. 1156, the Child Victim Witness Protection Act. Under the House version, funding for the Children's Justice Act would be funded through the Victims of Crime Trust Fund.

It is my understanding that this change in funding will not affect administration of the program by the Department of Health and Human Services or the jurisdiction of the act by the congressional committees that normally have jurisdiction over child abuse prevention and treatment programs. Given the political realities of trying to fund a new program during a time of budgetary restraints, I feel that this modification has improved the bill by insuring that the two equally important programs of child abuse prevention and children's justice do not compete for limited funding. I thank Senator DENTON and his staff for their assistance in developing these funding modifications.

Other modifications include making the Children's Justice Act an amendment to the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, thus giving those States still not in compliance with that act, an additional financial inducement for coming into compliance. Representive EDWARDS and other members of the House Judiciary Committee have worked closely with Senator GRASSLEY in making improvements in the sections under the Justice Department's jurisdiction. I am pleased that both Houses of Congress agree with the Attorney General's Task Force on Family Violence that the crimes reported under the Uniform Crime Reports need to be updated.

I don't think these kids should have to wait until they are grown to be believed. They shouldn't have less credibility or less rights just because they are kids. This lack of rights, this lack of protection is why they are being preyed upon. Child molesters know that these kids are helpless, that they can be intimidated into not telling, and even when they summon the courage to tell, rarely are they believed. And even if they are lucky enough to have parents, teachers or friends that believe them, that want to protect them, the fact is that the administrative and legal system is weighted against them.

We need to correct this situation. We need to fight to ensure that our children are protected and that those children who are victimized are guaranteed justice. Mr. President, once again, I want to thank all my colleagues in both the House and Senate who have worked together on this legislation so that someday very soon we will be able to guarantee the child victim of abuse that they will receive justice.●

● Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from Florida, Mrs. HAWKINS, which incorporates the substance of S. 140, the Children's Justice Act with certain modifications suggested by the House. I also rise to commend Senator HAWKINS for her continued commitment to fight for our Nation's children, especially those children who have become victims of abuse or neglect. As an advocate for children, Senator HAWKINS has become an indispensable part of this body. I am only too happy to join her as an original cosponsor of this amendment.

Mr. President, the issue of child abuse has exploded into public view during the past several years. One need only to read the newspapers or to watch television news to realize that child abuse is a problem of immense proportions. Estimates regarding the incidence of child abuse vary greatly depending upon the study, setting, the definitional criteria, and the methodology used for collecting the information. Most studies, however, would suggest that perhaps 200,000 to 400,000 children are victimized every year.

Some studies would suggest that the numbers are much higher. The National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse reported in February of this year that in 1984, 1,726,649 children were officially reported as victims of child abuse and neglect by child protective service agencies in the United States. This rate of reporting is estimated at 27.8 out of 1,000 children, an increase by 158 percent between 1976 and 1984. The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children projects that, on a national basis, one out of three minor girls and one out of every seven minor boys will be sexually abused. Reports from the Children's Trust Fund of Montgomery, indicate that over 28,000 young Alabamians were abused in 1984. A similar number of children could be abused in Alabama this year.

These abused children have suffered extreme trauma. Far too often, however, the abused child suffers additional trauma at the hand of an insensitive justice system which allows an over zealous defense attorney to intimidate, confuse, and badger the child witness into making courtroom statements which might be inconsistent with previous statements. Instead of providing the child victim with the necessary respect, understanding and compassion, the justice system, with its insensitive and intimidating investigative and adjudicative procedures, reduce the child victim to an automation, caught in the drawn-out adult drama leading up to and including the court room.

Mr. President, I believe that this amendment will remedy the problem and will encourage the necessary respect, understanding and compassion for the child victim. The amendment will encourage the States to implement protective reforms for the investigation and adjudication of child abuse cases particularly child sexual abuse. Such reforms would minimize the additional trauma to the child victim and improve the chances of successful criminal prosecution or legal action.

Mr. President, I am pleased that the amendment contains key provisions drawn from S. 1156, the Child Victim Witness Protection Act, which I introduced on May 16, 1985. I am further pleased that Senator HAWKINS has graciously agreed to accept those provisions.

Chief among the accepted provisions is what has commonly been referred to as the "Denton Funding Mechanism." Under this provision, the level of the Crime Victim's Fund would be increased by $10 million to allow the Secretary of Health and Human Services, in consultation with the Attorney General, to provide modest Federal financial assistance to the States for the purpose of assisting States in developing, establishing, and operating programs designed to improve first, the handling of child abuse cases, particularly cases of child sexual abuse, in a manner which limits additional trauma to the child victim, and second, the investigation and prosecution of cases of child abuse, particularly child sexual abuse.

Mr. President, in light of the current budgetary situation, we must continue to look for innovative ways to fund programs without adversely affecting existing child-related programs and without imposing an additional burden on the taxpayer. By drawing from the crime victim's fund, the amended Children's Justice Act will be financed from: First, fines collected by the Federal Government; second, penalty assessments levied upon convicted Federal defendants; third, forfeited bail bonds and collateral in Federal criminal cases; and fourth, certain profits made by criminals from publishing their misdeeds in literary, visual, and audio productions. In other words, the amendment will now impose a type of users' fee on criminals in order to protect child abuse victims.

The amended Children's Justice Act also incorporates certain additions to the mandatory multidisciplinary task force. I must say that as a result of the two hearings I conducted on the Child Victim Witness Protection Act, I have become firmly convinced of the need to establish statewide multidisciplinary or interdisciplinary teams to work with victims of child abuse. At my suggestion, the task force has been expanded to include individuals representing "parent groups" and "individuals experienced in working with handicapped children." The former would allow for representation by groups such as the PTA and would echo the language dealing with the State advisory groups which I placed in the Reauthorized Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act in 1984. The latter takes into account the belief that disabled children constitute a high-risk group for abuse and that they may need additional special attention during the investigation and adjudication of the alleged abuse.

Mr. President, as the U.S. Supreme Court noted in the famous case of New York versus Ferber, "the prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse of children constitutes a governmental objective of surpassing importance." It is with that objective in mind that I offer my strongest support for the amended Children's Justice Act.

Again, I offer my strong commendation to Senator HAWKINS for her leadership in the protection of our Nation's children. I look forward to continued cooperative efforts with Senator HAWKINS in this most imperative fight.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.●

CHILDREN'S JUSTICE ACT AMENDMENT TO S. 2444

● Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I strongly support the amendment to include the provisions of S. 140, the proposed Children's Justice Act, as part of S. 2444, the proposed Human Services Reauthorization Act of 1986.

I am a cosponsor and active supporter of S. 140 which includes a number of provisions which I authored as part of legislation I introduced last year as S. 1320, the proposed Child Abuse Reporting and Clearinghouse Improvements Act of 1985. The provisions I proposed grew out a series of recommendations contained in a report issued by a panel convened by the California attorney general, John Van de Kamp, based upon a year-long review of the problems in the manner in which child victims are dealt within the criminal justice system. Companion legislation, H.R. 2971, was introduced in the House of Representatives by my good friend and colleague from California, Representative DON EDWARDS.

S. 140, with the amendments I had proposed in S. 1320, was unanimously passed by the Senate almost a year ago on August 1, 1985. Unfortunately, no action has taken place on this measure in the House. Hopefully, the Senate's reaffirmation of its support for these long-overdue reforms will help to bring about final action on this important initiative.

NEED FOR REFORMS

Mr. President, S. 140 would amend the Federal Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act to create a new emphasis on encouraging States to enact various reforms in their child abuse laws and procedures to facilitate the investigation and prosecution of child abuse cases, particularly those involving sexual abuse, in a manner which reduces the trauma to the child victim.

As the chairman for 4 years of the Child and Human Development Subcommittee of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, I have had a long-standing interest and concern about the problems relating to child abuse and neglect, including sexual abuse.

In 1978, I coauthored in the Senate legislation which established the first Federal program focused specifically on the problem of sexual abuse of children. That measure, which was enacted as part of Public Law 95-266, created a small grant program under the Federal Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act to help established programs to provide services and treatment to children who were the victims of sexual abuse and to help develop programs to prevent such abuse.

What seemed in 1978 to be an important problem appears today to have represented merely the tip of an iceberg. The growing statistics on incidence of sexual abuse of children—regardless of whether they represent merely better reporting procedures or an increase in the cases themselves—demonstrate beyond any doubt that more needs to be done by government entities at every level to deal effectively with the devastating abuse of our children.

The 1978 law focused primarily on providing treatment for the young victims of sexual abuse.

S. 140 moves a step further by addressing another very important element of the overall problem relating to sexual abuse cases—the further victimization of the child victims through an abusive judicial process that fails to recognize the special nature of the crime involved and the additional trauma inflicted upon the children who are often the principal sources of evidence in the judicial proceedings brought against the perpetrators of the sexual abuse. This measure would authorize the appropriation of funds for grants to be made to States which enact reforms designed to improve legal and administrative proceedings regarding the investigation and prosecution of child abuse cases, particularly sexual abuse cases.

This new focus is greatly needed.

Numerous examinations and reports by public and private entities have highlighted the problems in the manner in which child victims are dealt with in the criminal justice system. In my own State, California Attorney General John Van de Kamp initiated a study of the deficiencies and weaknesses of our State laws and procedures in this area. The findings and recommendations contained in the California report closely parallel the areas for reform covered in S. 140 and I believe are reflective of the problems faced in other States as well.

CRANSTON AMENDMENTS

Mr. President, the provisions of S. 140 which were derived from S. 1320 are described in detail in my statement of August 1, 1985, at 22140 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In brief, my amendments provided for the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect to play an active role in helping States improve and reform their laws relating to the investigation and prosecution of child sexual abuse, provided for the inclusion of child abuse data in the uniform crime reportng system, clarified the obligation of all health-care professionals, including those involved in alcoholism and drug abuse programs, to comply with child abuse reporting laws, and explicitly provided that funds under the new provisions could be allocated to statewide law enforcement agencies as well as child abuse agencies.

Certain changes in S. 140 as passed by the Senate in August of 1985 have been made in the amendment being offered today based upon negotiations which have taken place with various House Committees which have jurisdiction over the different elements of S. 140. The only significant change made in the Cranston amendments to S. 140 has been to remove the specific reference to statewide law enforcement agencies with respect to receipt of funds. The 1985 Senate-passed bill provided for the Chief Executive of a State to designate which agency would apply for the funds. This version simply provides the funds would be made available to the States. It is my understanding that the Chief Executive of a State would be free under this version to designate that funds be allocated to statewide law enforcement agencies to carry out the purposes of the act. Obviously, the involvement of such agencies in these efforts is critical to a successful outcome in making reforms of the criminal justice system. As long as child abuse is regarded primarily as a matter for the child welfare or social services agencies, rather than for law enforcement agencies as well, the changes that are contemplated under S. 140 are not likely to move forward with the speed they require.

In California, our State attorney general has taken the lead in dealing with these problems and has already begun to implement many of the recommendations arising from the 1985 California report. I hope that similar efforts will take place in other States with the flexibility provided under the amendment's provisions.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I am pleased to support this amendment and the long overdue reforms it would help to bring about.

Child abuse, particularly sexual abuse of children is a very serious problem in our society. I am deeply committed to finding ways to prevent child abuse and child sexual abuse and to provide appropriate treatment for child abuse victims and their families. But we also must take steps to make sure that the judicial and the law enforcement aspects of these cases are adequately handled. Parents are justifiably reluctant to have their children subjected to a further abuse through the criminal prosecution of these cases. As a consequence, in some cases, the perpetrators of heinous crimes against young children are allowed to go free—go free to prey on other children. Better reporting and enforcement of child abuse laws can help deter potential abusers from engaging in the abuse in the first instance and certainly can be effective in removing them from society when they violate the law.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2203) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, let us go to third reading on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor and Human Resources be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 4421, the Human Services Reauthorization Act, and that the bill be immediately considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4421) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 to carry out the Head Start, Follow Through, dependent care, community services block grant, and community food and nutrition programs, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed immediately to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to strike all after the enacting clause of H.R. 4421 and to insert the text of S. 2444, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move passage of H.R. 4421.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill (H.R. 4421) was passed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to lay to that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to indefinitely postpone S. 2444.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I thank my colleague and the chairman of the committee for the work that has been done in seeing the successful passage of these important pieces of legislation.

I also extend appreciation to the other members of the committee, Republican and Democrat alike, and particularly to the staff who have done a very effective job in working out a variety of different issues.

I make a point of including their names at this point in the RECORD. Nancy Taylor, Robin Rushton, Mike Francis, Marv Fifield, Debbie Curtis, Sally Yozell, Marilyn Yager, Marsha Renwanz, Joel Johnson and Judy Wagner.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I also wish to thank my colleague Senator KENNEDY, and all the members of the committee who worked so hard on these bills. These are important pieces of legislation, they will make a lot of difference throughout this country. Certainly the voluntary and almost every needy group in the country will be benefited.

I am glad we passed these bills today.

I also praise our staff. A lot of work goes into creating the bill and bringing it through the committee and on to the floor. We are now ready to recommend conferences on H.R. 4421, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now resume consideration of H.R. 4421 for the purposes of appointing conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to H.R. 4421 and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes thereon, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HATCH, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. DODD, and Mr. KERRY conferees on the part of the Senate.

HIGHER EDUCATION AMENDMENTS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 1965.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1965) to reauthorize and revise the Higher Education Act of 1965, and for other purposes.

(The amendment of the House is printed in the RECORD of June 17, 1986 beginning at page 13943.)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House to S. 1965 and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the presiding officer appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. WEICKER, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. PELL, Mr. DODD, Mr. MATSUNAGA, and Mr. SIMON conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

WHAT IS REALLY HAPPENING IN ETHIOPIA TODAY?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, there are two sharply contrasting points of view concerning the situation in Ethiopia today. On the one hand, there are those who believe that the Ethiopian Government, under the direction of Mengistu Haile Mariam, is making a good faith effort to relieve the suffering of the Ethiopian people. On the other hand, Mr. President, a number of observers have said that far from alleviating the suffering of millions of famine victims, the policies of the Mengistu government have actually led to more deaths than the famine itself.

Mr. President, one of the many advantages of living in a free country is that everyone has the right to state his or her opinion without fear of reprisals. In this case, Mr. President, I believe my colleagues are not so much interested in opinions about the situation in Ethiopia as we are in the facts. The bottom line is, what is really happening in Ethiopia today? I believe the American people have a right to hear information from all available sources so they may draw their own conclusions.

Two months ago a report was released entitled, "Ethiopia and Sudan One Year Later: Refugee and Famine Recovery Needs." The authors conclude that—

Over the past year the lives of seven million men, women and children have been saved from starvation. The mass starvation found in Ethiopia in 1984 has ended.

The authors give credit for this "success story" to the international community and to the Ethiopian Government's Relief and Rehabilitation Commission [RRC] which they say "deserves credit for a professional and competent performance under extraordinarily difficult circumstances."

Mr. President, this report constrasts sharply with numerous other reports we have received in the West indicating that the Marxist Ethiopian Government has cruelly used food as bait to lure peasants out of the famine-stricken northern provinces and as a weapon against anti-government resistance forces. According to one report by a French medical group, Medecins San Frontiers, 100,000 people have died as a result of Mengistu's forced resettlements and villagization campaigns.

Mr. Yonas Deressa, an Ethiopian himself and the president of the Ethiopian Refugees Education and Relief Foundation, has written a detailed rebuttal to the above-mentioned report entitled, "Ethiopia and the Sudan One Year Later: The True Story." Mr. Deressa states that the authors of the previous report "relied heavily on information provided by the Communist rulers of Ethiopia," thereby deeply compromising the report's reliability.

Mr. President, in the interest of keeping my colleagues and the American people fully informed on the situation in Ethiopia today, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Deressa's paper be printed in the RECORD in its entirety. I hope each and every one of my colleagues will take the time to read this thoughtful analysis.

Interestingly, Mr. President, the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Economic and Social Council, the Honorable Joseph Verner Reed, has prepared an excellent statement on Ethiopia entitled "Dilemma on the Horn, the United Nations in Ethiopia, the Need of a People and the Need of an Accounting." Ambassador Reed points out in his paper that in spite of a massive international relief effort, the Government of Mengistu Haile Mariam has implemented "brutal policies directed against its own people."

Ambassador Reed succinctly states that,

In short, the Ethiopian Government is implementing (its forced resettlement policy) with the barrel of a gun. What is going on now in Ethiopia meets every standard of atrocity known to our times. The aged and the young, the half-dead and the dying, trek daily vast distances under the rifles of Mengistu's troops.

Again, Mr. President, Ambassador Reed's account contrasts sharply to the report mentioned earlier which states that, "the forced resettlement campaign has ended * * * food and relief have been distributed to needy people in all areas."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Ambassador Reed's statement be printed in the RECORD in its entirety. I leave it to the good judgment of my colleagues to evaluate the evidence themselves and draw their own conclusions about what is really happening in Ethiopia today.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ETHIOPIA: ONE YEAR LATER: THE TRUE STORY

(By Yonas Deressa)

In April of 1986 the office of U.S. Senator Edward M. Kennedy released a report prepared for the use of the Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Policy, prepared by the Subcommittee's Minority Counsel, Jerry Tinker, and a Special Consultant to the Senator, John Wise. Entitled "Ethiopia and Sudan One Year Later: Refugee and Famine Recovery Needs", the report claims to be a follow-up to Senator Kennedy's trip to the famine-stricken areas over a year ago. As part of its preparation, Tinker and Wise went on a two week fact-finding tour through Ethiopia and the Sudan, supposedly following Senator Kennedy's route.

The topic of the Ethiopian famine has become increasingly explosive in light of information that became available last year. The democratic countries have been outraged by confirmed reports about the actions of the government of Ethiopia: a military junta led by Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam, who came to power in a palace gunfight and who is said to have personally smothered Emperor Haile Selassie to death with a pillow. It was revealed that the regime had actually used the famine as a tool to destroy opposition to its power. This knowledge has set off a debate over official American policy towards Ethiopia that promises to heat up in the months ahead.

The Tinker and Wise report paints a surprisingly rosy picture of the situation in Ethiopia today. While maintaining that problems still exist, the authors point out that with the help of Western relief aid millions of people have been saved from death by starvation. They claim that the policies of the Communist regime, while initially a problem, have become more reasonable and humanitarian in dealing with the famine. They go on to make a number of policy recommendations based on their findings.

Unfortunately, the manner in which this report was prepared deeply compromises its reliability. The authors rely heavily on information provided by the Communist rulers of Ethiopia, and the trip they took through that country—which did not duplicate Senator Kennedy's original route—was under the close supervision of the military dictatorship. Statements by officials of the regime are time and again taken at face value, with no apparent attempt to corroborate them or obtain opposing viewpoints. The authors seem to have made no attempt to gather information on many crucial issues from independent sources, contenting themselves with that supplied by government spokesmem.

This casual approach to the facts is apparent throughout the report. Tinker and Wise confine themselves to vague generalities whenever they must deal with controversial actions by the military dictatorship. The result is less an objective report than an apology for the Mengistu regime: one that tries to direct attention away from the fact that the political conditions responsible for the incredible suffering and devastation wreaked during the recent drought have not changed.

ETHIOPIA TODAY

From the beginning it is clear that Tinker and Wise wish to play down that special conditions in Ethiopia were responsible for the drought's having far greater impact there than in neighboring countries. In its introduction, entitled "Ethiopia Today", the report lumps the Ethiopian famine together with the hunger problems in the Sudan. A table entitled "Famine in Modern History" lists the "1984-85 Ethiopian-Sudan" famine, crediting it with one-million deaths. It fails to point out that the overwhelming majority of those deaths occurred in Ethiopia alone.

The table includes the Great Bengal Famine of 1943, as well as those in Biafra in 1968-69, Bangladesh in 1971-72, Cambodia in 1979, and the 1973-74 Ethiopian famine, which was responsible for 200,000 deaths. It neglects to include the Ukrainian famine of the early 1930's—which killed at least nine-million people and which was deliberately caused by the Stalin regime in order to destroy opposition to its rule. Tinker and Wise also do not point out that the Biafran and Cambodian famines had political origins, possibly because they are reluctant to draw attention to the fact that famines are not always due entirely to natural causes.

THE RESETTLEMENT PROGRAM

In 1984 the Mengistu regime began a project to move a million and a half people from areas in the high, arid north to camps in the lush, humid lowlands of the southwest. Although the ostensible reason for the relocation is to prevent peasants from being victims of another famine, the evidence is that alleviation of hunger and the improvement of living conditions are not considerations in the implementation of the program.

Individuals chosen for resettlement are often those considered hostile or unreliable to the regime. Farmers have been dragged off their lands during the harvest. Families are torn apart, and people are brutally packed into trucks, buses, even unheated and unpressurized airplanes. Many die on the journey—often from suffocation or being trampled to death. In many cases people have been starved for days in jails before beginning the journey to make them easier to handle. Ironically, many chosen for relocation have grown sufficient stocks of food to feed themselves and their families in the coming year.

At their destinations the victims report finding themselves in prison camps where they are forced to labor at gunpoint with little food under the constant threat of torture or death. People are paid with food to inform on one another. Many try to escape, and those who fail are shot. Disease and pestilence are rampant. It is estimated that 100,000 people have died so far in the resettlement camps or during relocation.

These facts were documented by reports issued independently late last year by two international aid organizations: Berliner Missionwerk of West Germany, Medecins San Frontieres of France; and one by a Harvard-based study group called Cultural Survival.[1] The authors of these reports interviewed large numbers of people who had fled from the resettlement camps to refuge in the Sudan. Interview after interview painted a picture of a massive forced relocation rivalled only by the great Cambodian exodus to the countryside in 1975. Every person interviewed had been separated from members of his or her family. Every person asked had seen others die during the journey.

The Ethiopian dictatorship claimed that the relocation was an attempt to deal with the famine problem by transferring people to areas with more rainfall and better soil. However, the regions most affected by the resettlement were not necessarily those most affected by the drought, for in many of them there was ample food. But in all of them guerilla activity was widespread and growing. The information obtained from the refugees makes clear that the resettlement program is in fact aimed at depopulating these areas so as to deprive the insurgents of their base of support.

The worst the authors can bring themselves to say about these atrocities is that there was "undeniable evidence of coercion," and that "the timing and implementation of this . . . effort was seriously flawed." This is akin to saying that a program of birth control that involves brutally ripping babies from the womb and leaving their mothers to bleed to death is "seriously flawed." They say nothing about the extent of the operation or its brutality, and choose to ignore any possible military reason for it. They quickly move on to say that—besides—"No one has questioned the principle, only its implementation."

In fact, past experience with legitimate resettlement efforts in Indonesia and elsewhere show that they are a hopelessly inefficient way to deal with the problem of hunger in the best of conditions. A conservative estimate of the costs of such a program is more than $5,000.00 per person—or over $7.5 billion for a project moving 1.5 million people, the size of that envisioned by Ethiopia's communist rulers. The psychological effects of dislocation are profound, and the settlement projects require expert help and continued subsidies for decades.

From here the report quickly descends into fantasy. Mr. Tinker and Mr. Wise uncritically repeat the Mengistu regime's statements that the resettlement program has ended, that "all settlers are provided with two hectares of private land", and that "The local, free enterprise market is thriving." They bring forth not a shred of independent evidence to support such claims. In fact, these are plain and simple lies—part of a carefully crafted program of disinformation for the edification of foreigners.

The report also claims that the resettlement program has been suspended. But reports by people recently escaped from Ethiopia indicate that it is still active. On top of this Mengistu renewed his pledge to continue with the resettlement in a speech made as recently as May 21 which was reported in the New York Times the following day. In any case the authors make it clear that they don't believe in being too upset over the forceful uprooting of Ethiopians from their homes. After all, they tell us with perfect Orwellian logic, " . . . in Ethiopia the word 'voluntary', whether under today's Marxist government or under yesterday's Haile Selassie's regime, obviously has a different meaning than in the West."

Tinker and Wise coo enthusiastically about two supposed resettlement sites which they were allowed to see under official supervision—apparently unaware of the claims of escapees that they were forced at gunpoint to build showcase camps for the benefit of gullible foreigners.[2] Not surprisingly, they find "no signs of the alleged malnutrition, high death rates, or prison-like security". One is remined of Solzhenitsyn's scathing accounts of the visits of eager Western dignitaries to carefully sanitized prisons in Stalin's Russia.

In contrast to its easygoing attitude toward the claims of the communist government of Ethiopia, the report takes a decidedly hostile posture towards the campaign's Western critics. The respected French humanitarian organization Medicins Sans Frontieres is singled out for special abuse. MSF, which operates in 28 countries around the world, is dismissed as a "small French medical team."

The findings of the French organization, compiled from interviews with relief workers and escapees from the relocation camps, are condemned by Tinker and Wise as being "a polemic" and "founded too much on hearsay". It should be noted that reports of the Cambodian holocaust now accepted as fact were based on just "hearsay", and that the horrors of Auschwitz remained secret until its liberation. The author of the Medicins Sans Frontieres report, Dr. Claude Malhuret, is now the French national government's Minister for Human Rights

PLIGHT OF ORPHANS

In a short section Tinker and Wise point out the problem of the large numbers of orphans in Ethiopia today. According to their report the orphans number between 20,000 and 25,000.

Although there is no way to check this state-supplied figure, the chances are that the true number is much higher. This is because the resettlement scheme has been carried out apparently with the express purpose of breaking up families, and because over 100,000 people have died from it alone. But Tinker and Wise do not acknowledge the resettlement as a reason for the existence of orphans. In fact, famines do not usually produce large numbers of orphans for the simple reason that children tend to die from starvation before their parents.

VILLAGIZATION

Simultaneously with the resettlement, the Mengistu dicatorship began a program to round up farmers all over the country from their traditionally scattered farming settlements and group them together in villages. As in the resettlement campaign, there are numerous documented reports by refugees of brutality and the use of force by the regime.[3] Families are forced by local party cadres to pull down their homes and carry them—often several miles—to the sites of the new villages. Once there they are reduced to the status of serfs. As in the peasant collectives of Red China, village members are forced to attend regular indoctrination sessions, and they are under the constant watch of the minions of the state for signs of disloyalty or independent thought. Like serfs their crops are subject to state levy quotas—which often take more than 75 percent of a year's production.

Such measures are entirely consistent with those practiced in every communist state. Leftist totalitarian ideology requires that each person be subject to direct supervision and coercion, and that all economic activity be brought under the umbrella of the state. Obviously it is difficult or impossible to accomplish this when farmers live miles apart from each other on their own plots of land.

As Tinker and Wise point out, the regime tries to justify this campaign on the grounds that villagization makes it possible to provide services to the rural population. However, there is no evidence that such noble goals are being carried out. From the reports of refugees it is evident that the primary purpose of the new villages is to forcibly bring rural Ethiopians under the direct control of the state.

The report acknowledges this as a possibility, but does it in an underhanded manner designed to draw attention away from the ideological nature of the Ethiopian regime. The forced collectivization of the peasants of the Soviet Union and China, or the block associations that are used to keep the people in line in Cuba—all of them obvious parallels—are not mentioned. Instead it claims that critics compare the campaign to "a strategic hamlet concept": an obvious reference to a quite different program in South Vietnam which equipped rural farmers to defend themselves from marauding Vietcong. This is the first time I have learned of such an analogy made by anyone.

In response to reports by refugees that the villagization campaign has been carried out using force, Tinker and Wise once again reveal their willingness to give the communist junta the benefit of every doubt, claiming that, "such actions appear to be related to the acts of individual provincial or party leaders, rather than the program as a whole." No evidence is given for such a conclusion, and it is inconsistent with the past history of the regime, which in 1977 mounted an indoctrination campaign known as the "zemetcha". The zemetcha, which is well documented, resembled the Chinese Cultural Revolution. During it, gangs of students were recruited by the state to roam the countryside brutalizing the farmers and trying to force them into accepting collectivism.

In this section the authors once again make it clear that the use of force against innocent civilians is a secondary consideration. "The issue today", they claim, "is whether this program . . . . has, or will have a negative impact on the relief operation and contribute unnecessarily to Ethiopia's continuing, structural food deficits." In other words, only food really matters.

In any case, the villagization campaign has now been "suspended", says the report. Again it offers nothing to support this claim by the dictatorship. But soon after it was published Tinker's and Wise's carelessness as researchers was revealed when a massive flood of refugees began to pour into Somalia—fleeing a brutal villagization effort.[4] Over a thousand people a day are now coming into one refugee camp alone, and their numbers will surely climb, for the regime has pledged to subject over 30 million people to this ruthless campaign.

FOOD AS A WEAPON

The use of famine by Ethiopia's communist rulers to weaken and disrupt insurgent guerilla forces is one of the most damning of the accusations against it. Again, reports by refugees and defectors provided the window, through which the West was able to glimpse the truth.

There is now armed revolt in 10 of the 14 administrative regions of Ethiopia. The regions in which the insurgents are strongest and pose the greatest threat to the state are precisely those which were the hardest hit by the famine: Tigre, Eritrea, and Wello. In these areas refugees report that the government stole or killed cattle, and burned and confiscated foodstocks—much as Stalin's cadres did in the Ukraine.

The regime went to great lengths to conceal the famine from the rest of the world. This was later confirmed by the former Relief and Rehabilitation Commission head, Dawit Wolde Giorgis, after his defection in an interview on Voice of America. The famine was only made public when, a BBC camera crew secretly smuggled out a few minutes of shocking footage documenting the starvation and death. At the same time that hundreds of thousands were dying Mengistu was spending $200 million on a gala celebration of the tenth anniversary of the revolution. One of the most egregious examples of his cavalier attitude toward the starvation was his purchase of an entire shipload of scotch whisky—costing over $21 million.

Once the famine became public Mengistu was faced with necessity of allowing relief efforts in order to prevent a backlash of world opinion. However, he threw tremendous obstacles in their way. Trucks donated by the West to transport food were commandeered by the military to transport troops or for use in the resettlement campaign.[5] Ships carrying food were made to wait while others with cargoes of weapons or cement for military installations were given priority for unloading. A fee of $12.60 per ton was charged by the government to unload the food, and one German ship loaded with grain was turned away because it could not pay. Once food was unloaded it often was used to feed soldiers,[6] sold to obtain hard currency.[7] or left to rot on the docks.

These were not, as the report claims, simply "all the logistical and bureaucratic obstacles involved in any major relief operation, particularly one in rural Africa." The neighboring countries of Chad and the Sudan were not guilty of such abuses. These were deliberate policies of the Ethiopian state.

The communist dictatorship steadfastly refused to let any food at all into areas in Eritrea and Tigre which were controlled by the rebels. Trucks were turned back by soldiers, and a ship with food bound for Eritrea was impounded in Massawa. Relief agencies which operated in Ethiopia and at the same time tried to relieve Eritrea and Tigre through the "back door" over the Sudanese border were expelled.

It was only when a bill introduced by Congressman Toby Roth threatening sanctions was passed by the Congress that the rulers of Ethiopia allowed food shipments into the rebel held areas. A conservative estimate is that this single action saved a million lives. According to Tinker and Wise, "Food and relief have been distributed to needy people in all areas, those in government held territory as well as in 'liberated' zones . . ." There is no mention that this is directly due to Congressman Roth's bill. In fact, the report condemns such measures.

The most that Tinker and Wise can bring themselves to say on the subject of deliberate hindrance by the state of relief efforts is an acknowledgement at the beginning of the report that: "At times there was a totally inadequate response from Ethiopian authorities." In the section entitled "Food as a Weapon" they refuse to address the issue of the Communist regime's role in the starvation at all, but do condescend to say that if food was used as a weapon it would be "intolerable".

They abruptly lose their fondness for generalities when they get a chance to make the enemies of the Mengistu dictatorship look bad. An attack on an American relief outpost by one of the guerilla groups operating against the regime—the Tigre People's Liberation Front—is the only specific incident mentioned in the entire report.

BILATERAL RELATIONS

Ethiopia today is a nation deep within the Soviet embrace. Its rulers have repeatedly declared their unequivocal allegiance to Moscow, and to the principles of Marxist-Leninism. The country swarms with Cuban troops, East Germans run the secret police, and Soviet officers command the armed forces. A nation with an annual gross national product of less than $3 billion, Ethiopia has bought over $5 billion worth of arms from the U.S.S.R., and used them to create an army more than half a million strong: seven times its size under Haile Selassie and by far the largest in Africa.

In fact, even if Mengistu wished to draw closer to the United States as Tinker and Wise suggest, it would be impossible for him to carry it out. The procession of dictators in Afghanistan, and the current civil war in Yemen are both results of third-world clients of the Soviet Union deviating from Moscow's prescribed line. Ethiopia is an extremely valuable strategic asset regarding not only Africa, but the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf as well. Its immense army has not been built just to brutalize Ethiopians, but as a cheaper and politically more acceptable alternative to Cuban troops in expanding and consolidating Soviet power in Africa. In the near future we can expect to see Ethiopian troops operating in Angola and Mozambique.

The Mengistu regime's brutal and repressive policies towards its own people are well documented by many different sources. The 1985 Country Report on Ethiopia by the State Department listed massive human rights violations by the dictatorship. These actions are entirely consistent with those in the past by other communist governments as they moved to consolidate their power: The holocaust in Cambodia, the murders and imprisonments in Vietnam, the genocide in Afghanistan, the purges and forced starvation in the Soviet Union in the 30s—the list of horrors goes on and on.

But to the authors of this report the facts don't seem to matter. Any data that contradict their own policy of accommodation with the Ethiopian regime are either ignored or dismissed. In place of documented evidence regarding the pivotal issues of the resettlement program, villagization, or the famine, Mr. Tinker and Mr. Wise rely on information from official sources gathered while on a two week state-supervised tour—information that has been shown to be false.

Their conclusions, therefore, are not suprising. They call for "expanding" and "improving" diplomatic relations, even while admitting that, despite all the aid the U.S. has given Ethiopia, it has not resulted in a better climate between the two countries. They justify this by pointing to "the extraordinary reservoir of goodwill that exists within Ethiopia toward the United States, despite the official line" and tell us that "there are signs that the worst of the chill is over." But, unfortunately, goodwill on the part of the people of a communist-controlled country has little or no bearing on the policies of its rulers.

The presence of Western voluntary relief agencies is another hopeful sign to the authors of the report, who point out, "Instead of restricting their operations and movements, the government has often facilitated them, although constant problems remain." Among the "constant problems" they neglect to mention is the fact that all relief agencies are still subject to the threat of immediate expulsion if their actions go against the decrees of the state. The regime is blackmailing them to operate only where it wants them to, and—most important—to keep any awkward information to themselves. Most have chosen to go along so as to be able to keep up their activities, however circumscribed.[8]

Tinker and Wise point to various statements made to them and to other visiting outsiders by state officials as signs of a more friendly posture on the part of the Mengistu dictatorship. But other evidence contradicts their optimism. Official statements by the dictatorship show no sign of any lessening of hostility to the United States. The recent raid on Libya, for instance, was condemned as "naked", "arrogant", and "un provoked agression" on the part of "U.S. imperialism" using "trumped up pretexts.[9] The domestic official press is vociferously anti-American, and—despite a statement in the report that "Ethiopian officials are no longer ignoring or downgrading the role the United States played in the relief effort"—the food that is supplied from American sources is still identified as coming from the Soviet Union whenever possible. American bags of grain have their identifying markings painted over and replaced by "Gift of the People of the Soviet Union.[10]

Against this background the observation that, "In statements to the international press, to visiting Congressional delegations, and by the Foreign Minister, ... the Ethiopian government has now publicly thanked us' carries little weight. Such talk for Western audiences is cheap, as is the expansion of "educational and cultural ties" Tinker and Wise find so promising. Neither does past experience with Soviet-style dicatatorships provide any hope that a proposed purchase of Boeing aircraft by Ethiopian Airlines—seen as a hopeful sign by Tinker and Wise—will cause the regime to be more amenable to U.S. interests.

The prescription Tinker and Wise offer is exactly the one Ethiopia's rulers would like us to accept: "to patiently use the goodwill of our past effort to build new relations and new access to influence the Ethiopian government in whatever positive ways we can." In other words, do nothing of substance to force a brutal Marxist-Leninist dictatorship to treat its people like human beings.

In fact, the only times the Ethiopian government has behaved decently are when it was forced to by pressure from the West. The outcry that was raised—especially in Great Britain and in Europe—when it was discovered that the regime was concealing a famine while spending millions on scotch whisky was responsible for its allowing relief efforts in the first place. Even then Mengistu tried to lay the blame for the famine on the West. And it was only when a strong bill threatening economic sanctions against Ethiopia was passed in the United States Congress—the kind of measure that Tinker and Wise condemn—that he finally, reluctantly, allowed food to go to the desperate people in the rebel-held areas of Eritrea and Tigre.

It is safe to say that whatever concessions the communist regime of Ethiopia make today are made solely to head off any further threat of substantial action against it. With a new bill that would make it impossible for Ethiopia to obtain credit from the United States or the IMF coming to a vote soon in the House, Mengistu recently hinted that he wants to improve relations. But it was during this same speech that he condemned the United States for "sheer arrogance" and "blind hatred" towards his regime, and pledged that the notorious resettlement scheme would continue. Obviously, if there are to be better relations between the United States and Ethiopia's communist rulers, they will be on their terms, not America's. The course that Tinker and Wise recommend will thus encourage the brutal rulers of this tortured land to continue their cruel policies.

DILEMMA ON THE HORN: THE UNITED NATIONS IN ETHIOPIA

THE NEED OF A PEOPLE AND THE NEED OF AN ACCOUNTING

(By Ambassador Joseph Verner Reed)

It was not long ago that mass starvation in Ethiopia was "big news". Daily footage of the starvation—ravaged faces were brought before us on the evening news and in the papers—sights that haunted our dreams. Who does not remember how quickly those pictures—the emaciated infants dying before the camera eye—galvanized the conscience of the world? And who does not remember the response of the West and how millions of lives were saved through an outpouring of aid.

Individuals, national governments, outreach organizations and everyone in the United Nations system that have sought to alleviate the misery of famine in war-ridden Ethiopia swung into action. Millions of people throughout the world—from those who buy the pop records made by "USA for Africa" or "Band Aid", to those who volunteer to work for charitable groups in Ethiopia—can share in this pride. They have demonstrated that people care about other people even in remote areas of the world. The hearts of millions have been touched and the Free World has responded with generosity. Relief supplies poured into Ethiopia. In 1985 the citizens of the United States privately gave over $100 million and our government contributed more than one third of all food donated. There are 45 "good will" organizations operating in Ethiopia. The world settled back, these good works underway, to await results.

The Ethiopian government led by Marxist-Leninist dicator Lt. Colonel Haile-Mariam Mengistu, has responded to this display of universal good will with delay and brutal policies directed against its own people. There has not been a single expression of gratitude or even acknowledgment on the part of the Ethiopian leadership. Legitimate questions about how foreign assistance has been implemented have been scorned by the authorities. Most amazing is the fact that the government of Ethiopia places more importance on propaganda than on feeding its population. Last year, for instance, scarce resources were spent for a massive 10 year anniversary celebration-of the Revolution.

The United Nation's role in saving Ethiopia has been heroic. It has established a food transport and distribution system, and has coordinated and monitored the disbursement of aid provided through official and private channels. Most important, U.N. officials on the spot, Assistant Secretary-General Michael Priestly and his predecessor Kurt Janson representing the U.N.'s Secretary-General, have provided a vital communication link to a government that has made itself inaccessible to many Western donor governments.

Unfortunately, the continued callousness of the Ethiopian government and its willingness to impose incredible suffering on its own people has placed the U.N. in a tough spot. In recent months growing attention has been focused on the Ethiopian "policy" (crime) known as "resettlement"—namely, the forced uprooting of more than a million people from drought-stricken areas of the country to more fertile ones. In theory, this policy may sound perfectly rational and sound. In reality, however, it is a means to consolidate the government's power and to carry out an inhuman process of collectivization. In short, the Ethiopian government is implementing this policy with the barrel of a gun. What is going on now in Ethiopia meets every standard of atrocity known to our times. The aged and the young, the half-dead and the dying, trek daily vast distances under the rifles of Mengistu's troops. By the tens of hundreds, they are dying along the way of hunger, thirst, disease. Villagers are hurriedly rounded up, individuals often separated from close family members, loaded cheek to jowl into trucks or Soviet transport planes and removed to so-called resettlement sites. More often than not, if they arrive, they find neither food, nor shelter, nor sanitation facilities nor medical care. They will not even find seeds or agricultural implements so that they may replace the crops they were forced to abandon at their homes. The death rate at one such site is reported to have been greater than at any of the drought-caused refugee camps upon which so much international attention was focused in the past two years. There is more suffering, more poverty, and more destitution than at any time in the past 40 years. Ethiopia is in a nightmare!

Reports from Ethiopian refugees, many of whom have fled from resettlement sites, tell of horrific conditions and atrocities committed by local Workers Party of Ethiopia officials who are responsible for the resettlement program. Many of the inhabitants have fled Ethiopia becoming refugees in Sudan, only to fall victims to the depredations of brutal bandits. Yet, many prefer the risk of rape or worse (slavery) than to face the horrors of resettlement.

A visitor to Ethiopia, who may have imagined scenes of gaunt bodies starving in dusty camp sites, would be startled upon arrival in its capital Addis Ababa. One can see well-dressed and well-fed people going about their business (usually government connected) as one would expect in any urban center. Numerous Mercedes (old and new) can be seen on the streets and parking lots around official buildings. Food seems to be available in sufficient if not abundant supplies.

But, when one speaks to the staff of relief agencies, the stories of life outside the capital reveal a totally different reality. The government authorities, on the other hand, refute such stories by saying they are spread by "enemies of the state", or by American 'imperialists'. When asked if independent visitors may view conditions so as to decide the truth for themselves, the Ethiopian authorities smilingly assure the questioner that, of course, such visits are permitted after the necessary "arrangements". Such "arrangements", however, never (as in Kafka) seem to be able to be "finalized". Despite requests for travel permission the American Embassy's staff in Addis Ababa have been repeatedly denied a chance to visit a resettlement site of our choosing. "No pay, no see", is the latest official policy.

We look to the United Nations to play a crucial role in Ethiopia. It must protect the interests of the world community in seeing that aid intended for the suffering people of that country in fact is used for the humanitarian purposes for which it was donated. In playing this role officials of the world organization must take a forceful position. Up to this point, the world body has played that role, but it is facing a severe test of its continued ability to do so. The Ethiopian authorities have reneged on their commitment to give priority to emergency assistance commodities at government controlled ports and transport facilities, and also have gone back on assurances that access would be granted to monitor conditions throughout the country.

Continued assistance in the way of food, medicine and such survival supplies as tents and blankets will be required for Ethiopia this year. If the Ethiopian government rebuffs othe U.N.'s efforts to monitor conditions, and its ejects U.N. officials who ask "too many questions", the Secretary General must state his case to the membership of the United Nations. Ultimately, the Secretary General may have to go to the Court-of-Last-Resort—the world public who have provided the support for the suffering people of Ethiopia. A conundrum yes, but with the drama before the world I believe the Ethiopian regime's bluff should be called.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1985, the Secretary of the Senate, on July 2, July 3, July 8, July 9, and July 10, 1986, during the adjournment of the Senate, received messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and a treaty; which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received on July 2, July 3, July 8, July 9, and July 10, 1986, are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

REPORT ON HIGHWAY SAFETY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING ADJOURNMENT—PM 158

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1985, the Secretary of the Senate, on July 8, 1986, during the adjournment of the Senate, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

To the Congress of the United States:

The Highway Safety Act and the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act, both enacted in 1966, initiated a national effort to reduce traffic deaths and injuries and require annual reports on the administration of the Acts. This is the 18th year that these reports have been prepared for your review.

The report on motor vehicle safety includes the annual reporting requirement in Title I of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act of 1972 (bumper standards).

In the Highway Safety Acts of 1973, 1976, and 1978, the Congress expressed its special interest in certain aspects of traffic safety that are addressed in the volume on highway safety.

Although the 44,241 fatalities recorded in 1984 represent a 4 percent increase from the preceding year, the death toll is 13 percent below 1980 when 51,091 Americans lost their lives in traffic accidents. There was also a significant 24 percent decline in drunk driver fatalities between 1980 and 1984, and an increase in the number of Americans who are protecting themselves with safety belts.

In addition, despite large increases in the number of drivers and vehicles, the Federal standards and programs for motor vehicle and highway safety instituted since 1966 have contributed to a significant reduction in the fatality rate per 100 million miles of travel. The fatality rate is a measure of the risk of death that a person is exposed to when travelling. The rate has decreased from 5.5 in the mid-sixties to the present level of 2.58.

I am especially proud that in 1984 we had the safest Christmas holiday season since the late 1940's. The national outrage over drunk driving, combined with tougher State laws, stepped-up enforcement, and private sector interest in the issue, have brought about a change in America's attitude about the use of alcohol and its consequences. I expect to see even more safety improvements in the years ahead.

EXTENSION OF INTERNATIONAL FISHERY AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE GOVERNMENT OF THE SOVIET UNION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT—PM-159

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1986, the Secretary of the Senate, on July 1, 1986, during the adjournment of the Senate, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which, pursuant to Public Law 94-265, was referred jointly to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act of 1976 (Public Law 94-265; 16 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.), (the Act), I transmit herewith an exchange of notes extending the Governing International Fishery Agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, signed at Washington on November 26, 1976, for the period of one year from December 31, 1986, until December 31, 1987.

This Agreement is one of a series negotiated in accordance with the Act. We have not sought to renegotiate the agreement for a number of reasons, and it has been extended for periods of one year to eighteen months since July 1982. The extension of this Agreement will permit U.S. fishermen to continue cooperative fisheries arrangements with Soviet fishermen. Unless the Agreement is extended these operations will cease, causing significant financial hardship to U.S. fishermen.

I recommend that the Congress give favorable consideration to this extension at an early date.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE RECEIVED DURING ADJOURNMENT

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1985, the Secretary of the Senate, on June 30, 1986, received a message from the House of Representatives announcing that the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. FOLEY] had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

S. 1625. An act to permit the use and leasing of certain public lands in Nevada by the University of Nevada;

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-759. Joint resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

"SENATE RESOLUTION No. 35

"Whereas, California agriculture is deeply buried in its worst financial crisis since the Great Depression; and

"Whereas, The beef cattle industry in this state is one of the segments of California agriculture that can least afford price instability at this time; and

"Whereas, The California beef cattle industry represents a $2 billion industry, consisting of approximately 3,500,000 head of beef cattle; and

"Whereas, The beef cattle market is governed by the supply and demand concept based on an orderly marketing process and has never received any governmental subsidies or price supports; and

"Whereas, It is the intent of a portion of the Food Security Act of 1985's Milk Price Support and Producer Supported Dairy Program, commonly referred to as the dairy herd buy-out program, to avoid the creation of burdensome excess supplies of milk or milk products; and

"Whereas, It is difficult to adjust the number of dairy cows without impacting the red meat market; and

"Whereas, The dairy heard buy-out program, which has critically impaired this orderly process, will place an estimated 115,000 dairy cows in California on the market, resulting in a severely depressed market price to all beef cattle producers; and

"Whereas, Preliminary estimates indicate that the California beef cattle industry alone can anticipate to lose over the next six months approximately $250,000,000 in reduced beef price sales; and

"Whereas, The Food Security Act of 1985 gave the United States Secretary of Agriculture broad powers to carry out the dairy herd buy-out program over an 18-month period, beginning April 1, 1986; and

"Whereas, Sixty-five percent of the dairy herd buy-out program is scheduled to occur within the next five months; and

"Whereas, The Food Security Act of 1985 furthermore requires that the United States Secretary of Agriculture, in determining the conditions of this program, minimize the adverse effect of the dairy herd buy-out program on beef, pork, lamb, and poultry producers: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of California", That the Members memorialize the United States Secretary of Agriculture to exercise the secretary's authority under the Food Security Act of 1985 to restore price stability for the beef cattle producers, in particular; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary is requested to reallocate the dairy herd purchases as evenly as possible over the three six-month periods of the Milk Price Support and Producer-Supported Dairy Program; and be further

"Resolved, That the secretary is requested to allocate as evenly as possible its purchases of dairy cows on an equal daily basis within each six-month period; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary is requested to immediately commence purchasing red meat on a daily basis in direct proportion to the amount of dairy cows slaughtered each day; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary is requested to distribute the red meat purchases into new market channels that will not compete with previously existing markets; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the United States Secretary of Agriculture and to each Senator and Represenative from California in the Congress of the United States."

"SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION No. 41

"Whereas, Since the late 1970's, Central America has suffered from annual recurrence of Mediterranean fruit fly infestations, damaging its ability to produce many food crops for its consumption and for export; and

"Whereas, These export commodities are increasingly finding their way into California markets, sometimes causing pest outbreaks, despite efforts of plant quarantine organizations; and

"Whereas, The eradication of these infestations is increasingly expensive, as well as increasingly objectionable to the general public, due to the necessity of the use of pesticides; and

"Whereas, The technology now exists to accomplish eradication at the infestation source using the male sterile release technique, involving minimal use of pesticide sprays; and

"Whereas, The Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service of the United States Department of Agriculture has formulated a program to continue its successful eradication effort in Mexico and Guatemala, southward to southern Panama, where a free zone can be maintained at a reasonable cost; and

"Whereas, This program is encouraged and supported by the Plant Protection and Quarantine Service of the United States Department of Agriculture, which is recommending a $10 million budget appropriation for it in the 1987 federal budget; and

"Whereas, This program also has the support of, and is encouraged by, participating countries in Central America and their trading partners, which are also willing to support the program financially; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to fund the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service of the United States Department of Agriculture so that it may continue the Guatemala Mediterranean fruit fly program and undertake further eradication efforts of this pest in Central America; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, and to the Secretary of Agriculture."

POM-760. Joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Tennessee; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION No. 779

"Whereas, funding for Cooperative Extension Service Programs was reduced by $188,000,000 in the budget proposed by the President for the fiscal year 1987; and

"Whereas, the agriculture community recognizes that reduction of the federal deficit is an important national priority, yet the proposed funding reduction is ill-advised and will severely impact our nation's beseiged farmers; and

"Whereas, this proposed reduction in federal funding would result in a sixty percent (60%) reduction in funds in Tennessee for important services such as administering the 4H program, hiring local extension staff, and providing educational programs which assist farmers, youth, homemakers, and others, and which involve thousands of people in Tennessee alone; and

"Whereas, a sixty percent (60%) reduction in last year's eleven million dollar appropriation for the Tennessee Cooperative Extension Program would result in a reduction in services to farmers and the loss of more than one hundred local extension staff in Tennessee; and

"Whereas, this proposed reduction in Cooperative Extension Service Program funding would adversely affect farm families and Extension Service Programs which are of enormous benefit to farmers, their families, and farmers of tomorrow; and

"Whereas, farmers play a vital role in the American economy and farmers are currently suffering in a national farm crisis, so that the elimination of county agents and educational programs provided by Cooperative Extension Service Programs would further injure an already struggling farm sector, which is of great importance to our national economy and to our national way of life; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Ninety-Fourth General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, the Senate concurring, That the members of this General Assembly urge the Congress to restore funding for Cooperative Extension Service Programs for the fiscal year 1987 to at least the level approved in the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1986.

"Be it further resolved, That a copy of this Resolution be sent to President Ronald Reagan, to Vice-President George Bush, to Speaker of the House of Representatives Thomas P. O'Neill and to each member of the Tennessee congressional delegation."

POM-761. Concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Iowa; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 127

"Whereas, the federal Job Training Partnership Act was enacted in 1983 calling for a partnership between business, local elected officials, and state government in the administration of a federally funded employment and training program; and

"Whereas, the Job Training Partnership Act provides an efficient program to prepare economically disadvantaged and long-term unemployed individuals to enter the labor force; and

"Whereas, Title III of the Act is designed for dislocated workers to assist them in retraining for job readiness to reenter the job market; and

"Whereas, Iowa employees have been hit especially hard during the recent years due to plant closings and layoffs forcing many Iowans out of work; and

"Whereas, the vast majority of these dislocated workers are highly skilled, highly productive, and have excellent work records; and

"Whereas, due to projected federal appropriations reductions, federal funds for the Title III program will be reduced for Iowa from $1,737,526 to $972,286, a reduction of 44%; and

"Whereas, the projected reductions will have a disastrous effect on attempts to retrain and reemploy these workers; now therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring, That the Iowa General Assembly urges the United States Congress not to reduce federal funds for the Job Training Parternship Act; and

"Be it further resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to all members of the Iowa Congressional Delegation."

POM-762. Resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Illinois; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 425

"Whereas, A sound, stable economic and monetary system is essential to a free nation to protect the liberty of the people; and

"Whereas, Article I, Section 8, Clause 5 of the Constitution of the United States grants Congress the exclusive power "to coin money and regulate the value thereof"; and

"Whereas, The Federal Reserve Act of 1913 and other acts of Congress purport to delegate that power to a federally-chartered but privately-owned banking system, with no real oversight or control by the representatives of the people or by any elected body or official; and

"Whereas, The Federal Reserve's erratic and unpredictable monetary policy has destabilized the nation's money supply, leading to high interest rates and inflation, disastrous to the people and a threat to the ability of state and federal governments to fulfill their obligations and balance their budgets; and

"Whereas, Since the introduction of the Federal Reserve system, our states and our people have suffered recurring recession cycles, high unemployment, increasing bank failures, a loss of 90% of the purchasing power of the dollar, the rise of farm foreclosures and increasing farm debt, bankruptcies, and the high imbalance of trade; and

"Whereas, Serious charges have been made that the Federal Reserve has failed to achieve the objectives laid down where it was established; that the present debt-money system works to the disadvantage of the people and results in ever-higher interest rates for citizens, business, and government; and

"Whereas, The purported statutory powers of the Federal Reserve system to create and issue money and to create and loan money at interest to the government of the United States, are clearly beyond any authority contempleted by the framers of the Constitution; and

"Whereas, The Congress of the United States of America holds it within its powers to study the nation's money system and to take action to protect its citizens against the abuses and resultant undesirable effects of the current money system; and

"Whereas, There has never been an independent audit of the Federal Reserve; therefore be it

"Resolved, by the House of Representatives of the Eighty-Fourth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, That we urge the United States Congress to study and hold hearings to examine this nation's money system and consider reforms of the system designed to protect the people and their economic security; and be it further

"Resolved, That we urge Congress to pass legislation directing the General Accounting Office to conduct a complete audit of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Reserve Banks and all of their branches, for this and each fiscal year thereafter as one step in regaining the rightful control of its constitutionally designated powers; and be it further

"Resolved. That suitable copies of this preamble and resolution be forwarded to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each member of the Illinois Congressional Delegation."

POM-763. Resolution adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

"RESOLUTION

"Whereas, The current standard of living of many poor and elderly Americans is such that they are compelled to live in substandard housing and because of depressed finances are often unable to pay to adequately heat their living quarters; now therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Massachusetts General Court respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to expand and better facilitate the section 8 subsidy and distribution formula to give direct rental assistance to house the poor and elderly in the two, three and four-family homes of their communities through local housing and redevelopment authorities; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted forthwith by the clerk of the House of Representatives to the President of the United States, the presiding officer of each branch of Congress and to the Members thereof from this commonwealth."

POM-765. Concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Louisana; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

"SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 85

"Whereas, some eight hundred sites have been designated in the United States for Superfund cleanup; and

"Whereas, the State of Louisiana manufactures approximately twenty-five percent of the nation's chemicals and contributes between eighteen and twenty-five percent of the revenue which funds cleanup of designated Superfund sites; and

"Whereas, only six of the approximately eight hundred designated sites for Superfund cleanup have been designated in Louisiana, this state being third from last in the ranking of states having the number of designated sites, only Mississippi and Georigia having fewer designated Superfund sites; and

"Whereas, Louisiana's Department of Environmental Quality has documented a large number of abandoned and leaking hazardous waste disposal sites posing a threat to the drinking water of millions of citizens and posing an additional hazard of exposure to noxious and toxic chemicals; and

"Whereas, the present system of ranking hazards being used by federal environmental personnel discriminates against the State of Louisiana and other rural areas by requiring a certain population density in the area of sites to be cleaned; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Legislature of Louisiana memoralizes the Congress of the United States to reevaluate the formula for distributing funds to the respective states to establish a more equitable remedy for correcting the insidious pollution of the air and water of the State of Louisiana by the deposition and discharge of toxic wastes.

"Be it further resolved, That a copy of this Resolution shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the United States Senate and the Clerk of the United States House of Representatives and to each member of the Louisiana congressional delegation."

POM-766. Resolution adopted by the Senate of the State of California; to the Committee on Finance:

"SENATE RESOLUTION NO. 27

"Whereas, The California State Senate is on record in support of a federal tax reform plan which promotes "fairness, simplicity, and growth," but many of the revisions in the federal "Tax Reform Act of 1985" do not promote these objectives; and

"Whereas, California's cities, counties, special districts, and redevelopment agencies issued $18 billion in long-term, tax-exempt debt in 1985 to promote such valuable public purposes as affordable housing, schools, hospitals, sewers, water lines, and public power facilities; and

"Whereas, The United States House of Representatives has passed the "Tax Reform Act of 1985" to reduce the volume of tax-exempt debt issued by state and local governments and the United States Senate Finance Committee has begun hearings on these federal tax code revisions; and

"Whereas, The California Senate Committee on Local Government held a special hearing on how the Tax Reform Act of 1985 would affect California's local governments; and

"Whereas, The loss of tax-exempt financing will increase California's borrowing costs by an estimated $4 billion while federal revenues will increase by just $3 billion over the next five years; and

"Whereas, The uniform volume limit in the proposed act will force local governments to compete to finance worthwhile public projects with fewer dollars, pitting hospitals against housing for senior citizens; and

"Whereas, The uniform volume limit will specifically reduce multifamily mortgage revenue bonds by more than 90% and single-family mortgage revenue bonds by nearly 70%, thus seriously undercutting California's efforts to produce more affordable housing; and

"Whereas, Because the proposed requirement in the act that bond proceeds be spent within 30 days is unrealistic and proposed new definitions in the act for qualified bonds are unclear, many bonds for needed public works will become taxable, thereby boosting local borrowing costs; and

"Whereas, The January 1, 1986, effective date of the "Tax Reform Act" places an unfair and unreasonable burden on California's local governments and taxpayers of complying with the fundamental changes in the proposed act even before it is enacted; and

"Whereas, The January 1, 1986, effective date has brought the California tax-exempt bond market nearly to a halt, with only two local tax-exempt financings worth $60 million having been completed in California and filed with the California Debt Advisory Commission since January 1, 1986, as compared with 35 financings worth $300 million in January 1985; and

"Whereas, Tax-exempt bonds issued in 1986 could become retroactively taxable to January 1, 1986, if the proposed act becomes law; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of California, That the Members of the Senate of the State of California respectfully memorialize the President andy the Congress of the United States to carefully consider how the loss of tax-exempt financing for California outweighs the expected increase in federal revenues, particularly at a time when California's local governments will lose substantial revenues from the end of federal General Revenue Sharing and from the federal Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Law; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Members of the Senate respectfully request the California congressional delegation to pursue postponement of the effective date in revisions to the tax exempt bond provisions of the tax code to either the date of its enactment or a date certain in 1987; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

POM-767. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Finance:

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION No. 74

"Whereas, The benefit payment procedures under Title II of the Social Security Act which are followed upon the death of an insured individual or benficiary, including a dependent or survivor, are in need of reformation by providing for the payment of a lump-sum death benefit, in an equitable manner and in a realistic amount; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to amend Title II of the Social Security Act to reform the benefit payment procedures which are followed upon the death of an insured individual or beneficiary by providing for the payment of a realistic lump-sum death benefit to the surviving spouse, dependents, other survivors, or to any other person or persons assuming responsibility for the burial expenses of the insured individual or beneficiary; and be it further

"Resolved, That the President and the Congress of the United States enact legislation to amend Title II of the Social Security Act to provide final payment of Social Security benefits for the month during which an insured individual or beneficiary dies; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Chairperson of the House Select Committee on Aging, to the Chairperson of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

POM-768. A resolution adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Finance:

"RESOLUTIONS MEMORIALIZING THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES TO ENACT LEGISLATION TO CORRECT THE TAX LAW WHICH REQUIRES SOCIAL SECURITY RECIPIENTS TO INCLUDE TAX EXEMPT INTEREST IN DETERMINING THE AMOUNT OF SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS SUBJECT TO TAX

"Whereas, the current law, established by the Social Security amendments of nineteen hundred and eighty-three requires a Social Security beneficiary to add tax-exempt interest to adjusted gross income (and one-half of the Social Security benefits) to determine whether a tax is owed on the Social Security benefit; and

"Whereas, the current law causes Social Security recipients to be treated in a discriminatory manner by the tax system relative to all other taxpayers who have tax-exempt interest income; and

"Whereas, tax-exempt interest used to determine additional tax liability for Social Security beneficiaries is entirely ignored by other taxpayers for personal income tax purposes; and

"Whereas, the result is that Social Security recipients are the lone class of taxpayers who are burdened by additional tax liability from traditionally tax-exempt income; and

"Whereas, the current tax-exempt interest law affects only those beneficiaries near the twenty-five thousand dollars (thirty-two thousand dollars for a couple) Social Security taxation threshold; and

"Whereas, people above these incomes will pay tax on one-half of their benefits regardless of the tax-exempt income provision; Now therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Massachusetts General Court hereby urges the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to correct this discriminatory and unfair tax levied upon Social Security recipients; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted forthwith by the Clerk of the House of Representatives to the President of the United States, the presiding officer of each branch of Congress and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth."

POM-769. A resolution adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"RESOLUTIONS MEMORIALIZING THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES TO ACT FOR THE CURBING OF DRUG TRAFFICKING

"Whereas, The flow of controlled substances such as cocaine, marijuana and heroin continues into the United States from countries with which the United States has existing agreements supplying economic and military aid to said countries; and

"Whereas, the elimination of such drug trafficking and the flow of drugs into the United States would benefit the citizens of the United States in general, and the citizens of this Commonwealth, in particular; Now therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Massachusetts General Court respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to terminate all economic and military aid to countries identified by the drug enforcement agencies of the Federal Government as sources of controlled substances and sites from which such controlled substances are transported to or sold to persons transporting such drugs to the United States; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted forthwith by the Clerk of the House of Representatives to the Presiding Officer of each branch of the Congress and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth."

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION No. 93

"Whereas, The Libyan head of state, Colonel Moammar Khadafy, has repeatedly assisted and supported terrorist activities throughout the world; and

"Whereas, Moammar Khadafy supported the terrorist slaying of TWA and El Al passengers at the Vienna and Rome airports on December 27, 1985; and

"Whereas, At the direction of Libyan authorities, a bombing occurred in a West Berlin disco on April 5, 1986, killing United States Army Sergeant Kenneth Ford and wounding 50 other military personnel; and

"Whereas, Terrorist attacks in Western Europe have claimed 19 lives and wounded nearly 400 people since January 1985; and

"Whereas, The President of the United States took all due care to ensure that there was proof of Khadafy's involvement in these acts; and

"Whereas, State-sponsored terrorism represents an unacceptable threat to the freedom and security of all people; and

"Whereas, Khadafy has repeatedly ignored all peaceful appeals by the United Nations to stop offering sanctuary to terrorists; and

"Whereas, All diplomatic efforts by the United States of America and its allies have not persuaded Colonel Khadafy to halt his aiding and abetting of terrorist activities; now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California, Realizing that the necessity for the use of military force on any occasion is regrettable, supports the difficult decision of the President of the United States to order air strikes on Libya; and be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature acknowledges that these military actions came only after repeated and sincere attempts by the United States at peaceful, nonmilitary pressure to resolve the growing tide of terrorism against Americans abroad; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION No. 26

"Whereas, totalitarian regimes seeking to undermine democratic nations have resorted to acts of international terrorism as means of imposing their will upon families, populations and governments; and

"Whereas, acts of international terrorism have been increasing in an unacceptable manner; and

"Whereas, United States citizens and United States interests have consistently been the target of thirty to thirty-five percent of worldwide terrorist attacks; and

"Whereas, worldwide travel has become an unnecessarily hazardous undertaking for all American military, businessmen, and tourists; and

"Whereas, trained professional terrorists attempt to do everything possible to achieve maximum publicity for their acts of violence in order to have their cause or beliefs taken seriously by the public; and

"Whereas, the necessity to protect our democratic ideals and way of life from the manipulative power of international acts of terrorism must be a foremost concern of this nation, since the subordination of the importance of these acts will only lead us to the same tenuous equilibrium of existence found in the parent countries of terrorism.

"Therefore be it resolved That the Legislature of Louisiana condemns the perpetration of acts of international terrorism and finds that acts of international terrorism are unacceptable and that this crime against humanity must be combatted on all levels.

"Be it further resolved That the Legislature of Louisiana supports the anti-terrorist policies of the present presidential administration and memorializes the Congress of the United States and in particular the members of the Louisiana congressional delegation to insure the implementation of those policies in as expeditious a manner as possible.

"Be it further resolved That copies of this Resolution shall be forwarded to the president of the United States, to the secretary of the Senate and the clerk of the House of the Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each member of the Louisiana congressional delegation."

"SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION No. 56

"Whereas, for more than 200 years, American business, industry, and workers have displayed the willingness, capability, and flexibility to meet the challenges of the ever-changing world; and

"Whereas, American business, industry, and workers have generated a model economy and strength that has become the envy of the world and have produced a higher standard of living in this country than in any other nation in the world; and

"Whereas, American workers and manufacturers, through their accomplishments in production, assembly, and transportation of goods to and for consumers and government, have produced more consumer products than ever before imagined; and

"Whereas, American industry and workers, during times of peace and national or global emergency, have met the call from home and from abroad and saved many allied nations from aggressors; and

"Whereas, American democratic institutions, industry, and workers have displayed the intent to strive in the future to improve the quality of life in the United States and throughout the world, and to continue to balance the pursuit of profit with competition, while advancing their long-held values of social justice and fairness in the community; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the United States Congress to proclaim June 21, 1986, as Save American Industry and Jobs Day, a day of national recognition of the accomplishments of workers, businesses, and manufacturing industries; and be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature ask all Americans to join in a national salute to the combined achievements of these workers, businesses, and manufacturing industries, and in so doing, encourage all appropriate national, state, and local activity that will broaden the recognition of Save American Industry and Jobs Day; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit copies of the resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, and the Capitol Press Corps."

"Whereas, The willingness of business and industry to be flexible, able to change and to create change, and an American workforce, willing and capable to meet the challenge, has produced a higher standard of living in this country than in any other nation in the world; and

"Whereas, American workers and manufacturers have produced more consumer products than could have been imagined 200 years ago, and have excelled in production, assembly, and transportation of those goods to and for consumers and government; and

"Whereas, During times of peace and national or global emergency, American industry and workers have met the call from home and from abroad, saving many allied nations from aggressors; and

"Whereas, We have faith in our democratic institutions, industry, and workers, to improve the quality of life here and everywhere, to blend the pursuit of profit with competition, without forgetting to advance our long-held values of social justice and fairness in the community; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Members of the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, in adopting this resolution, request the United States Congress to proclaim June 21, 1986, as Save American Industry/Jobs Day, a day of national recognition of the accomplishments of workers, businesses, and manufacturing industries; and be it further

"Whereas, In less than 200 years of development, American workers and industry built an industrial economy the strength of which became the envy of the world; and

"Whereas, The ability of workers and industry to change to meet the needs of its citizens and to meet any challenge has resulted in a standard of living higher than that of any nation in the world; and

"Whereas, Throughout this period of time, American workers have produced more goods and services than anyone could have possibly imagined and achieved goals no one dreamt possible; and

"Whereas, American workers and industry have been called upon many times during national emergencies to protect our way of life and our standard of living, and they have also been called upon on numerous occasions to help other nations to protect themselves from foreign aggressors and have saved many from dictatorships; and

"Whereas, We have faith in our democratic institutions to improve the quality of life for all people and support the free enterprise system, while at the same time advancing our long held social values of justice and fairness throughout society; and

"Whereas, Other countries throughout the world building an industrial base similar to ours, except that they are built and financed by their governments, have unfortunately made it difficult if not impossible for American workers and industry to compete; and

"Whereas, We wish to call attention to the plight of the American Industrial worker and American Industry before it is too late; therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Senate of the eighty-fourth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, That we request the United States Congress proclaim June 21, 1986, as a day of national recognition of the accomplishments of American workers and American Industry; and be it further

"RESOLUTIONS MEMORIALIZING THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES TO ENACT LEGISLATION AWARDING RICHARD F. WALSH THE MILITARY DECORATIONS KNOWN AS THE DISTINGUISHED FLYING CROSS AND THE PURPLE HEART

"Whereas, There is pending before the Congress of the United States H.R. 4641, introduced by Represenative Brian J. Donnelly of Massachusetts, which seeks to provide that the President may award to Richard F. Walsh of Quincy, Massachusetts, two military decorations he earned through serving his country during World War II; and

"Whereas, These military decorations are known as the Distinguished Flying Cross which is for his act of heroism, that allowed the safe return of his B-24 bomber and its crew from a bombing mission of April thirtieth, nineteen hundred and forty-four and the Purple Heart which is for injuries received during a bombing mission of July fourth, nineteen hundred and forty-four; Now therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Massachusetts Senate respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to enact the legislation providing for the President to award Richard F. Walsh these military decorations which he earned while serving his country during World War II; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted forthwith by the Clerk of the Senate to the President of the United States, to the Presiding officer of each branch of Congress, to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth and to the members of the Veterans Affairs Committee in the House of Representatives of the United States."

"HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 46

"Whereas, the concurrent recession in the construction industry makes it extremely doubtful that the facilities can ever be built in the future for the bid costs as low as those currently being experienced, which are running fifteen to twenty-five percent below normal; and

"Whereas, with the time required to finish construction of the uncompleted facilities being two years, and the limiting factor on a future decision to purchase more crude oil is the time required to build facilities to store the oil, abandonment of the increase in Bayou Choctaw capacity and major SPR capacity increase in the Big Hill facility, each of which is approximately fifty percent complete, does not seem at all prudent; and

"Whereas, with the current trend toward reduced oil prices internationally it makes sense to be in a position to buy additional oil at the lowest point of the pricing cycle since after the current depression in price level the cost of crude oil will rise to new greater heights and remain there indefinitely; and

"Whereas, location of the largest possible emergency crude source in coastal Louisiana and Texas will continue to support the decisions of private oil companies to maintain their active oil refining capacities in this region as compared to other locations; and

"Whereas, the nation's buildup of military defenses would be useless without the petroleum products on which to operate, the need for the larger reserve for military reasons should be considered as well as the support of the domestic economy in the event of a boycott (or other disruption to the supply of imported crude oil); and

"Whereas, total crude oil inventories in the United States today (SPR plus private sector) are inadequate to handle a sustained cutoff of imported crude (the seven hundred fifty million barrel level authorized by Congress is a minimum requirement, and current inventory and capacity of facilities is less than five hundred million barrels); and

"Whereas, support of the Mexican government through economic aid in the form of oil purchases is the most favorable approach since the United States receives a specific useable commodity for our funds, and the elimination of this will likely result in requests by Mexico for more direct economic aid and pressure to render such aid on a giveaway basis; and

"Whereas, the halting of this construction would result in the direct loss of three to four hundred jobs plus the loss of additional three to four hundred construction jobs: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Legislature of Louisiana does hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States and in particular the members of the Louisiana congressional delegation to lift the moratorium on the use of funds which have already been appropriated and were immediately available to continue construction of additional storage facilities for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve: be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of this Resolution shall be forwarded to the secretary of the Senate and the clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each member of the Louisiana congressional delegation."

"Whereas, the forest product industry is a vital component in the economy of this state and the economy of this nation; and

"Whereas, the forest product industry is based on a renewable resource which, if properly managed, will provide jobs and trade opportunities in this state and in this country for generations to come; and

"Whereas, the forest products industry is currently being threatened by the importation of forest products which are subsidized by the governments of foreign countries; and

"Whereas, it is in the best interest of the economies of this state and this nation that the United States Congress support and pass legislation to insure that the domestic forest products industry will be able to compete based on ability and not on subsidies; and

"Whereas, the Omnibus Trade Bill, House Resolution No. 4800, now being considered by the Congress, contains provisions which will accomplish this goal: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Louisiana does hereby memorialize the United States Congress to support and pass House Resolution No. 4800 and other legislation containing provisions which will allow the domestic forest products industry to compete on ability rather than subsidy, be it further

Resolved, That copies of this Resolution shall be transmitted immediately to the presiding officers of each house of the United States Congress and to each member of the Louisiana Delegation to the Congress."

"Whereas, the oil and gas industry is of great economic importance to this nation and the state of Louisiana; and

"Whereas, a readily available supply of domestic oil is essential to national security; and

"Whereas, the petroleum industry is facing an economic crisis which threatens its continued prosperity; and

"Whereas, the Archer/Moore energy act, cited as the Emergency Energy Act of 1986, would help alleviate the pressure upon the oil companies and encourage new exploration of oil and gas sites; and

"Whereas, any alleviation of economic pressure on the oil and gas industry would also benefit the state and the people of Louisiana as well as the nation as a whole: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Louisiana does hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States and in particular the members of the Louisiana delegation to unite in support of the Archer/Moore "Emergency Energy Act of 1986": Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this Resolution shall be forwarded to the secretary of the Senate and the clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each member of the Louisiana congressional delegation."

POM-790. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 49"

"Whereas, the use of terrorist tactics to impose unwelcome political ideologies upon all the people of the world has recently grown to abhorrent levels; and

"Whereas, Colonel Moammar Khaddafi, in the capacity of president of Libya, has publicly supported global terrorist activities, particularly acts perpetrated against innocent American citizens and allies; and

"Whereas, the public announcement of this policy can be considered nothing more than an uninvited declaration of war utilizing a tool of war which is as lethal as any conventional weapon; and

"Whereas, the actualization of prior verbal threats, such as the bombing of the LaBelle discotheque in West Germany resulting in the tragic death of U.S. Army Sergeant Kenneth Ford and the injury of two hundred and thirty people, can never be ignored; and

"Whereas, the failure of all conventional sanctions against Libya determined that the only remaining method of retaliation could be the forceful response which President Reagan chose to effect against the military and terrorist installation on the Libyan mainland; and

"Whereas, any action taken to safeguard the liberties and basic human rights of all people, especially those involving the eradication of terrorist installations and supporters of governments which utilize terrorism, are a necessity as the two cannot coexist in a peaceful society.

"Therefore be it resolved that the Legislature of Louisiana does hereby condemn the perpetration of all acts of international terrorism and congratulates President Reagan on his recent actions against the terrorist nation of Libya.

"Be it further resolved that the Legislature of Louisiana memorializes the Congress of the United States and in particular the members of the Louisiana congressional delegation to continue to support the anti-terrorist policies of President Reagan and to insure the implementation of those policies in as expeditious a manner as possible.

"Be it further resolved that copies of this Resolution shall be forwarded to the president of the United States, to the secretary of the Senate, and the clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each member of the Louisiana congressional delegation."

POM-793. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

"HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION No. 153

"Whereas, throughout more than two hundred years of development, American business, industry, and workers have generated a model economy and strength that have become the envy of the world; and

"Whereas, the willingness of business and industry to be flexible, able to change and to create change and an American work force, willing and capable to meet the challenge, has produced a higher standard of living in this country than in any other nation in the world; and

"Whereas, American workers and manufacturers have produced more consumer products than could have been imagined two hundred years ago, excelling in production, assembly, and transportation of those goods to and for consumers and government; and

"Whereas, American industry and workers have, during times of peace and national or global emergency, met the call from home and the call from abroad, saving many allied nations from aggressors; and

"Whereas, we have faith in our democratic institutions, industry, and workers, to improve the quality of life here and everywhere, to blend the pursuit of profit with competition, without forgetting to advance long-held values of social justice and fairness in the community.

"Therefore, be it resolved that the Legislature of Louisiana does hereby request the United States Congress to proclaim June 21, 1986, "Save American Industry/Jobs Day", a day of national recognition of the accomplishments of workers, business, and manufacturing industries.

"Be it further resolved that we ask all Americans to join in a national salute to the combined achievements of these workers, businesses, and manufacturing industries, and in so doing, we encourage all appropriate national, state, and local activity that will broaden the recognition of "Save American Industry/Jobs Day".

"Be it further resolved that certified copies of this Resolution shall be forwarded to the secretary of the Senate and the clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to each member of the Louisiana congressional delegation, and to the news media of Louisiana."

POM-794. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana; to the Committee on Small Business:

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION No. 69

"Whereas, the federal administration's proposed fiscal budget proposes the elimination of the federal agency known as the Small Business Administration (S.B.A.); and

"Whereas, the people of Louisiana rely heavily on both the financial and management services supplied by the S.B.A. to fledgling small businesses in Louisiana; and

"Whereas, Louisiana must look to small business development to help overcome the economic problems developing in this state due to the economic revolution occurring in agriculture and agriculture-related businesses; and

"Whereas, there are relatively few private banking and other lending institutions providing loan funds in Louisiana who are willing or able without the availability of the S.B.A. guarantee; and

"Whereas, this legislature has established and funded agencies to assist small business development, but cannot afford to replace the S.B.A. program which is so vital to the total package of development assistance needed to generate economic business development in this state; and

"Whereas, the services provided by the S.B.A. of guaranteeing loans from private lending institutions and of providing business management training, market development training, and providing knowledgeable access to government contracts and product development, are the core services that need to be continued by the S.B.A. in Louisiana.

"Therefore be it resolved that the Legislature of Louisiana does hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States and in particular the members of the Louisiana congressional delegation to continue the operation of the Small Business Administration as a lean and effective agency providing loan guarantee services, management training, market development training, assistance in securing government contracts, and new product development assistance.

"Be it further resolved that certified copies of this Resolution shall be forwarded to the secretary of the Senate and the clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each member of the Louisiana congressional delegation."

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. SIMON (for himself, Mr. WEICKER, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. KERRY, Mr. SPECTER, and Mr. METZENBAUM):

S. 2639. A bill to prohibit the removal by United States citizens and companies of natural resources from Namibia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PROHIBITION ON REMOVAL OF NATURAL RESOURCES FROM NAMIBIA

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I introduce this bill on behalf of myself and my colleagues, Senators WEICKER, CRANSTON, SARBANES, LEAHY, KENNEDY, KERRY, SPECTER, and METZENBAUM.

Recently, I introduced a bill calling for a ban on imports of South African coal, steel, and fluorspar. Today I am introducing another piece of sanctions legislation addressing South Africa's illegal occupation of neighboring Namibia.

My bill will bring the United States into compliance with international law by prohibiting U.S. companies from exploration, extraction, processing, or trade in natural mineral resources derived from Namibia.

The United Nations, with the approval of the United States, as well as the International Court of Justice, has determined that South Africa's occupation of Namibia is illegal and has called for the diplomatic and economic isolation of South Africa whenever it acts on behalf of Namibia.

Through its illegal administration and military presence, South Africa imposes a brutal colonial apartheid rule on Namibia. This bill will send a message to South Africa and the world that the United States is committed to ending South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia and to preserving Namibia's natural resources for its people.●

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, 3 years ago, Senator DANFORTH and I cosponsored a tariff bill to suspend temporarily the duty on certain novelty items. These novelty items are usually inexpensive toys, games, and jewelry that are placed in vending capsules and sold in vending machines across the country at very low prices, usually less than 5 cents each. The temporary suspension of duty, which was noncontroversial in 1982, will expire on December 31, 1986. I am informed by my constituent, Mr. Larry Goldstein of Graff Vending Co. in Dallas, TX, that conditions have not changed significantly since the temporary suspension of duty went into effect. Such toys are generally not available within the United States and no domestic industry would appear to be injured by the reduction in the rate of duty. Therefore, I am today joining, Senator DANFORTH in cosponsorship of S. 2607, a bill to extend the suspension of duties on certain small toys. Under the bill, the temporary suspension of duties would expire on December 31, 1989.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 442—RELATIVE TO THE DEATH OF HON. JOHN P. EAST

Mr. HELMS submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 442

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of the Honorable John P. East, a Senator from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit an enrolled copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That when the Senate recesses today, it recess as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased.

SENATE RESOLUTION 443—MAKING MAJORITY APPOINTMENTS TO THE COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES AND THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. DOLE submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 443

Resolved, That the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Broyhill) is hereby appointed to serve as a majority member on the Committees on Armed Services and Judiciary for the 99th Congress.

AMENDMENT

SEC. . Section 13(d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after the subsection designation; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) The provisions of sections 6, 7, and 12 shall not apply with respect to any individual who serves a league baseball team as a bat boy or bat girl for the team if the individual—

"(i) has attained 14 years of age but not 16 years of age;

"(ii) serves as a bat boy or bat girl not more than two nights per week; and

"(iii) while school is in session, works not later than 11 post meridian.

"(B) For the purpose of this paragraph, the term 'bat boy or bat girl' means an individual who provides the traditional services of a bat boy or bat girl for a league baseball team, including a ball boy or girl, and shall not include services unrelated to the game of baseball, such as, but not limited to, laundry services for the team or policing the baseball field.".

D'AMATO AMENDMENT NO. 2201

Mr. HATCH (for Mr. D'AMATO) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 2444, supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

TITLE .—DESIGNATION OF REGIONAL PRIMATE RESEARCH CENTER DESIGNATION AUTHORIZED

SEC. . (a) The Secretary of Health and Human Services, through the Division of Research Resources of the National Institutes of Health, shall designate as a Regional Primate Research Center a laboratory for experimental medicine and surgery in primates which is in existence on the date of the enactment of this Act. The laboratory designated under this subsection shall be a laboratory which was initially established in 1965 and which became formally sponsored by an association of schools of medicine in 1967.

(b) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide the Regional Primate Research Center designated under subsection (a) with opportunities for consideration for core support and grants to suppport biomedical research equal to the opportunities for consideration for such support and grants provided to all other Regional Primate Research Centers designated by the Secretary.

ZORINSKY AMENDMENT NO. 2202

Mr. HATCH (for Mr. ZORINSKY) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 2444, supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

TITLE —BEGINNING READING INSTRUCTION STUDY AND LISTING

SEC. . (a) The Secretary of Education (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary") shall conduct a study in order to compile a complete list, by name, of beginning reading instruction programs and methods, indicating—

(1) the average cost per pupil of such programs and methods, and

(2) whether such programs and methods do or do not present well-designed phonics instruction as recommended in the Report of the Commission on Reading, "Becoming a Nation of Readers".

The listing required by this section shall be written in such a way as to be understandable to the general public.

(b) In carrying out the study required by this section, the Secretary shall solicit public comments on beginning reading programs and methods.

(c) The Secretary shall prepare and submit to the Congress such interim reports of the study and listing as the Secretary deems advisable. The Secretary shall prepare and submit a final report containing the listing required by this subsection to the Congress not later than 12 months after the date of the enactment of this section. The Secretary shall publicize and disseminate nationally the listing required by this section to the education community, parents, and other interested parties.

HAWKINS (AND DENTON) AMENDMENT NO. 2203

Mr. HATCH (for Mrs. HAWKINS, for herself, and Mr. DENTON) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 2444, supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new title:

TITLE VI—CHILDREN'S JUSTICE

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 601. This title may be cited as the "Children's Justice Act".

CHILDREN'S JUSTICE GRANT

SEC. 602. (a) GRANT AUTHORIZATION.—Section 4 of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (d), (e), (f), and (f) (the second time such designation appears), as subsections (e), (f), (g), and (h), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) The Secretary (acting through the Center and in consultation with the Attorney General) is authorized to make grants to the States for the purpose of assisting States in developing, establishing, and operating programs designed to improve (A) the handling of child abuse cases, particularly cases of child sexual abuse, in a manner which limits additional trauma to the child victim, and (B) the investigation and prosecution of cases of child abuse, particularly child sexual abuse.

"(2) In order for a State to qualify for assistance under this subsection, such State shall—

"(A) fulfill the requirements of subsections (b)(2) and (4) or receive a waiver of such requirements under subsection (b)(3);

"(B) establish a task force as provided in paragraph (3);

"(C) fulfill the requirements of paragraph (4); and

"(D) submit an application to the Secretary at such time and containing such information and assurances as the Secretary considers necessary, including an assurance that the State will make such reports to the Secretary as may reasonably be required and will maintain and provide access to records relating to activities under this subsection.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a State requesting assistance under this subsection shall establish or designate a multidisciplinary task force on children's justice composed (hereinafter referred to as "the task force") of professionals with knowledge and experience related to the criminal justice system and issues of child abuse. The task force shall include individuals representing the law enforcement community, judicial and legal officers (including individuals involved with the defense as well as the prosecution of such cases), child advocates, health and mental health professionals, individuals representing child protective service agencies, individuals experienced in working with handicapped children, parents, and parents' groups.

"(B) As determined by the Secretary, a commission or task force established after January 1, 1983, with substantially comparable membership and functions, may be considered the task force for the purposes of this subsection.

"(C) Before a State receives assistance under this subsection, the task force shall (i) review and evaluate State investigative, administrative, and judicial handling of cases of child abuse, particularly child sexual abuse, and (ii) make recommendations in each of the categories described in paragraph (4). The task force may make such other comments and recommendations as are considered relevant and useful.

"(4)(A) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (B), the State shall adopt recommendations of the task force in each of the following categories:

"(i) investigative, administrative, and judicial handling of cases of child abuse, particularly child sexual abuse cases, in a manner which reduces the additional trauma to the child victim and which also ensures procedural fairness to the accused;

"(ii) experimental, model, and demonstration programs for testing innovative approaches and techniques which may improve the rate of successful prosecution or enhance the effectiveness of judicial and administrative action in child abuse cases, particularly sexual abuse cases, and which also ensure procedural fairness to the accused; and

"(iii) reform of State laws, ordinances, regulations, and procedures to provide comprehensive protection for children for abuse, particularly sexual abuse, while ensuring fairness to all affected persons.

"(B) As determined by the Secretary, a State shall be considered to have met the requirements of this paragraph if—

"(i) the State adopts an alternative to the recommendations of the task force, which carries out the purposes of this subsection, in each of the categories under paragraph (A) for the task force's recommendations are not adopted; or

"(ii) the State is making substantial progress toward adopting the recommendations of the task force or a comparable alternative to such recommendations.

"(5) For grants under paragraph (1), the Secretary may use the amount authorized by section 1404A of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984.".

(b) CRIME VICTIMS FUND.—(1) Section 1402(c)(1) of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10601(c)(1)) is amended by striking out "$100 million" and inserting in lieu thereof "$110 million".

(2) Section 1402(d)(2) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(2) The Fund shall be available as follows:

"(A) Of the first $100,000,000 deposited in the Fund each fiscal year—

"(i) 45 percent shall be available for grants under section 1403;

"(ii) 45 percent shall be available for grants under section 1404(a);

"(iii) 5 percent shall be available for grants under section 1404(c); and

"(iv) 5 percent shall be available for grants as provided in section 1404A.

"(B) The next $5,000,000 deposited in the Fund in a particular fiscal year shall be available for grants as provided in section 1404A.

"(C) If the deposits in the Fund in a particular fiscal year exceed $105,000,000, 50 percent of the amount in excess of $105,000,000 shall be available for grants under section 1403 and 50 percent of such amount shall be available for grants under section 1404(a).".

(3) Such Act is amended by inserting after section 1404 the following new section:

"CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT GRANTS

"SEC. 1404A. The amount prescribed by section 1402(d)(2) for this section shall be made available to the Secretary of Health and Human Services for grants under section 4(d) of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act.".

(4) Section 1404(c) of such Act is amended by striking out "(c)" and all that follows through "The Federal Administrator shall—" in paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(c)(1) The Attorney General, acting through the (Assistant General for the Office of Justice Programs,) shall make grants—

"(A) for training and technical assistance services to eligible crime victim assistance programs; and 11 "(B) for the financial support of services to victims of Federal crime by eligible crime victim assistance programs.

"(2) Of the amount available for grants under this subsection—

"(A) not less than 50 percent shall be used for grants under paragraph (1)(A); and

"(B) not more than 50 percent shall be used for grants under paragraph (1)(B).

"(3) The Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Justice Programs shall—".

(5) Section 1404(a)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "not used for grants under section 1403" and all that follows through "subsection (c)" and inserting in lieu thereof "made available by section 1402(d)(2) for the purpose of grants under this section, or for the purposes of grants under section 1403 but not used for that purposes,".

THE NATIONAL CENTER ON CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT

SEC. 603. (a) STUDIES AND REPORTS.—Section 2(b) of the Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (3), (4), (6), (7), (8), and (9), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) compile, evaluate, publish, and disseminate to each State such materials and information as may assist the States in achieving the objectives of section 4(d), including an evaluation of various methods and procedures for the investigation and prosecution of child physical and sexual abuse cases and resultant psychological trauma of the child victim;";

(3) by inserting after paragraph (4) (as so redesignated) the following new paragraph:

"(5) develop and disseminate, to appropriate State and local officials, model training materials to assist in training law enforcement, legal, judicial, medical, mental health, and child welfare personnel in appropriate methods of interacting during investigative, administrative, and judicial proceedings with children subjected to child abuse;";

(4) by amending paragraph (7) (as so redesignated) to read as follows:

"(7) conduct research on the causes, prevention, identification, and treatment of child abuse and neglect, and on appropriate and effective investigative, administrative, and judicial procedures in cases of child abuse;"; and

(5) by inserting after paragraph (9) (as so redesignated) the following new paragraph:

"(10) Not later than two years after the first fiscal year for which funds are appropriated under section 5(b), the Secretary shall—

"(A) evaluate the effectiveness of assisted programs in achieving the objectives of section 4(d); and

"(B) submit a report to the appropriate committees of the Congress of such evaluation and of technical assistance in achieving the objectives of such section provided to the States through the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect.".

"(b) DISSEMINATION REQUIREMENT.—Information and materials under sections 2(b)(2) and 2(b)(5) of the Act shall be made available to appropriate State officials not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

COORDINATION OF FEDERAL PROGRAMS CONCERNING CHILD ABUSE

SEC. 604. Section 6(a) of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act is amended—

(1) by inserting after the first sentence "The Advisory Board shall meet at least every six months."; and

(2) in the second sentence by inserting "in order to prevent unnecessary duplication of such programs, to ensure efficient allocation of resources, and to assure that programs effectively address all aspects of the child abuse problem" after "Board".

ACQUISITION OF STATISTICAL DATA

SEC. 605. (a) DATA ACQUISITION FOR 1986, 1987, AND 1988.—The Attorney General shall acquire from criminal justice agencies statistical data, for the calendar years 1986, 1987, and 1988, about the incidence of child abuse, including child sexual abuse, and shall publish annually a summary of such data.

(b) MODIFICATION OF UNIFORM CRIME REPORTING PROGRAM.—(1) As soon as practicable, but in no case later than January 1, 1989, the Attorney General shall modify the uniform crime reporting program in the Federal Bureau of Investigation to include data on the age of the victim of the offense and the relationship, if any, of the victim to the offender, for types of offenses that may involve child abuse, including child sexual abuse.

(2) The modification, once made, shall remain in effect until the later of—

(A) 10 years after the date it is made; or

(B) such ending date as may be set by the Attorney General.

AMENDMENT TO PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT

SEC. 606. (a) SECTION 523.—Section 523(e) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290dd-3(e)) is amended by adding after and below paragraph (2) the following: "The prohibitions of this section do not apply to the reporting under State law of incidents of suspected child abuse and neglect to the appropriate State authorities.".

(b) SECTION 527.—Section 527(e) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 290ee-3(e)) is amended by adding after and below paragraph (2) the following: "The prohibitions of this section do not apply to the reporting under State law of incidents of suspected child abuse and neglect to the appropriate State authorities.".

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Governmental Affairs, will hold a hearing on the growing epidemic of "crack" cocaine on American youth.

The hearing will be held on Wednesday, July 15, 1986, at 9:30 a.m. in Senate Dirksen 342. For further information, please contact Daniel Rinzel or Eleanore Hill of the subcommittee staff at 224-3721.

The additional measure is S. 2384, to amend Public Law 95-625 to permit the acquisition of certain lands for an administrative site for the New River Gorge National River, WV. As previously announced, testimony also will be received on S. 2534, to authorize the acquisition and development of a mainland tour boat facility for the Fort Sumter National Monument, SC, and for other purposes; and S. 2506, to establish a Great Basin National Park in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes.

Those wishing to testify should contact the Subcommittee on Public Lands, Reserved Water and Resource Conservation of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, room SD-308, Senate Dirksen Office Building, Washington, DC 20510. Oral testimony may be limited to 5 minutes per witness. Written statements may be longer. Witnesses may be placed in panels, and are requested to submit 25 copies of their testimony 24 hours in advance of the hearing, and 50 copies on the day of the hearing. For further information, please contact Patty Kennedy or Tony Bevinetto of the subcommittee staff at (202) 224-0613.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT

GESTURES ACROSS THE GREEN LINE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, one of the difficulties in foreign affairs is that we pay attention to countries when they emerge in the headlines, and when the headlines disappear, our interest wanes.

Cyprus is a good illustration of that difficulty. A few months ago, I had the privilege of being in Cyprus, visiting with both the Greek and Turkish Cypriot leaders. But the pressure to act, to resolve this matter, is simply not there.

I received assurances from both Presidents Ford and Carter that they would act on the Cyprus question, and I have no doubt about their good will in assuring me they would act. But the reality is that other matters captured their attention, and Cyprus was put on the back burner.

One exmple of our lack of attention to the Cyprus problem is the fact that there is no longer a person in the State Department who acts as Special Coordinator for Cyprus as there has been under previous administrations. There should be a person who reports directly to the Assistant Secretary for European Affairs about this important problem.

Another example is the fact that under United States law, the President is required to report to Congress every 60 days on the progress in the negotiations on Cyprus. According to documents in the Foreign Relations Committee, that reporting requirement has not been complied with—in any of the last 4 years. Although reports are on file, there is an insufficient number. The reports also focus primarily on the intercommunal aspects of the problem. The international aspect, notably Turkey's countinuing illegal occupation of a large part of Cyprus using United States-supplied arms given for common defense, and the continuing violations of the human rights of the Greek Cypriot refugees, receives no attention.

I am not attempting to cast blame on anyone but the fact that these reports have not been filed in strict compliance with the law symbolizes the general neglect of the Cyprus problem. The fact that the reporting requirement was instituted more then 10 years ago, and that the crisis just drags on, makes it even more urgent that we pay close attention to the Cyprus situation now.

Resolving the problem of Cyprus is in everyone's interest: improved relations between Turkey and Greece will, in turn, benefit Turkey, Greece, the United States, and NATO.

One of the impediments to a solution in Cyprus is that, because of Turkey's military importance, the administration has continued to advocate an unwarranted level of military aid to Turkey. The U.S. military has dominated the decisionmaking process, and we have not moved to resolve this. Sending more and more military aid to Turkey does not improve the prospects for peace in the region or the prospects for a settlement in Cyprus.

In 1986 Congress successfully maintained the 7-to-10 ratio of military aid between Greece and Turkey despite the fact that the administration attempted to change that historic policy by increasing military aid to Turkey. Although Congress cut back on the President's request, the aid package Congress approved for Turkey in 1986 was more than generous. This year, Turkey received $618.4 million in military aid. Of that, $205.8 million was in outright grants and $339 million was in loans at concessional rates. Turkey also received $220 million in economic support funds. In contrast, Greece received $430.7 million in military aid and received no grants or economic support funds. Congress also had to fight to see that Greece received the same portion of aid at concessional rates as Turkey.

Still, the administration persists in asking for greater amounts of military aid to Turkey in 1987. Despite the fact that Congress has already authorized a level of assistance that preserves the historic 7-to-10 ratio, the administration has again proposed raising the level of military aid to Turkey. For 1987, the administration proposes to raise the level of aid to $820 million, of which $220 million is an outright grant and $455 million is in loans at concessional rates. Meanwhile, Greece is to receive $500 million in loans at market rates.

In short, the administration is proposing more military aid to Turkey, whose troops are still occupying Cyprus in violation of international law and using U.S.-supplied military arms and equipment in violation of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961. At the same time, earlier this year they proposed lowering aid to Cyprus from $15 to $3 million. That funding goes for such worthy programs as increased educational exchanges for Cypriot students to study in the United States. Fortunately, Congress approved the full $15 million.

It is especially urgent that we continue to aid Cyprus since the Soviet Union is displaying increased interest in Cyprus and has recently submitted a plan for a negotiated settlement on that island. Increasing military aid to Turkey at this time and lowering aid to Cyprus is counterproductive, sends the wrong signal, and is not likely to promote a settlement in Cyprus or enhance peace and stability in the eastern Mediterranean.

It should also be pointed out that Turkey receives a substantial amount of assistance from the Soviet Union. Between 1954 and 1981, it is estimated that Turkey received $3.4 billion. In 1984 Turkey signed a joint economic agreement with the Soviet Union that is estimated to be worth $6 billion between 1986 and 1990. That agreement provides for the joint development of steel, iron, natural gas, and Turkish brown coal. So, no matter what our aid is to Turkey, it is clear that in the next few years, there will be substantial growth in economic aid and trade between Turkey and the Soviet Union.

In view of all these considerations, the administration ought, at the very least, to maintain an evenhanded policy by preserving the historic 7-to-10 ratio of aid between Turkey and Greece and by granting aid to Greece at the same percentage of aid at concessional rates as that granted to Turkey.

I do not want to do anything that will in any way reduce the effectiveness of our strategic or tactical position. But favoring Turkey on the Cyprus question results in neither side feeling as friendly toward us as they might. The only way to improve our relationship with both countries is to resolve the Cyprus situation.

I am very encouraged by the recent visit of Secretary Shultz to Turkey and Greece. I applaud his initiative; it indicates a greater level of involvement and interest by the United States in the problem of Cyprus. I hope, however, that he will resist the Turkish request for more military aid.

Any agreement on Cyprus whether it is negotiated through the United Nations or other efforts, must be fair and viable if it is to be lasting. I hope that a U.N. initiative will yet lead to a solution in Cyprus. If, however, that initiative does not succeed, the United States has to provide the leadership and focus so there will be a solution in Cyprus. That solution should guarantee human and political rights and removal of foreign forces from the island.

I deeply regret Turkey's Prime Minister Ozal's decision to visit the Turkish-occupied areas. It will not contribute to solving the Cyprus problem. Indeed, it will worsen the problem of containing the illegal Turkish presence in Northern Cyprus.

It is also regrettable that Mr. Denktash, leader of the internationally boycotted Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus, recently ordered the closing of all crossing points on Cyprus. This decision left the U.N. Peacekeeping Force separated from one another and presented the most serious threat to the U.N. peacekeeping presence since the Turkish invasion. It also makes impossible the small gestures that can take place across the green line to improve relations between the Greek and Turkish Cypriots. For example, when I visited a very fine school for the deaf in Nicosia on the Greek side and asked the superintendent whether he would be willing to accept Turkish students, he said, "Of course." That could take place. We visited a very fine hospital on the Turkish side where they indicated they would be willing to take Greek Cypriots for specialties they have that the Greek side does not.

A Cyprus settlement would obviously benefit both the international community and the United States, but the most important benefit will be to the people of Cyprus themselves. There is no question, for example, that the standard of living on the Greek side is appreciably higher than it is on the Turkish side. Getting Cyprus back into one country without the artificial division that now exists will also raise the standard of living of the Turkish Cypriots.

Everyone will benefit if we put this back on the front burner. We ought to do it.

I am sending a letter to the Secretary of State urging that resolution of the conflict in Cyprus be put back on the front burner and that we do everything we can to facilitate movement in the right direction.●

HAPPY ENDING

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, on June 26 I placed in the RECORD a series of letters exchanged by me with Liberty Weekend on the subject of limiting attendance at some weekend events to the affluent who could afford $5,000 per seat. Subsequent to that date, I received a letter from Keith E. Eastin, Deputy Under Secretary of the Department of the Interior, advising that seats would be made available at the opening ceremonies to a group of representative citizens as guests of Liberty Weekend.

This decision by Mr. Wolper, and Mr. Eastin made a happy event even happier and I thank them for it. It is a pleasure to join the chorus of congratulations to Mr. Iacocca, Mr. Wolper and their associates on a remarkable celebration of the Fourth of July.

I ask that Mr. Eastin's letter be printed in the RECORD.

The letter follows:

DEPUTY UNDER SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, DC, July 1, 1986.

Re Liberty Weekend.

Hon. CHARLES MCC. MATHIAS, Jr.,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MATHIAS: At Secretary's Hodel's request, and in his medical absence, I am responding to your recent letter concerning seating for the events surrounding Liberty Weekend and the reopening of the Statue of Liberty.

After our discussion Wednesday morning, I met with David Wolper, Executive Producer of Liberty Weekend. He, too, recognized your concern that there be some representation of the less fortunate at the events. To this end, Mr. Wolper has made arrangements with the Partnership for the Homeless to invite representatives of that organization to be present at the Opening Ceremonies on Governor's Island on July 3. That organization is located in New York City and is one of the largest private groups assisting the homeless in the Nation.

In addition to this symbolic presence at the Opening Ceremony, Mr. Wolper is providing cost-free seating at the Closing Ceremonies, July 6, to 4,000 children of New York and New Jersey, 1,500 members of the Girl Scouts, 2,000 members of the families of the Coast Guard working so hard over the Weekend, as well as 5,000 members of the families of the many volunteers helping with the Weekend's many events.

You should also be aware that two of the largest events of the Weekend are free to the public. On the evening of July 4, 20,000 people are expected to watch a free concert of the Boston Pops at Liberty State Park in New Jersey. Saturday evening, 500,000 people will attend the international classical music concert in Central Park.

The most ambitious display of fireworks in the history of the Nation is expected to be seen by five million people on the night of the Fourth of July. The parade of tall ships—Operation Sail—will be witnessed by an estimated five to seven million people earlier on the Fourth.

The greatest attendance will be at events that are free to the public. A quarter of the seats for the Closing Ceremonies are also complimentary. Now, at your urging, the homeless will share a symbolic presence at the Opening Ceremonies.

We would like to thank you for your interest in and concern for the events, and hope that the above helps to explain the ticketing arrangements.

If you need further information, please call at your convenience.

Very trully yours,

KEITH E. EASTIN,
Deputy Under Secretary.●

(By request of Mr. DOLE, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:)

SPAIN EXTRADITES COCAINE SUSPECT

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, a report in today's Washington Post quietly illustrated the growing web of international connections that we hope will make the narcotic trafficker an endangered species. The headline says, "Spain Extradites Cocaine Suspect," but when you read between the lines you realize that for narco-traffickers the headline should read, "You Can Run, But You Can't Hide."

The article goes on to explain that an infamous cocaine trafficker, Jorge Ochoa Vasquez, was arrested in 1984 and is now being extradited to Colombia. Vasquez has been arrested in Madrid at the request of the United States in connection with charges that had been made by a grand jury in Miami, FL, that he was part of a cocaine trafficking ring that included a high-ranking Nicaraguan Government official. I have a particular interest in this case because on April 18, 1985, I held hearings into the Nicaraguan connection, and Mr. Vasquez name figured prominently.

I believe that it is unfortunate that Vasquez was extradited to Colombia, and I encourage the Justice Department to press forward for his extradition to the United States from Colombia.

But the real point here is how a broad, effective pattern of international agreements can be used to bring the narco-traffickers to justice. These agreements are broader than extradition treaties and narrow narcotics agreements. They include a wide assortment of treaties and international agreements such as mutual legal assistance treaties, tax investigation treaties, banking secrecy treaties, and so forth.

But it is not enough to conclude these treaties, they must be used. That is why I applaud these efforts of both the United States and Spanish Governments to use extradition as another tool against the killer of children, the drug trafficker. I only hope that the "system" works through to completion so that Vasquez can stand trial in this country.

I want to assure my colleagues that I will be waiting and watching.

Mr. President, I ask that the article from the July 14, 1986, Washington Post entitled, "Spain Extradites Cocaine Suspect," be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

SPAIN EXTRADITES COCAINE SUSPECT

MADRID.—Jorge Ochoa Vasquez, wanted by the United States on drug trafficking charges, was extradited by Spain to his native Colombia yesterday, police sources at Madrid's airport said.

Ochoa Vasquez, 36, was arrested in Madrid in 1984 at U.S. request. The Colombian request was made a year later, The Associated Press reported.

Both countries sought his extradition on charges he was a member of an international cocaine-trafficking ring. A Spanish court ruled that he should be extradited to Colombia because it was his native country. The government wanted to extradite him to the United States.

A Miami grand jury accused Ochoa Vasquez of involvement in a cocaine smuggling scheme in which a man identified as an aide to Nicaragua's interior minister allegedly took part.

U.S. Attorney Richard Gregorie said in Miami that he was pleased by the extradition and "the United States will immediately move to have him extradited from Colombia to Miami."●

SECTION 302(A) ALLOCATIONS

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senator CHILES, and pursuant to the unanimous consent agreement of June 26, 1986, I hereby submit to the Senate the allocations required by section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act, with respect to the budget resolution for fiscal year 1987, Senate Concurrent Resolution 120.

These allocations represent the division of total levels of Federal spending among the various Senate committees, as assumed in the budget resolution for fiscal year 1987.

These allocations should have been included in the statement of managers acompanying the conference report on Senate Concurrent Resolution 120. However, because of time constraints we were unable to prepare them by the time the conference report was filed.

The material follows:

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the budget scorekeeping report for this week, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office in response to section 5 of the first budget resolution for fiscal year 1986. This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended.

The report follows:

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC., July 14, 1986.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The attached report shows the effects of Congressional action on the budget for fiscal year 1986. The estimated totals of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are compared to the appropriate or recommended levels contained in the most recent budget resolution, S. Con. Res. 32. This report meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of Section 5 of S. Con. Res. 32 and is current through June 27, 1986. The report is submitted under Section 308(b) and in aid of Section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended.

Since my last report the President has signed the Military Retirement Reform Act, P.L. 99-348, the Urgent Supplemental Appropriations bill, P.L. 99-349, and the Temporary Extension of Certain Housing Programs, P.L. 99-345, changing estimated budget authority and outlays.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

RUDOLPH G. PENNER,
Director.

CBO WEEKLY SCOREKEEPING REPORT FOR THE U.S. SENATE, 99TH CONGRESS, 2D SESSION, AS OF JUNE 27, 1986

[Fiscal year 1986—In billions of dollars]

	Budget authority	Outlays	Revenues	Debt subject to limit
Current level [1]	1,053.0	980.0	778.5	2,074.6
Budget resolution, Senate Concurrent Resolution 32	1,069.7	967.6	795.7	[2] 2,078.7
Current Level is:
Over resolution by		12.4
Under resolution by	16.7		17.2	4.1

[1] The current level represents the estimated revenue and direct spending effects (budget authority and outlays) of all legislation that Congress has enacted in this or previous sessions or sent to the President for this approval. In addition, estimates are included of the direct spending effects for all entitlement or other programs requiring annual appropriations under current law even though the appropriations have not been made. The current level excludes the revenue and direct spending effects of legislation that is in earlier stages of completion, such as reported from a Senate Committee or passed by the Senate. The current level of debt subject to limit reflects the latest U.S. Treasury information on public debt transactions.

[2] The current statutory debt limit is $2,078.7 billion.

NAUM AND INNA MEIMAN: DOORS TO FREEDOM CLOSED

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the Soviet Government has slammed the exit doors on Soviet Jews. My friends, Naum and Inna Meiman, are examples of Soviet Jews who have been denied their basic human rights and religious freedom not because they are criminals, but because they have expressed their desire to leave their country.

The Meimans are an elderly, ailing couple. Naum is a 74-year-old man. Inna is terminally ill with cancer. Their simple request is to live out what is left of their time together in the land that they choose—Israel.

The Meimans are of no use to the Soviet Government, yet officials continue to hold them captive in Moscow. Naum is tormented by the secret police and Inna remains waiting in pain.

I strongly urge the Soviet Government to permit the Meimans to emigrate to Israel and to open the doors to freedom to all those who wait unwillingly, locked behind the Iron Curtain.

EULOGIES FOR THE LATE SENATOR JOHN P. EAST

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, July 17, the time between 10 a.m. and 12 noon be set aside so that Senators may eulogize the late Senator JOHN P. EAST.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 11 a.m., on Tuesday, July 15, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, I ask unanimous consent that the following Senators be recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes each for special orders: Senators HAWKINS, PROXMIRE, and MELCHER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Following the special orders just identified, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 12 noon with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS BETWEEN 12 NOON AND 2 P.M.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess between the hours of 12 noon and 2 p.m., in order for the weekly party caucuses to meet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DOLE. At 2 p.m., by a previous unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will go into executive session in order to consider the nomination of Terrence M. Scanlon under a 2-hour time agreement.

The Senate may be asked to turn to other legislative or executive items cleared for action tomorrow afternoon, and I guess in addition, I assume, there will be a vote on the Scanlon nomination. There could be additional votes on Tuesday.

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess in accordance with the provisions of Senate Resolution 442, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Honorable JOHN P. EAST, the late Senator from the State of North Carolina, until 11 a.m., on Tuesday, July 15, 1986.

The motion was agreed to; and, at 3:29 p.m., the Senate recessed until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 15, 1986, at 11 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

JOB CORPS—20 YEARS OF SUCCESS

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, the Job Corps has a 20-year track record of success in helping severely disadvantaged youth break the cycle of poverty and become productive, contributing members of American society. Even so, the Department of Labor has proposed closing six Job Corps training centers.

Mr. Speaker, I oppose this action, and would like to share with you a letter about these concerns which I sent to Secretary of Labor William Brock, cosigned by 102 of my esteemed colleagues and fellow Job Corps supporters.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR,
Washington, DC, June 17, 1986.

Secretary WILLIAM BROCK,
Department of Labor, Frances Perkins Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY BROCK: The Department of Labor has announced the proposed closing of six Job Corps centers and the elimination of over 1,200 training slots to meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings 4.3% budget cut for Program Year 1986 within the Job Corps program.

We understand that the task of complying with these Congressionally-mandated cuts is difficult, and we recognize the effort you have made to accomplish it. However, we are not satisfied that the Department wishes to achieve these program cuts by closing six centers and eliminating 1,223 training slots. The elimination of these slots will keep over 2,500 youths from participating in a program designed for the disadvantaged. In addition, the loss of these six centers will have a substantially negative impact upon the community and clients served by the centers.

All of us have expressed to the Department that the highest priority should be preserving all of the 40,500 training slots which serve over 90,000 youths. During the hearing on Job Corps center closings and slot reductions which the Subcommittee on Employment Opportunities held May 15, a bipartisan Membership of both the House and Senate expressed their strong support for this concept.

As a source of alternative funds to enable you to preserve training slots and centers, we, the undersigned Members of Congress, request that you consider the use of the $12.3 million available for pilot/demonstration projects. Understandably, research and policy development are important; however, the Job Corps is a 20-year-old program which undergoes yearly dynamic changes in both system and individual programs, and the urgency for such research and pilot programs in a time of triage is not that apparent. We feel the department can afford to suspend pilot and demonstration projects for one year while the crucial adjustments necessary to meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cuts are being made.

In addition, many Members have noted in a previous letter to you that there is $32 million available in program year 1986 construction funds which could be used to meet some of the budget cuts. While your staff has made a reasonable argument that construction funds are essential for maintenance of center infrastructure, the General Accounting Office has reported that only $20 million is needed for life safety, health, and code maintenance—the remainder is for less-essential purposes. In addition, the Department of Labor estimates that $4.1 million would be expended to close the centers. By not closing the centers, an additional $4.1 million in savings can be realized.

It should be pointed out that both the House and Senate have passed budget resolutions calling for sizable increases in Job Corps funding. Therefore, until funds are restored to the Job Corps program in July 1987, we feel funds for non-essential construction and pilot-demonstration projects can be used as a source of emergency moneys to preserve the training slots and keep the six centers operating. We feel this strategy will enable you to meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cut while preserving the core of the Job Corps program—training slots and centers.

The Department has expressed a desire to cooperate with the Congress in regards to the Job Corps. However, even though alternative sources of funds exist, and even though the Congress has voted to increase funding for the Job Corps, Department officials have stated during recent hearings their refusal to budge from their commitment to close these centers. This inflexibility regarding center closings and slot reductions belies the commitment that the Department of Labor has made to the youth of this country.

We wholeheartedly agree that management efficiency should be a constant goal any agency should strive to fulfill. However, this efficiency should be achieved by providing necessary technical assistance and positive managerial guidance, not by penalizing disadvantaged youth through closing centers. We urge you to preserve all 40,500 training slots within the Job Corps program as well as the six centers you propose to close.

We view this request with the greatest urgency and trust that you will concur with our concerns and alternate reprogramming suggestions. Your immediate attention to this crucial matter will be greatly appreciated, and we await your response.

Sincerely,

MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ,
Chairman.

A FORMULA FOR SUCCESS IN JAPAN

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, printed below is a speech by Mr. Charles F. Cuddihy, Jr., from Minnesota, who, in a speech at a Japan Conference in Minneapolis, urged area business leaders to tackle the Japan market.

Mr. Cuddihy has related his own experience as former vice president of international operations for Medtronic, Inc., to hopefully encourage other small companies to become similarly successful in Japan.

The Japanese market is difficult, but it becomes more accessible each year. One of the justifiable Japanese criticisms of United States export efforts is that most of our firms don't try as hard in Japan as Japanese companies do in the United States.

The Department of Commerce is urging more United States companies to open Japanese markets. It is better prepared to help inexperienced exporters than every before. Like Mr. Cuddihy, it predicts success for American firms which do the job right.

REMARKS BY CHARLES F. CUDDIHY, JR.

Just as last year, this conference immediately follows a meeting of marked significance—in this case, the Camp David meeting between Prime Minister Nakasone and President Reagan. And again, the subject matter of the summit meeting is beyond most of us—at least as far as our ability to impart the intent of the accord and the promises. We can only hope that Camp David will bring greater harmony and balance between our countries in the area of commerce. We, meanwhile, must play according to the rules of today's game on today's playing field. This is enough of a challenge for most of us.

If we talk about "Trade Deficits", "Hidden Trade Barriers", etc., I think that we'll all lose. Individual companies have to address individual opportunities and dare to take a risk, to develop a strategy to be successful in other country's arena—and go for it!

I remember reading a short time ago a guarded statement by Ambassador Brock. He said that he dreamed that "Japan would capitulate on every issue and that it still wouldn't make any notable difference". That is a nightmare, but it could be true.

Why?

One clear simple fact. Out of 4,400,000 firms in various industries in the United States, less than 1 percent are engaged in exporting. Let me repeat that statement. Out of 4,400,000 firms in the U.S.A., only 40,000 are actually engaged in offshore business. Only 4,000 firms do business in and/or with Japan—less than 1/10 of 1 percent.

Unfortunately, I do not have similar statistics for Western Europe or for Japan. My guess is that the statistics for Europe would be only slightly better and that for Japan it would be notably better. My point is simple—we have talked ourselves out of a major market. We hear so much from the giant companies (steel, autos, chips, etc.) about the problem that we feel that it applies to all companies.

Immediately we should recognize a couple of salient realities—

(1) Approximately 50 percent of the aforementioned 4.4 million firms have good reasons for not exporting. Examples: (a) Have failed to establish firm market position in their own domestic market; (b) Not financially feasible; (c) No identified demand abroad; (d) Either no product or a perishable product; and (e) Too complicated to distribute.

(2) It would seem, on the basis of participation and/or performance that the U.S. market is at least as intimidating for European companies as is Japan for American companies.

The implication of Point One is apparent; there remains 2.2 million firms as potential entrants into the field of international commerce.

Point Two is more obtuse, more controversial. My suggestion is that neither Europe nor the United States is anywhere near exerting its fulsome energies in the world market. I am also suggesting that European companies can probably find as many excuses for not being active in the U.S. market as do the American companies for not being active in Japan. The reasons may be very different but the results are very similar. We're not the only ones who find it difficult and adventurous to sally forth into unknown waters.

My message is truly a simple one. Our politicians and bureaucrats do have to confront, to negotiate, to enter agreements, to address the macro issues which threaten to hurtle the world economy into a bottomless abyss. We pray for their success, of course. Those obstacles do have to be addressed positively to facilitate a more balanced bilateral trade. But for most of us we just have to do our own thing. One company, or group of companies, one country at a time. And in daring to enter the realm of International Business, we should not avoid Japan! We should approach it! Not timidly. Not negatively. Not intimidated. There are many U.S. companies who have had great success in Japan. Unfortunately we hear mostly about the faceless many who don't succeed—mainly because they never tried!

And, incidentally, it works the other way in respect to the efforts of Japanese companies to do business in the United States. All we ever hear about are the successes of the trading companies, the banks, the automobile companies, the watch companies, etc. Yet, according to Mr. Ohmae in his latest book, the successes represent a very small percentage of the participants. So the risk is not all one-sided.

I recall very well when, as Vice President of International Operations for Medtronic, Inc., I made the decision to enter the Japanese market directly. We had been ably represented by a fairly small Japanese company for several years but we felt that it was necessary to have a direct presence in order to provide the training, service, market research, and professional promotion which was difficult to do in a life-saving, technologically volatile industry—cardiac pacemaker systems. Everyone told us that we were making a wrong decision.

1. "You can't terminate a representative company without the loss of face for both them and you!"

2. "You won't be able to get approval to have a 100% owned subsidiary!"

3. "You are small and foreign. You will not be able to attract the right employees!"

4. "The Japanese way is so different that you'll never understand it!"

5. "The demand is not big enough!"

6. "Because of the cumbersome distribution network system you'll never be profitable!"

7. "If you hire the wrong persons you won't be able to replace them!"

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

Fortunately, we heeded all these warnings but we went ahead anyway. We needed patience, sensitivity and a willingness to learn the Japanese Way.

Patience: (1) Don't just jump in! Plan! (2) You can change some things in Japan but some you can't. It reminds me of the prayer: "Lord grant me the patience to accept the things I cannot change, the strength to change the things I can, and the wisdom to know the difference". I believe that Medtronic succeeded admirably over the years. Medtronic Japan has been clearly one of the very best dynamic and profitable investments for the Corporation. Their image is excellent and the Japanese employers have been outstanding corporate contributors. The presence in Japan has opened many avenues of opportunity. There were frustrations, problems, challenges, to be certain. But they can all be met, successfully. It does take will and commitment! You don't have to be direct or establish a network of distributors; there is another way—Sogo Shosha. Don't overlook Sogo Shosha—The Trading Companies. They are a tremendous resource if one gets them interested in one's products and/or service. Here again, it takes patience and clarity of purpose and vision. We will be hearing more about them this afternoon from an expert, Mr. Ito of Mitsubishi—one of the largest of the Japanese versions of the "Big Eight".

In an article appearing in the Wall Street Journal some time ago, Peter Drucker, the internationally famous management guru, gave some simple excellent advice on doing business in Japan. I'll paraphrase him as follows:

(1) Provided the product and the service are good all it takes to do business in Japan is to do it the Japanese way.

(2) Personal relationships and commitment are absolutely necessary to develop. That takes patience and performance and integrity.

(3) "Lifetime employment" is not as binding and restricting a custom as it once was (I can personally attest to that, from experience).

(4) The smart way to start in Japan is not to invest in brick and mortar. The smart way is to invest in building a Japanese presence: to invest in hiring the right people to train them properly; in service, in market research, in market development and in promotion.

(5) Above all it pays to invest from the beginning in gaining recognition as a leader. Brand recognition is of great importance. Identify a market niche and concentrate for a long time on attaining leadership in it.

(6) Sense up to cultural differences. Example: rank must equal age within a given social group. Peter says he "knows of no Japanese company where the president is older than the chairman, for instance." The U.S. company will want a younger man from its headquarters to head the Japanese venture, often condemning the venture to failure. To the Japanese, the congruence of rank and age is not a principle of organization; it is one of morality.

The greatest cultural problem for the Westerner is the need for the "go-between" and the dependence on him especially in relation within the government bureaucracies.

Well, there have been libraries built on "How to do Business in Japan". I say that the first step is to do it (after you've done your homework). You can do business successfuly as long as you do it the way the Japanese do it.

Is it worth it? According to a recently published study by McKinsey & Company, the Japanese last year spent $600.00 each on American branded goods, compared with $287.00 spent by each American on Japanese goods.

As for the Medical Industry itself, Japan is a very attractive market. There are 9000 hospitals, over 80,000 clinics, 180,000 doctors, 600,000 nurses. There are outstanding universities, clinician, researchers and Key Opinion Leaders. The market for medical and dental equipment is expected to reach more than $4 billion next year, 1987. About 15 percent of that total will be imported—maybe as much as 20 percent or $800 million. It is a very sophisticated market and one which commands high prices although changing like everywhere else. (As an aside we should also note that exports have climbed dramatically—close to $1.5 billion. They're coming after you in your market—you'd better be prepared to garner some of their market!).

The United States dominates that import market in Japan—over 50 percent!

The greatest demand in the medical market seems to be focused on new technology, equipment which has no Japanese competitor and automated or computerized equipment that saves time and money. But no matter what product or business it is mandatory to have—

Quality—Training—Marketing

Ease of Use, Coupled with Reliability and a Sensitivity to the Japanese culture and Health Delivery System

In conclusion and summation, I would offer the following suggestions and observations.

First of all, the governments do have to do their job, successfully. The relief of current obstructions to bilateral trade between our nations can surely enable private enterprise on each side to be more effective. Attacking the budget deficit and sustaining and/or creating legislation at the national and state level to encourage export would be critical on the U.S. side. Total fairness, understanding and market accessibility on the part of Japan, coupled with a realistic evaluation of the yen would surely be helpful.

Realistic technology exchange programs, of a balanced nature, would be a positive collaboration which would benefit the world as well as our two nations.

Cultural exchanges and athletic events match tourisim as effective means of developing understanding and respect.

In the United States particularly, we could and should stress the study of Japan, its language and its history and culture.

From a pragmatic business standpoint—I repeat: "Don't be scared off. Do your homework as you would/should do before any significant new step in your business. The Asian Arc is the growth area of the world during the next decade and Japan is the foundation stone of that market. Many, many more enterprises from the upper Midwest can and should deal successfully in Japan. We have natural, financial and human resources capable of developing the products and industries which will demand significant niches in Japan. We share high standards of quality and integrity, pride and commitment and productive work ethic. We also, as an area of the country rich in varied ethnic backgrounds, have a deep sensitivity and high respect for different cultures. And we have a need.

Learn how to do it the Japanese way and you will succeed.

Thank you.

FREE YURIY SHUKHEVYCH

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, after more than 33 years in prison and countless requests on his behalf, Yuriy Shukhevych remains a prisoner in the Soviet Union. He is in poor health and is made to do as much as 12 hours of manual labor daily, without access to medical treatment or to his family. It would be easy to become discouraged with the negative response of the Soviet Union in regard to this man. Yet, we must keep in mind that Yuriy Shukhevych is Prisoner of Conscience in the fullest sense of the meaning, a man arrested and imprisoned for these many years because he refused to denounce his father, Roman Shukhevych, the nationalist who fought both the Nazis and the Soviets in the name of self-determination for Ukraine. And because he desired and still continues to desire the idea of a free Ukraine.

I would like to include in the RECORD a song written for Yuriy Shukhevych taken from the March-April 1986 Bulletin of the Antibolshevik Bloc of Nations. It is said that this song is sung by Ukrainian youth throughout the Free world.

SONG FOR YURIY SHUKHEVYCH

Who are those men that the tyrants will kill?
Are they fighting for money or for their free will?
Is it they that get locked in camps far away?
Is it they that suffer to this very day?
I tell you it is.
Why don't those school children during breaktime play?
Please tell me why they are sad in the face.
Is it because they're not permitted to pray?
And when they're caught they are punished for days.
I tell you it is.
Why are those boys being sent to correction centres?
Please tell me straight what wrong they have done.
Is it because they are proud of their country?
Because they sing hymns in their native tongue?
I tell you it is.
I'll tell you a story of a man brave and true,
He was put in prison, but what did he do?
Yuriy Shuhevych, a man who can't see,
They have blinded him, but one day he'll be free!
One day he'll be free.
Listen to my words, you know they are right,
For the love of my country I will continue to fight.
Never surrender, that must never be,
The heart of Ukraine is bleeding for me.
I'll know that you'll see.
Please save my soul and set me free,
I long for the sunshine, but I want you to see,
My father is not guilty and neither am I,
For that truth I'll stay here till the day I die.
I'll stay till I die.
Please help Ukraine, it is suffering Lord,
Because freedom with money you just can't afford.
Please reassure me that my homeland I'll see,
That one day Ukraine will once again be free.
I tell you it will.

REIT TAX PROVISIONS REVISION ACT OF 1986—H.R. 4916

HON. GUY VANDER JAGT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, on June 3 of this year, I introduced the REIT Tax Provisions Revision Act of 1986, H.R. 4916, together with Mr. STARK, Mr. MATSUI, Mr. ARCHER, Mr. THOMAS of California, and Mr. FOWLER. The bill modifies many of the provisions for the qualification and taxation of real estate investment trusts (REIT's] in order to allow REIT's to operate more efficiently. The statement which follows is intended to explain the provisions of H.R. 4916 and the provisions of current law that are affected by the proposed changes.

EXPLANATION OF H.R. 4916

A. OVERVIEW

The bill modifies many of the provisions relating to the requirements for qualification as and the taxation of REITs. The provisions modified relate to the general requirements for qualification as a REIT, the income and asset requirements for qualification as a REIT, the definition of rents and interest, the distribution requirements for qualification as a REIT, the treatment of capital gains, the provisions relating to prohibited transactions, and certain other provisions.

B. GENERAL REQUIREMENTS

Under the bill, as under present law, an entity generally may not elect REIT status if it would meet the stock ownership test of section 542(a)(2) (i.e., if it would be treated as a personal holding company if all of its income constituted personal holding company income) or if it had fewer than 100 shareholders. Under the bill, however, an entity that otherwise meets the applicable requirements may elect REIT status notwithstanding its meeting the section 542(a)(2) stock ownership test or its having fewer than 100 shareholders, provided that the entity was not a REIT in any prior year. In applying the attribution rules of section 544 for purposes of determining whether the stock ownership requirement of section 542(a)(2) is met for any taxable year, attribution to an individual of stock owned by or for the individual's partner is ignored under the bill.

The bill provides that in order to elect REIT status, the electing entity must either have been treated as a REIT for all taxable years beginning after February 28, 1986, or must have no earnings and profit accumulated for any year in which the entity was in existence and not treated as a REIT.

The bill also provides that an entity that has not engaged in any active trade or business is permitted to change its annual accounting period to a calendar year without approval of the Internal Revenue Service in connection with electing REIT status. This rule is intended to apply to entities that are newly formed for the purpose of becoming a REIT, and that wish to adopt a calendar year taxable year after an initial period in which, for example, the entity receives the proceeds of a stock offering and temporarily invests such proceeds in passive investments until investment in suitable real estate assets is made.

C. INCOME AND ASSET REQUIREMENTS

1. REIT subsidiaries

Under the bill, all the assets, liabilities, and items of income, deduction, and credit of a "qualified REIT subsidiary" are treated as the assets, liabilities, and respective items of the REIT that owns the stock of the qualified REIT subsidiary. A subsidiary of a REIT is a qualified REIT subsidiary if and only if 100 percent of the subsidiary's stock is owned by the REIT at all times that the subsidiary is in existence. If at any time the REIT ceases to own 100 percent of the stock of the subsidiary, or if the REIT ceases to qualify for (or revokes an election of) REIT status, such subsidiary is treated as a new corporation that acquired all of its assets in exchange for its stock (and assumption of liabilities) immediately before the time that the REIT ceased to own 100 percent of the subsidiary's stock, or ceased to be a REIT as the case may be.[13]

For example, an entity owns 100 percent of the stock of a corporation that holds an office building and receives rental income from the office building. For purposes of determining whether the shareholder entity qualifies for REIT status, the shareholder is treated as owning the office building directly and as receiving the rents therefrom. If the shareholder qualifies as a REIT, the separate existence of the 100 percent owned subsidiary is ignored for all income tax purposes. If the shareholder REIT sells all of the stock in the subsidiary to any purchaser (including another REIT), then the subsidiary is treated as a new corporation that was formed and that received its properties in exchange for its stock, immediately after which it was owned by the purchaser. Hence, it is anticipated that the deemed transfer of the assets to the subsidiary in exchange for its stock would not qualify as a tax-free exchange under section 351 in this situation.

2. New equity capital

Under the bill, if a REIT receives new equity capital, then income derived from stock or debt instruments (i.e., interest, dividends, or gains from the sale of such stock or debt instruments) that is attributable to the temporary investment of the new equity capital is treated, for a one-year period beginning on the date that the REIT receives such capital, as qualifying income for purposes of the "75 percent income test."[14] In addition, during such period, stock or debt instruments purchased with such capital are treated as "real estate assets" for purposes of the "75 percent asset test." Under the bill, new equity capital is any amount received by the REIT in exchange for stock of the REIT (other than pursuant to a dividend reinvestment plan).

D. DEFINITION OF RENTS AND INTEREST

1. Independent contractor requirement

Under the bill, amounts received by a REIT in connection with the rental of property do not fail to qualify as rents from real property merely because the REIT performs certain services and does not use an independent contractor for the provision of such services. Under the bill, the services that may be provided without violating the "independent contractor test" are those services the provision of which would not by reason of section 512(b)(3) result in the receipt of "unrelated business income" by an organization subject to tax on such income (sec. 511(a)(2)). Thus, under the bill, amounts received by the REIT in connection with the rental of real property would not fail to be treated as rents from real property if the REIT provides only certain services other than services that are considered rendered to the occupant of the property (Treas. Reg. Sec. 1.512(b)-1(c)(5)). The bill does not alter the provision of present law under which amounts received by a REIT are treated as rents from real property if the REIT provides "customarily furnished services" to its tenants through an independent contractor.

2. Rents and interest based on net income

Under the bill, rents or interest that are based on the net income of a tenant or debtor are treated as rent from real property or as interest, respectively, if certain conditions are met. To qualify, the rent (or interest) must be received from a tenant (or debtor) that receives substantially all of its income from the leased property (or the property that secures the loan) from the subleasing (or leasing) of substantially all of such property, and the rent received by the tenant (or debtor) consists entirely of amounts that would be treated as rents from real property (or interest) if received directly by the REIT. The same rules that apply under present law apply under the bill if the tenant (or debtor) receives rents (or interest) from the property a portion of which would qualify as rents from real property (or interest) for the REIT and a portion of which would not, i.e. a proportionate part of the amount received by the REIT would be treated as rent from real property (or interest).

E. DISTRIBUTION REQUIREMENT

Under the bill, the minimum amount that the REIT is required to distribute (i.e., the minimum dividends paid deduction as specified in section 857(a)(1)), is reduced by a portion of certain amounts that the REIT is required to include in income in advance of receiving cash. These amounts are (a) amounts that the REIT is required to include in income under section 467 with respect to certain rental agreements involving deferred rents, (b) the amount of original issue discount that the REIT is required to accrue with respect to a loan to which section 1274 applies, and (c) any income arising from the disposition of a real estate asset, but only in circumstances where the REIT had entered into a transaction with respect to such real estate, had intended in good faith that the transaction qualify as a like-kind exchange under section 1031, the income is recognized as a result of a determination that the transaction did not so qualify, and the failure to meet the requirements of section 1031 was due to reasonable cause and not due to willful neglect. The portion of such amounts by which the REIT's minimum distribution requirement is reduced in the amount by which the sum of these amounts exceeds five percent of the REITTI of the REIT determined without regard to the REIT's dividends paid deduction and net capital gain.[15]

In addition, the bill provides that the amount of a REIT's current (but not accumulated) earnings and profits for a taxable year is to be not less than its REITTI (determined without regard to the dividends paid deductions) for the taxable year.

F. CAPITAL GAINS

Under the bill, for purposes of determining the maximum amount of capital gains dividends that a REIT may pay for a taxable year, the REIT would not offset its net capital gain with the amount of any net operating loss, whether current or carried over from a previous taxable year. To the extent that the REIT then elects to pay capital gains dividends in excess of its net income, the REIT would increase the amount of its net operating loss carryover by such amount. For example, a REIT with no net operating loss carryovers incurs a $100 net operating loss and has a net capital gain of $50 in 1987. Under the bill, the maximum amount of capital gains dividends that the REIT could distribute is $50. If the REIT distributed a $40 capital gain dividend, its net operating loss carryover to the succeeding taxable year would be $90.

Under the bill, REITs are permitted to mail the required capital gain notices to shareholder with the REIT's annual report rather than within 30 days of the end of the taxable year. It is intended that if the REIT does not regularly provide its shareholder with an annual report, then the notice requirement of present law would continue to apply.

G. PROHIBITED TRANSACTIONS RULES

The bill makes two modifications to the rules relating to prohibited transactions. First, the bill modifies the safe harbor under which sales by the REIT meeting the conditions of the safe harbor are not treated as prohibited transactions. Under the bill, the number of sales of property that a REIT may make within the safe harbor is increased from five to seven. In addition, the extent of expenditures that the REIT may make within four years of sale that are includible in the basis of the property is increased from 20 percent of the net selling price of the property to 30 percent. The bill also provides an alternative safe harbor whereby the REIT may make any number of sales during the taxable year, provided that the gross income from such sales does not exceed 15 percent of the REITTI of the REIT for the taxable year. A sale is treated as qualifying for the alternative safe harbor, however, only if substantially all the marketing and development expenditures with respect to the property sold were made through an independent contractor. The determination of whether a particular sale qualifies for the prohibited transaction safe harbor is made on a property by property basis.

Second, the bill provides that in determining the amount of net income derived from prohibited transactions, losses from prohibited transactions (and deductions attributable to prohibited transactions in which a loss was incurred) may not be taken into account. The bill does, however, provide that the amount of any net loss from prohibited transactions may be taken into account in computing REITTI. For example, for a taxable year a REIT has a net gain from a prohibited transaction of $100 and a net loss from a prohibited transaction of $50. The REIT has net rental income of $200 and no other items of income or deduction. Under the bill, the REIT would be subject to a $100 tax on the gain from its prohibited transaction, and its REITTI would be $150.

H. DEFICIENCY DIVIDENDS

Under the bill, the penalty tax under section 6697 on deficiency dividends is repealed.

I. EFFECTIVE DATE

The provisions of the bill are effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986. The provision relating to the treatment as interest of certain amounts based on the net income of the debtor does not apply to amount received or accrued with respect to loans made before May 28, 1976 (or pursuant to a binding commitment entered into before May 28, 1976).

[13] In the case of the shareholder, REIT ceasing to be treated as a REIT, the committee intends that the transfer would be deemed to take place as of the first day of the first taxable year in which the entity's REIT status ceases.

[14] Nevertheless, the REIT would continue to be required to most the "95 percent income test" including income from the new equity capital.

[15] The computation of REITTI would take into account the change made by the bill, which would permit the deduction of the REIT's net loss from prohibited transactions, as described below.

MEXICO—A NEIGHBOR IN CRISIS

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL
OF ARIZONA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, it has become my practice from time to time to share with my colleagues information on issues that are critically important. I feel we are making a grave mistake if we ignore the plight of a neighbor in crisis, I refer to Mexico.

Mexico is not some distant trouble spot, it's right next door. If our neighbor gets into trouble, we can hardly expect to escape unharmed. Problems have a way of spilling over the 1,850 miles of border that we share with Mexico.

Currently, Mexico is in serious financial trouble. The decrease in oil prices has cut budget revenues by one-fourth since the beginning of the year. Mexico's deficit is now, in proportion to its economy, more than twice as large as the United States' deficit. We can see Mexico's crisis in the ever-growing numbers of illegal immigrants crossing our borders. We can also see it in the business failures that have followed in the wake of the recent peso devaluation. But still larger troubles may be in store for Mexico—and for us.

Our stake in Mexico's future is too great to neglect. Mexico is more than our neighbor to the south, Mexico is a valued friend. We have longstanding cultural and historical ties to Mexico. In acting upon that friendship, and those ties, we would also be acting in our own best interest.

Over the course of the next several weeks, I will submit various articles that will illustrate the crisis in Mexico.

The first of those articles is by Bruce Babbitt. Mr. Babbitt is Governor of Arizona and chairs a Council on Foreign Relations study group on United States-Mexican affairs. His highly penetrating article focuses on Mexico's debt crisis, the financial and political realities that currently face Mexico, and the various reform alternatives Mexico has thus far announced.

The article follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 2, 1986]

U.S. Able To Structure Debt Relief

(By Bruce Babbitt)

The abrupt departure of Mexican Finance Minister Jesus Silva Herzog, practically midsentence in negotiations with the International Monetary Fund, marks the political transformation of the debt crisis in Mexico. For the first time ever, the debt will now collide with the Mexican presidential sexenio. The collision is sure to be explosive unless the debt gets some fundamental attention in Washington.

Despite Silva-Herzog's departure, a familiar ritual of bluff and counterbluff seems certain to consummate in another short-term fix: Mexico will get $6 billion or so in new loans to pay the interest on its old ones. But before they commence their celebrations, Mexico's creditors had better look to 1987 and 1988.

Without some structural relief, the debt undoubtedly will be drawn into the maelstrom of Mexican presidential politics. Some kind of unilateral solution—from Peruvian-style adjustment to outright repudiation—will grow more attractive to the Mexicans than it has ever been before.

The coming short-term fix is irrelevant to this concern for two reasons, one financial, the other political.

THE TWO REALITIES

The financial reality, increasingly recognized of late, is that a $100 billion external debt is simply too large a drain on the Mexican economy. Debt service consumes 7% of Mexico's gross domestic product, or twice the comparable figure for Germany after the Treaty of Versailles. It also eats two-thirds of export earnings and three-fourths of Mexico's trade surplus. Mexico's economy will contract nearly 5% in 1986.

The political reality, largely unrecognized to date, is the role of the presidential succession. Proximity to this change typically leads to nationalism, xenophobia, and susceptibility to the grand populist gesture. President Echeverria's, in 1976, was a massive expropriation of land. President Lopez Portillo's in 1982, was nationalization of the banks.

Will it be repudiation of debt in 1988? Many Americans, noting the much-publicized emergence of the conservative PAN, suppose the ruling PRI will have to move rightward to maintain its traditional monopoly on high office. But Mexican politicians see it differently: The political instinct when under attack is to consolidate your base. Peru's Alan Garcia sells a lot better than Margaret Thatcher to the crowd assembled below the balcony.

Two goals should govern the American response, one conditional on the other: structural debt relief and structural economic reform. The IMF has been pushing a stunted version of this trade-off, attempting to condition new short-term loans on another notch or two of austerity. But in miniature the deal is nothing but poison, having most of the political costs and few of the economic benefits of a full-size solution.

To meet any hope of growth, Mexico's burden of debt service must be cut in half. The precise means of doing this must be left to negotiation, but the possibilities are hardly unknown. The extension of short-term debt maturities has largely been accomplished, but the capitalization on interest has scarcely been utilized. Nor has the long-term write-down of a portion of the debt been adequately discussed. The banks are a lot stronger now than in 1982, and the Federal Reserve could revise its loan-loss rules to recognize that in the context of an overall settlement, the write-down of government debt actually increases the prospects it eventually will be made good.

Negotiators also should remember that 30% of the debt is held by governments, and that a temporary suspension of payments in that sector would not affect the banking system at all.

THE MEANS AND THE END

Mexican oil could be part of the deal. A commitment to add 200 million barrels to the Strategic Petroleum Reserve over a three-year period would cut about $1 billion from annual payments. And it also might be feasible to exchange debt for future oil-delivery contracts in the commercial markets.

Yet another approach would be to trade debt for equity investments in Mexico. The Japanese, along with regional banks in Texas, have begun experimenting with a secondary market in Mexican debt: It is sold at a discount to an investor who redeems it in pesos from the Mexican government while agreeing to reinvest it in Mexico. The market has barely begun to tap the potential of this kind of arrangement.

All these are means. The end is to index Mexico's debt payments to recovery of oil prices, to overalll growth of exports, or, most logically, to a proportion of GDP. Besides being the truest measure of Mexico's ability to pay, the GDP is far more amenable to state improvement. As Mexico grows, so should grow its debt service.

The necessary and continuing condition of creative debt relief must be thoroughgoing liberalization of the Mexican economy. thoughtful Mexicans recognize that their fiscal woes are in large part self-inflicted, the result of heavy-handed state intervention in every sector of the economy.

The list of required reforms commands remarkable consensus among economists; sale or closure of loss-making state enterprises, reduction of the government work force, retargeting of investment from patronage to development, elimination of protectionist import restrictions and restrictions on foreign investment, relaxation of exchange controls and repatriation of domestic capital.

If Mexico can carry through the reforms it has thus far announced, it will have made a serious beginning. President de la Madrid has committed to entering the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. He has pledge to sell or close down unprofitable state enterprises, and proved he meant it at Fundidora Monetary, a huge and inefficient steel mill whose shutdown threw 11,000 people out of work. The sugar, fertilizer and petrochemical industries should be similarly pared.

Not all economic changes need be so painful. One New York banker has proposed creating an offshore mutual fund that would re-attract flight capital by using its leverage to bargain about terms and conditions for reinvestment in selected Mexican development projects. And the recent manufacturing agreement with IBM—permitting full foreign ownership—suggests the unreasonable rules hampering foreign investment can be changed.

LIBERALIZATION WILL BE DIFFICULT

How much reform is enough? A numerical goal—parallel to the goal of halving Mexican debt service—would be ideal, but the Mexican side of the bargain does not quantify as easily. Some measurement, nonetheless, of such indicators as the proportion of state-owned businesses in the economy, the number of employees in the government work force, the spread between state-controlled and free-market exchange rates, and so on, should have a place in the negotiations.

Thoroughgoing economic liberalization will be very difficult for the Mexicans, just as structural debt relief will be for their creditors. But one can be used to leverage the other for the benefit of all. Mexico would finally see the light at the end of the tunnel, and its creditors would trade some diminution of paper rights for a much higher probability of payment.

What's missing from this equation is an initiating party. The Mexican government and the commercial banks are in thrall to immediate pressures: political survival on the one side, quarterly profits on the other. The IMF, the principal broker until now is geared by its very charter to the short term. Only the U.S. government has the clout and the freedom to take the long view. It should act on that view while it can.

WITHERS FAMILY REUNION

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, during the July 4th holiday weekend the Withers family will celebrate their fifth national reunion. Because of the rich background and heritage of this proud American family, I wanted to share with the Members their profile.

The Withers Family at present, traces its lineage back to a slave named Silas, on a northern Mississippi plantation at the time of the Civil War. According to accounts passed down through generations, Silas ran away from the plantation and joined the Union Army under General Ulysses S. Grant, as it advanced toward Vicksburg. After serving many months Silas returned home to see his family. Ignoring warnings from fellow slaves not to go up near the "big house" where his family was, he joined them anyway. After several days he was kidnapped and lynched when he went off with a wagon going to town for supplies—killed for having aided the forces of liberation.

After emancipation and the end of the Civil War, according to further family legend, the family of Silas went through a process of choosing a family name. Part of the family chose a name from the slavemaster's family, which was Withers. Part of them refused to take this name and chose the name of Jones, which is reputed to have been the lineage of, among others, the actor James Earle Jones.

Further accounts link this African-American family with the white family of Faulkner of northern Mississippi particularly around Oxford in LaFayette County and Holly Springs in Marshall County, among whom included writer William Faulkner.

During the last years of the 19th century a son of the slave Silas, who was also named Silas, served in the Spanish-American War. When he returned home to Mississippi he got into trouble with the local whites for being too assertive. Eventually he was captured and hung upside down in a well until he died. His brother George left Mississippi and went west to the Oklahoma Territory, vowing never to live in the United States again because of what happened to his brother. When Oklahoma became a state in 1907, he moved to Canada.

Another brother of the second Silas, Christopher Columbus Withers, had ten children, Eva, Lulu, Earnest, Angelia, Earl, Roscoe, Emerson, Lucretia and Cleopatra (twins), Ruberter, and Arthur Earl (1889–1965). Arthur Earl moved to Memphis, Tennessee from his home in Holly Springs, Mississippi, where he continued his early education at Woodstock Training School. He went on to serve in the U.S. Army during World War I, seeing duty in France. Arthur Earl went on to break the barrier against blacks in the federal civil service in Memphis by becoming one of the first "colored" letter carriers. He was active in the community and a long-time lay leader in the local Baptist conference and the National Baptist Convention, USA, Inc., working with activists such as Mary Church Terrell and Lucy Campbell. He was husband to Pearl (who died in 1930) and then Minnie Withers and, father of James Bertron, Alice, Vivian, Arthur Earle, Jr., Ernest Columbus, and Jacob Ontee. He had thirty-two grandchildren.

Columbus Spencer "Jim" Withers, Sr. (1899–1986), a grandson also of the slave Silas was born one of twelve sisters and brothers in Guthrie, Oklahoma and he grew up in Cushing, Oklahoma before moving to Campbell, Ohio in 1923. He was a factory worker for over 40 years, and was active in the labor union, local Youngstown/Campbell, Mahoning County Democratic politics and in his church Shiloh Baptist. He was also instrumental in helping other blacks obtain jobs in industry in his area. "He would lend a helping hand wherever he could." His wife Annie L. Stonework-Withers lives on in Campbell. His children are Emma (deceased), Bertha Ellis, Ann Jones, Amanda Wiley, Bernice Jones, Clara McKissack, and Columbus Spencer, Jr. He left 12 grandchildren, 13 great grandchildren and a great-great grandchild.

James Bertron Withers, Sr. (1911–1979) was the oldest son of Arthur Earl Withers. His early life and education was in Memphis, Tenn. He continued his education in 1936, entering Howard University and receiving a degree in pharmacy in 1941. He met and married Eleanor L. Lewis of Washington while attending Howard University. They became parents to James Bertron, Jr., Doris Cleo and Vivian Eleanor. He owned and operated two drug stores in the District and suburban Maryland and later he became one of the first black pharmacists and managers hired by Peoples Drug Store He was one of the founders of the Washington Pharmaceutical Association and the National Pharmaceutical Association.

Arthur Earle Withers, Jr. (1917–1963) came to Washington from Memphis, Tenn. in 1940 to attend Howard University. He and wife Lorene Thompson-Withers, were the parents of Pearl Lorene, Thelma Lois, Vivian Elaine, Marcia Janice and Sylvia Earle. He was a career civil servant with the Department of the Navy for 23 years. He was in partnership with his older brother James Bertron who earlier had owned and operated two drug stores in Washington and suburban Maryland. He more than anyone in his generation is responsible for bringing back together scattered and disconnected parts of the family.

Ernest Columbus Withers, Sr. (1922-) is a photo-journalist, and businessman in Memphis, Tenn. He saw service in World War II in the Pacific and returned home to establish what is now a 40 year old photography service company. He is widely recognized and awarded for his historic coverage of the civil rights movement and the life and death of leaders such as Medgar Evers and Martin Luther King, Jr. He broke the color barrier in law enforcement by being appointed in 1948 as one of the first nine "Negro" policemen in the Memphis Police Department, and later was elected constable for surrounding Shelby County. Dorothy Mae Curry-Withers (1924-) of Memphis is his wife of 44 years. Their eight children are Ernest Columbus (Hasani Kwabena Adisa, adopted African name) Jr., Perry Oneal, Clarence Earle (Joshua Amun-RaPtah, adopted African name), Wendell Jacob (deceased), Dedrick James, Dyral Lewis, Andrew Jerome, and Rosalind Daval. They have thirteen grandchildren.

Jacob Ontee Withers (1924-), came to Washington in 1942 to attend Howard University. He served in law enforcement in Washington at the local and federal level for over twenty years, he is presently proprietor of the W and W Security Company. He met and married Vastine Doshia Wood-Withers (1930-1973) of Washington in 1950. This union produced Pamela Andrea, Jayne Irene, Sheila Kay, Kim Arline and Maria Antoinette.

Jimmy Withers Foster is a long-time political activist and leader of veteran affairs in Oklahoma City and on the national level. He was instrumental in breaking down barriers of discrimination and recognition of the rights and status of black and handicapped veterans. In his early years he was an outstanding athlete.

James Bertron "Bert" Withers, Jr. is a member of the D.C. Bar and is a graduate of the National Law Center of the George Washington University. He is a career civil servant employed at the Federal Communication Commission where he spent most of his career as a senior electronics engineer, having received from Howard University and a master's degree from George Washington. He served in the United States Army attaining the rank of captain and was the commander of a HAWK air defense missile unit. Bert was later awarded the Legion of Merit for his Army service. He is a long-time devotee of the most contemporary expressions of America's classical music, otherwise known as jazz.

Doris Cleo Withers is an education administrator with City University of New York and is a former dean at the Medgar Evers College at SUNY. She earned a Doctor of Philosophy degree from Columbia University; master's degree from Cornell University and her bacculaureate from Howard University. Her speciality has been microbiology and scientific education.

Ernest C. Withers, Jr. is a community, political and church activist in Washington, D.C. where he came to Howard University after serving as an officer in the U.S. Army. He led the campaign to pass rent control and consumer-rights laws in the Washington area. During the Jimmy Carter presidential era he served as D.C. campaign coordinator and with the Democratic National Committee as White House liaison and minority network coordinator.

Dedrick "Teddy" Withers is a graduate of Tennessee University, at 21 years of age he was elected to the Tennessee State Legislature during which time he was a member of the powerful Ways and Means Committee; he served for ten years. He founded the International Marketing and Development Corp. and headed an unprecedented trade delegation (which included his father Ernest Withers, Sr.) in 1983 to 26 African Nations.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 350, PROVIDING THAT THE PRESIDENT SHALL CONTINUE TO ADHERE TO THE SALT AGREEMENTS AS LONG AS THE SOVIET UNION DOES LIKEWISE

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 350, a resolution reported from the Foreign Affairs Committee on which I serve.

The administration's decision to abandon our policy of mutual compliance with the SALT II Treaty, and that treaty's limits on the respective nuclear arsenals of our country and the Soviet Union, is wrong for two major reasons.

First, it makes no military sense, and second, it makes no diplomatic sense, and may frustrate future efforts at arms control.

In terms of national security, Mr. Speaker, the abandonment of SALT weakens our national security. For as much as the proponents of abandoning SALT might contend that this decision will not adversely affect our national security, surely it will.

The SALT overall limits on nuclear weapons have worked. SALT II allows for modernization of nuclear arsenals by both sides—and the Soviets and the United States have both modernized—but it also calls for overall numerical limits. To stay under the overall limit, the Soviets have dismantled over 2,600 ICBM launchers, over 240 submarine launched ballistic missile launchers, and 14 Yankee-class nuclear-missile-carrying submarines.

SALT is not perfect, but the primary goal of SALT—overall restraint in the total number of strategic delivery vehicles—has worked, and has required both sides, including the Soviets, to exercise military restraint, to dismantle certain weapons, and to modify their armed forces to abide by the SALT II limits.

What will happen without SALT? Who's to say the Soviets, without the constraints of SALT, and faced with the administration's ambitious drive to develop SDI, a space-based defensive system, will not respond by significantly enlarging their nuclear inventory?

Proponents of dumping SALT and those hardliners within the administration, who generally harbor no illusions about Soviet aims, seem blind to reason on this point. Abandoning SALT risks a Soviet breakout from the SALT limits and a rapid increase in numbers of launchers. The House Armed Services Committee estimates that Soviet production lines could increase their strategic forces 65 percent by 1989 if SALT is scuttled. Pentagon analysts have long contended as well that the Soviets have advantages in "throw weight," for their missiles. Again, lifting the restraints of SALT will allow the Soviets to MIRV these missiles, or modify them to accommodate more warheads.

These factors, by any objective standard, must lead one to conclude that our national security will be threatened, not enhanced, by abandoning SALT.

The rejection of SALT also makes no sense, Mr. Speaker, when we examine the diplomatic costs of this decision.

First, our NATO allies oppose us. For 15 years we have nurtured the arms control process, all in close cooperation and consultation with our allies. This has been a bipartisan policy under the successive administrations of Presidents Johnson, Nixon, Ford, and Carter. The announcement that we will no longer abide by SALT has already strained relations with our allies, and is posing political problems for those European countries with whom we have been working on joint security needs.

Also, by abandoning SALT we may lose our ability to monitor Soviet nuclear force developments and to deal, through diplomatic channels, with questions of compliance. The SALT treaty established not only weapons limits, but also procedures for verification and consultation on noncompliance.

The administration has evidence of Soviet treaty violations in two key areas, one having to do with the development of the SS-25, which we contend is a new, impermissible missile under the treaty, the other having to do with encryption of missile-testing telemetry, which is forbidden under SALT.

Those of us who favor continued adherence to the SALT treaty do not diminish the importance of these alleged violations. In fact, negotiation over these suspected violations should be vigorously pursued. There is in place a Standing Consultative Commission [SCC] which was established by the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. to consider questions of compliance. The Nixon, Ford, and Carter administrations all used the SCC successfully, and all questionable Soviet activities brought to the SCC were adequately resolved.

By abandoning SALT at this point, we potentially lose the ability to monitor Soviet compliance, and to raise in a useful forum important questions of compliance. What do we gain, Mr. Speaker? Nothing, except an inevitable increase in mutual suspicion and tension.

One final point Mr. Speaker. Today, as a requirement of SALT, the Soviets give advance notice of weapons tests, and missile firings. Without SALT, without agreements, will we continue to give advance notice of missile tests, Will they?

It doesn't take much imagination to realize the potential for error, for misjudgment, in this type of atmosphere. Certainly no one should sleep safer without SALT.

I urge my colleagues to adopt House Concurrent Resolution 350 urging continued mutual compliance with the SALT treaty nuclear weapons limits.

STUDY SHOWS U.S. WORKERS RECEIVE LESS HELP FROM THE GOVERNMENT THAN IN PAST

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a recently released Joint Economic Committee Report documents a disturbing trend in the direction of Federal policies that affect American workers. In policy area after policy area, workers have received substantially less assistance from the Federal Government than they have in years past. The general erosion of these worker protections has occurred during a period of unemployment rates higher than at any time since the Great Depression. Less help from Federal policies combined with high unemployment rates during the Reagan administration mark a period of tremendous difficulty for workers.

The effects of these Federal policies are not limited to a particular group of workers. Employment and training programs may focus on those with low-incomes and dislocated workers, as they should, but minimum wage workers can be found in families of all incomes, and all workers benefit from a strong pension system and safer workplaces. This Nation needs strong labor policies not because they benefit one special group of American workers, but because they benefit all American workers.

The following excerpts from the study released by the Joint Economic Committee summarize the negative labor policy trends and the author's recommendations for necessary policy modifications:

JOINT ECONOMIC COMMITTEE—FEDERAL POLICIES AFFECTING AMERICAN WORKERS

(By Sar A. Levitan and Isaac Shapiro, Center for Social Policy Studies, George Washington University)

The basic federal laws protecting workers have not been eliminated; instead, lax administration, budgetary cuts, and inadequate legislative oversight have undermined the protection the laws offer. Consequently, training opportunities for the unskilled and unemployed have diminished, working conditions have deteriorated, workers' rights have been undercut, and the unemployed and the retired have less income security. Specifically:

Federal funding of employment and training assistance has dropped from $9.5 billion in fiscal 1981 to $5.6 billion in fiscal 1986.

The percentage of the unemployed receiving unemployment insurance fell to a historic low of 34 percent in 1985.

After adjusting for inflation, the minimum wage has declined by 26 percent since January 1981, and is now at its lowest real level since 1955.

The enforcement of health and safety regulations has deteriorated. Also, during the first five years of the Reagan administration, only two standards that increased health protection were issued, as compared to nine such standards in the Carter years.

The National Labor Relations Board has modified the direction of key policies, undermining union organizing efforts and basic worker rights. NLRB's case backlog has risen considerably.

New legislation strengthened the pension system, but trouble areas remain. Employers are finding loopholes in pension termination provisions and tax incentives for individual pension plans are not well targeted.

Many of the required changes to restore long-standing federal health and safety protections, equal employment opportunities, and the right to bargain collectively can be accomplished through administrative actions that will not affect federal costs. Congress, through the oversight process, can help bring about these changes.

Some of the needed modifications of worker protections would require legislation. Raising the minimum wage to traditional levels of support would increase the costs to some employers, but it is a mechanism by which the government can assist the working poor without adding to the federal deficit. Needed changes in pension policy may actually raise federal revenues.

Other legislative efforts to restore worker protections would entail some rise in federal expenditures. Increasing federal training and employment efforts as well as federal aid to job losers are the most prominent examples. Some of the job training expenditures will, however, be recouped because of the boost in productivity and reduction in welfare expenditures. The requisite level of support for job training and UI should be considered in light of the objective of sharing the burden of ongoing economic dislocation.

Although federal regulations on behalf of workers have deteriorated in the past few years, the basic structure of these regulations remain intact. These regulations, for the most part, are well-designed and have provided substantial benefits. The protective net for workers exists. The President and Congress should take action to see that it is appropriately repaired.

DISCRIMINATION IN THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues a recent Washington Post letter to the editor sent by myself, Mr. EDWARDS, Mrs. SCHROEDER, and Mr. FRANK regarding continuous and serious discrimination within the Department of Agriculture. The Post has printed several articles and editorials which brought to light not only problems with the USDA's workforce employment of minorities, which was ranked 72d out of 79 by the EEOC, but also with the agency's lack of responsiveness to minority and handicapped program recipients. Recently Secretary Richard Lyng instructed his staff to make affirmative action one of the utmost priorities within the USDA and we hope that Secretary Lyng will prove good on his promise to remedy discrimination at the USDA.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, June 23, 1986.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR,
The Washington Post,
Washington, DC:

Your June 4, 1986 editorial entitled "A Racial Problem at USDA" raises the very concerns that we, as Chairs of House oversight subcommittees, have about non-discrimination in federal employment and federally funded programs.

The USDA , with almost 100,000 employees, is ranked by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission 72nd out of 79 agencies in its workforce employment of minorities. This low ranking is intolerable in an agency which administers programs that are directed at assisting the poor and hungry of this country. Indeed, very serious questions have been raised about the agency's lack of responsiveness to female, minority and handicapped program recipients. This is a situation which must be remedied immediately.

We want to commend Secretary Richard Lyng for his positive response to this critical situation within the USDA. His civil rights memorandum which was sent to USDA personnel and which was mentioned in your June 14th editorial "Statesmanship at Agriculture" is the first step toward addressing this problem. As concerned Chairs of the House oversight committees, we will be making a strong effort to make sure the Department complies with federal civil rights laws.

Thank you for bringing the issue to the public's attention. The editorial was correct in its analysis that the "USDA has developed a pretty ugly reputation" with regard to civil rights, a reputation we, as well as Secretary Lyng, intend to change.

Sincerely,

Matthew G. Martinez, Chairman, Subcommittee on Employment Opportunities; Barney Frank, Chairman, Subcommittee on Employment and Housing; Don Edwards, Chairman, Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights; Patricia Schroeder, Chairman, Subcommittee on Civil Service.

RETHINKING PROTECTIONISM

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, on June 19, the Wall Street Journal contained an article which indicates that some Senators may be reevaluating protectionist positions they have taken. Canada's quick retaliation after our tariff increase on cedar shakes and shingles has caused Senators to think a little more carefully about some of the get-tough trade legislation they have supported.

One of the messages we have heard over and over again by fellow Members of Congress is that we should pass tough trade legislation to show that we mean business and that our trading partners will never retaliate. While it is true that there has been minimal retaliation in the past, in my judgment, our trading partners are all pushed to the limit with respect to actual legislation we have passed and that could pass. The Canadian response was a good example.

I hope that a majority of Senators rethinks some of its trade positions and will work together with the administration to fashion a trade bill that will contain needed improvements in the trade law, but yet not promote retaliation by our trading partners.

The article follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, June 19, 1986]

CANADA'S QUICK RETALIATION FOR SHINGLES TARIFF PROMPTS SOME ON THE HILL TO RETHINK PROTECTIONISM

(By David Shribman and Art Pine)

WASHINGTON.—Massachusetts Sen. John Kerry was one of scores in Congress who cosponsored a bill setting quotas for textile imports last year.

Now the liberal Democrat is having second thoughts, He's seeing first-hand how aggressive trade actions can backfire. Partly to build a get-tough image, the Reagan administration imposed a tariff on Canadian cedar shakes and shingles last month. Canada immediately retaliated by slapping new restrictions on U.S.-made books, computers and semiconductors—many produced in Massachusetts.

So now Mr. Kerry has fresh reasons to resist get-tough trade measures. "If you go too far in any one of these steps, you invite retaliation," he says, "If we're not careful, we're going to end up cutting off our own noses to spite our faces. That's what the Canada case shows."

Sen. Kerry isn't alone in his reappraisal of the trade situation. The Canadian retaliation, to be sure, won't by itself block the omnibus trade bill now moving through Congress; the Senate still is expected to draft trade legislation of its own to parallel the trade-law-toughening House package lawmakers passed last month. Though it isn't clear yet whether any measure will make it through into law—President Reagan has threatened to veto the House bill—protectionist pressures remain intense.

But Ottawa's quick show of force has begun giving enough lawmakers second thoughts about the new get-tough approach that some congressional analysts believe it may help make the Senate version of the bill far more moderate than the aggressive trade package pushed through by House Democrats.

Sen. Daniel Evans (R. Wash.) calls the Canada example "a good case study of what can happen when nations unilaterally attempt to protect their own positions through trade restrictions," adding: "It's a splendid example—if we're only wise enough to understand it."

Sen. Evans is a longtime free-trade proponent, but even some other lawmakers who backed previous protectionist measures are troubled by the escalating trade dipute. Democratic Sen. Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island, ranking Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, for example, says the Canadian case "has made me a lot more conscious of the problems of rushing ahead with trade legislation" by dramatically underscoring that there is a cost associated with the get-tough approach to trade.

That sentiment is exactly what Canada had hoped to sow here. Canadian Finance Minister Michael Wilson, announcing the retaliation measures two weeks ago, made clear that Ottawa was responding "reluctantly" with its counter-restrictions. "Our objective is to bring home to the United States the costs of protectionism, while avoiding measures that will only worsen our own situation," Mr. Wilson said. And Foreign Minister Joe Clark offered to retract the retaliatory tariffs if the U.S. would roll back the ones on shingles and shakes. Shakes are a kind of shingle.

The two sides have a lot at stake in their trade relations. Two-way trade between the countries topped the $116 billion mark last year. Each is the other's largest trading partner. And the two capitals are just beginning negotiations on a longer-range free-trade arrangement aimed at eliminating most trade barriers.

Moreover, except for angry U.S. lumber producers, Americans generally haven't blamed Canada for this country's trade problems as they have, say, Japan or Taiwan. A Wall Street Journal-NBC News poll last October showed that only 37% of Americans thought that the U.S. should limit imports from Canada to protect American jobs, compared with 70% in favor of restricting products from Japan.

Washington hasn't agreed to retract its new tariffs on shakes and shingles—which were imposed at least in part to assuage protectionist pressures in Congress—but senior officials in both countries have vowed to play down the whole dispute in an effort to keep existing trade frictions from getting out of hand.

"There really isn't any basis for a continuation of the debate," asserts U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter. The broader free-trade talks are continuing, albeit at a slow pace.

And the Canadian retaliation appears to have had some impact in damping the Reagan administration's own appetite for get-tough trade tactics. A White House-created trade strike force set up to seek out and take action against unfair trade practices of foreigners has softened its earlier campaign to launch immediate retaliatory proceedings against other countries' trade barriers and instead has begun recommending that the U.S. merely push for talks aimed at negotiating away the barriers.

To be sure, not everybody on Capitol Hill has moderated their views. House Majority Leader Jim Wright (D., Texas) called a handful of reporters into his office this week to reaffirm his support for the House bill and to take issue with Reagan administration charges that the bill is protectionist.

Sen. John Danforth (R., Mo.), chairman of the Senate trade subcommittee, asserts that the U.S. "is going to insist that the rules of international trade be played by all parties and that our government utilize the remedies available. If Canada overreacts, I don't think that's a lesson," Mr. Danforth says. "The U.S. can't walk on eggs."

Even so, some second thoughts are beginning to show up in lawmakers' actions. Just last week, the Senate Finance Committee voted in effect to let lapse a long-criticized, U.S.-imposed trade barrier that prohibits the sale in the U.S. of books by American authors that have been printed in foreign countries. Opponents argued successfully that the provision only made the U.S. more vulnerable to foreign trade restrictions.

EAGLE SCOUT RICHARD JASINSKI

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of my colleagues the achievements of the fine young man in my district, Richard Jasinski. Soon, Richard will be honored for achieving the highest rank in scouting, that of "Eagle Scout."

The path to Eagle Scout is truly a long and difficult one. It requires an extraordinary amount of dedication and determination not usually seen in youths of this age. The tasks which must be completed to become an Eagle Scout cover virtually every realm of human experience. Some require intellectual and creative abilities while others call for physical agility and strength. Some tasks help integrate the young man into society through community action that benefits his neighborhood and world. Still other acts are performed alone intended to develop internal growth and maturity. Always, however, is the challenge to set and strive for goals through initiative and diligence.

Young men like Richard are leaders. The achievement of Eagle Scout is likely to be only the beginning of a future full of accomplishments for this young man has shown that he can perform exceptionally well without a compelling hand of authority over him. I say this not to downplay the importance of the encouragement he received from his family and scout leaders but, rather, to assert the independence and self-motivation he has already shown.

Your achievement of becoming an Eagle Scout is praised and applauded. It is with sincere pleasure that I commend you, Richard Jasinski, before my fellow Members in Congress.

ESTHER VAN WAGONER TUFTY

HON. GUY VANDER JAGT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer a tribute to a truly remarkable women, Ester Van Wagoner Tufty, who passed away May 4 at the age of 89, For seven decades, as an outstanding newspaperwoman, Mrs. Tufty touched the lives of countless individuals and through her efforts, significantly improved the quality of life for many people. I am honored to have counted her a friend and to have the opportunity to bring a few of her many accomplishments to the attention of my colleagues in the U.S. Congress.

Throughout her working life, the "Duchess" as she was affectionately known to her friends, served as a shining example of all that is good and right in the press of our Nation. Mrs. Tufty covered the news in Washington, DC, for many Michigan newspapers during her exceptional career. The people of Michigan are indeed very proud of her accomplishments and are honored to count her as one of our own. Her brother, the late Hon. Murray D. Van Wagoner, was a former Michigan Governor, and her years of dedication to our State were marked by compassion and honesty. I would like to share with you the article that appeared in the Washington Post following her death on May 5, 1986, as well as the eulogy given at a memorial service in her honor at the National Press Club on June 5, by Mr. Kenneth M. Scheibel, former president of the club and longtime friend of the "Duchess." These two articles, serve to underline Mrs. Tufty's truly remarkable and inspiring commitment to her profession and to her country and allow us a brief description of the extent and fruits of these commitments.

JOURNALIST ESTHER TUFTY DIES AT 89

(By Martin Weil)

Esther Van Wagoner Tufty, a pioneering American newspaperwoman of regal bearing and enormous zest who in a 70-year career covered many of the great events and personalities of Washington and the world, and became in her own right the subject of legend, died May 4 in Alexandria. She was 89.

A broadcaster on both radio and television, and the founder of her own news service that once provided stories to about 300 newspapers, Mrs. Tufty, whose coronet of gold braids helped win her the nickname of The Duchess, came here 50 years ago and covered every president since Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Over the years, Mrs. Tufty lost an eye, was afflicted by cancer and had at least seven pacemakers installed to assist her heart. But she continued turning out copy in her National Press Building office, winning recognition in recent years as probably the oldest working reporter in a city full of reporters.

Her death at the Mount Vernon Nursing home followed a stroke.

In the course of a career that began shortly after graduation from high school in Michigan, Mrs. Tufty's diligence in pursuit of the news occasionally became news itself.

During the 1944 presidential campaign, Mrs. Tufty was injured in the wreck of New York Gov. Thomas E. Dewey's campaign train. When the Soviets blockaded Berlin, Mrs. Tufty flew into the city atop 10 tons of airlifted coal. Before a national television audience, Mrs. Tufty climbed onto a table at the 1952 Democratic convention to reach the man she wanted to interview.

Her determination in seeking out and reporting the news was accompanied by a feisty breeziness in describing her own activities. In November 1966 she returned from a trip to Vietnam and said:

"It's my third war, not counting marriage."

She was also known for a personal sense of flair and panache that seemed typified by her pince-nex spectacles and by the vivid scarlet or plaid cloaks that transfixed a room full of cocktail party guests when she entered.

On the wall of her office hung a photograph of her disguised for a White House party to look like President Roosevelt, an impersonation that, contemporary news accounts maintain, stunned the unsuspecting Secret Service.

The nickname The Duchess stemmed from an incident in which a European innkeeper mistook her for a member of royalty whose arrival he was expecting. Mrs. Tufty and her party received red carpet treatment and the name stuck.

For a time early in her career here, she was known as the "headache girl" in recognition of an aspirin company's sponsorship of a 30-minute radio interview show she conducted.

"I interviewed everyone except [former New Deal Secretary of State] Cordell Hull," she said.

Later she was on television as Washington editor of NBC's "Home" show. Essentially, however, Mrs. Tufty considered herself a reporter of "hard news."

Thus, she saw her 1960 installation as president of the American Women in Radio and Television as indicative of progress from an era when women on the air were confined to giving advice on "what to do with a tired piece of lettuce."

Her inauguration in 1969 as president of the American Newspaper Women's Club made her the first woman to head three national organizations for women in journalism. The third group was the Women's National Press Club.

In her 1969 inaugural address, Mrs. Tufty maintained that membership in the three groups would raise no conflict of interest and that she was "not supported by any foundation except the one I'm wearing."

A native of Sanilac County, Mich., Mrs. Tufty was raised in Pontiac, and after high school went to work for the newspaper there as assistant society editor.

She continued newspaper work in Madison, Wis., while attending the University of Wisconsin. After graduation she married Harold Tufty, from whom she later was divorced. In the '30s, after serving as managing editor of a newspaper in Evanston, Ill., she came with him to Washington where she opened her news bureau with 26 small Michigan papers as clients.

She was a Democrat who worked for Republican newspapers, was a particular admirer of Hubert Humphrey and believed that Americans talk too often about what is wrong with America rather than what is right.

In April 1954 the State Department sent her on a speaking tour of Australia. While she was there, the Australians presented her a female kangaroo named Topsy. The animal was to be forwarded here. When Tospy arrived, it turned out that a male had been sent for company.

"I want to call him Turvey," said Mrs. Tufty.

Among the awards she held was the Distinguished Service Award of the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped in recognition of her articles promoting hiring of the handicapped.

Survivors include two sons, Harold Jr., of Washington and James, of Honolulu, and a brother, former Michigan governor Murray D. Van Wagoner of Birmingham, Mich.

ESTHER VAN WAGONER TUFTY

(By Kenneth M. Scheibel)

The tyranny of words . . . stifles . . . accurate portrait of the life of Esther Van Wagoner Tufty.

No one word, or series of words and phrases strung together, can frame a precise picture of this human, talented, warm, compassionate and fun loving lady we knew and loved as "The Duchess."

But maybe—just maybe—one of the tiniest of the words in our language comes closer than any other in a one-word portrait: b-i-g.

The Duchess was big in her plan of life. She was big in her goals and desires. She was big in accomplishments, recognition, reputation, ideals. She was big in her hopes for herself, her family, and friends—and her beloved United States of America. And she was big in her perceptions of humankind—what it ought to do, what it ought to be to make the world better.

And if her favorite politician, official, friend, relative, or cause, foundered and failed, she fussed and fumed, sniffed and snorted, put a fresh sheet of paper in her battered typewriter—and turned, with new hope, new optimism, to a new chapter of endeavor.

Outwardly, the Duchess always seemed to have a rosy outlook on life. Her boisterous manner and hearty guffaws roared out through her beloved capital city wherever her nose for news or social inclinations took her. And her fun-loving manner and breezy style went with her to far-flung trouble spots of the world.

For all of her warmth, charm, joviality, the Duchess was the ultimate professional in journalism. She hewed tightly to her role as the amiable skeptic—of the people, places, things, she wrote about. But her criticism was constructive, not destructive. Thus; she was a builder—not one, as the saying goes, who always tried to kick the barn door down.

Generosity was another of the Duchess' great virtues. She took great pains to help young people get started in journalism. Esther was never to busy, in her busy, busy years, to counsel, cajole, praise, and persuade. And if someone was a bit down and out, the Duchess managed to find a few dollars in her cash box.

Esther was a person of many deep beliefs. One was that basically human beings are good. She felt very deeply that the underdog, the underprivileged, deserved a break. And much of her time and energies was spent to this end.

The Duchess' list of achievements is testament to her hard, hard work. She loved her profession. It honored her. With the hard work she had fun, let others share it. She felt that was part of being a journalist.

Whatever she did—writing a story, giving a party, cooking a meal, raising a family—she did . . . with class. There was no holding back, no being niggardly, restrained, halfway. She gave life all she had—gave it big, with style, fervor, all the strength and drive she drew from her Dutch ancestry.

And life gave back to her—recognition, warmth, love and respect of friends, family, colleagues . . . big. As a journalist, the Duchess knocked heads with the grubbiness and sordidness . . . disappointment . . . that go with the job. But her own conduct and demeanor were dignified, straightforward, regal . . . majestic.

The magnificence of the Duchess' life and elegance of her soul, the simplicity and sweetness of her spirit . . . mark her as one of God's finest creations. And if she sinned or made mistakes, they were sins or mistakes of commission, not omission. To sit idly by and simply do nothing to right wrongs was abhorrent to her. When you were right, she told you so. When you were wrong, she made that very plain, too . . . in earthy, forceful terms.

One always felt much better whenever they encountered the Duchess. It was simply impossible to brood, or be unhappy, for very long . . . in her presence. Always . . quick to praise, slow to criticize . . . a kind word, a pat on the back . .

She would rather trust than doubt, rather have faith then disbelieve, would rather commend . . than castigate. And if someone let her down, brought disappointment or bitterness, she tried to keep the hurt to herself. If there was a mean bone in her body, nasty through in her head, her resentment was hard to find.

The Duchess would rather lift up than beat down. She looked for and found . . the good in people . . always believing good outweighted bad. Her secret weapon for success was . . the kind word, deed, thoughtful note or phone call. And an understanding heart—for whomever needed it, whether he or she was in high place or low. Kindness, not the curse, was her style.

Kings and queens, princes and presidents were intrigued by her grace, comfortable in her presence—treated her as equal. And because she had the unique ability to win the respect and trust of people in high station and low—she advanced and brought great credit to her profession of journalism. Not for Esther Van Wagoner Tufty, to rant and rail if journalism or its practitioners at times attained a frowsy, tattered, or tarnished image. The Duchess' work, professionalism, and drive, brought credit, honor, dignity. Esther knew many Presidents, called some by their first name. They looked up to her.

The true meaning of the Duchess' life will be a long time coming into sharp focus. But we know already that she was important to all of us—not only for what she was—but for what she taught us about ourselves. She helped us be—better than we could be.

The Duchess took lots of hard knocks. She went through the mill. She paid her dues. Life was no big bowl of cherries.

Esther competed, very effectively, in a rough and tumble business. She asked no special favor. She beat the bushes for business in the best competitive style. She knew what it was to meet a payroll. She could be tough, but she was not hard, vengeful or cruel. As the years advanced so did the Duchess' health problems. She met them with optimism, courage, steadfastness—and stayed at her typewriter through recurring travail.

With the knocks and bumps and setbacks, the Duchess kept her sparkle. She stayed the course. She kept the faith. She fought the good fight. She never tried to be anything but what she was—a hard working dedicated, journalist—but much more—a friend, a neighbor, a mother, a woman—completely feminine.

This tiny tribute, this paean of praise, to a big, great, grand human being focused on the elegance, style, wit, charm and warmth the Duchess unstintingly gave the world in which she lived. And if the world in which she lived . . . was not the perfect place she might have wanted it to be . . . it was far less imperfect . . . . when she left it than when she found it.

For she was a wondrous woman who left us a legacy: keep the faith, with a smile on your face.

It is right that we grieve that the Duchess is gone. It is also right that we rejoice the more that she lived.

As memories fade and recollections blur, pray let us remember one thing above all others about Esther Van Wagoner Tufty:

She was a great, big, bright ray of sunshine in our lives. And every man, woman and child upon whom she cast her glow gained new luster by her light.

SALT II AND SOVIET TREATY VIOLATIONS

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Foreign Affairs Newsletter for June 1986 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

SALT II AND SOVIET TREATY VIOLATIONS

Because of Soviet treaty violations, the President has said he will no longer base decisions on U.S. strategic forces on compliance with SALT II limits. His decision rests on three key charges: Soviet encryption of ballistic missile test data; the SS-25 missile; and the Krasnoyarsk radar. A closer look reveals that these charges are not the clear violations the President suggests.

Encryption: The SALT II Treaty prohibits encryption, or encoding, of ballistic missile test data when it "impedes verification." The U.S. charges that the Soviets have violated SALT II because their extensive encryption prevents verification of critical performance aspects of Soviet missile tests. The Soviets deny they have encrypted essential signals, and have offered to supply necessary data if the U.S. will specify which signals it needs. The U.S. has rejected this offer because to do so would reveal too much about our intelligence capabilities. Our refusal, however, denies the Soviets the information they say they need to comply with SALT II.

Encryption is not an open and shut case of a Soviet violation. Rather, treaty language is not as precise as it should be, and we should continue to press our concerns in the Standing Consultative Commission (SCC) established by the treaty to resolve disputes.

The SS-25 Missile: SALT II Limited both the U.S. and the Soviets to only one "new type" of intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM). The treaty also barred testing or deployment of any ICBM whose reentry vehicle (RV) weight is less than 50 percent of the throw weight (the total weight a missile can lift) of the missile, a provision designed to prevent the rapid addition of warheads to those missiles.

The U.S. charges that the Soviet SS-25 violates SALT II because it is a second "new type" rather than a permitted modernization of the SS-13 as claimed by the Soviets. The U.S. claims that the SS-25's throw weight exceeds that of the SS-13 by more than the 5 percent permitted in SALT II. The U.S. also charges that the SS-25 violates the SALT prohibition on an ICBM whose RV is less than 50 percent of missile throw weight.

The Soviets say the U.S. has understated the throw weight of the SS-13 and overstated the SS-25's throw weight. They claim the U.S. incorrectly excludes a guidance system and penetration aids in its SS-13 throw weight estimate, but includes test equipment not present in the normal SS-25 deployment in its SS-25 throw weight estimate. Accordingly they claim that the SS-25 is within the 5 percent variation permitted by treaty. Moreover, they maintain that if the test equipment is removed from the SS-25, its RV exceeds 50 percent of throw weight and is not a SALT II violation.

The SALT II provisions defining "new type" ICBMs are complicated, ambiguous, and subject to interpretation. Instead of stating that we have tough differences on the SS-25, the Administration has charged the Soviets with a clear violation. But I believe there is still room for substantive discussion in the SCC to try to resolve these differences.

Krasnovarsk radar: This radar relates to Soviet compliance with the Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty, but the President has chosen to use it as one of his arguments against SALT II.

Large phased array radars are essential components of ABM systems. They can perform sophisticated tracking with great accuracy at ranges of several thousand miles. The ABM Treaty prohibits the construction of these radars for nation-wide ABM purposes or for ICBM early warning except at locations along the periphery of the national territory and oriented outward. Phased array radars are permitted in the ABM treaty for space tracking and intelligence gathering.

The U.S. charges that the location of the Krasnovarsk radar 800 miles inland is an ABM violation. The Soviets insist that the radar's purpose is space tracking and verification, not early warning or ABM defense as the U.S. suggests. Controversy arises because one radar can be used for several purposes. While the Treaty permits large phased array radars for some purposes and not others, it spells out no clear criteria for distinguishing between radars or regulating them.

The two sides may be moving closer to resolving this issue. Ambassador Nitze recently stated that he felt Krasnoyarsk was an early warning rather than ABM radar. This would still be a technical treaty violation, but it would have less military significance. The Soviets have offered to clear up ambiguities in the ABM treaty and to halt construction at Krasnoyarsk if the US does likewise at two of its phased array radar sites. They have shown some flexibility, and our diplomacy should exploit it.

The key question is if the overall evidence on Soviet violations warrants abandonment of SALT II limits. I believe the answer is no for the following reasons: (1) We cannot say there have been unequivocal Soviet arms control treaty violations. There have been selected instances in which the Soviets have pushed ambiguous treaty provisions to, and perhaps beyond, the limit. There is no doubt the US intends to do or is doing the same in some areas: (2) There is no definitive evidence that the Soviets are breaking out of SALT II or any other treaty. They have taken many steps to comply with SALT, and the US admits that many compliance issues hold little if any military significance; (3) The real lesson is that we need greater precision in drafting future agreements and details on verification; and (4) Aggressive diplomacy in the SCC can help us try to resolve compliance issues. We know this because three previous Administrations had successes in the SCC.

Charges of Soviet treaty violations are serious. They must be handled with accuracy because, if exaggerated, they will destroy prospects for a new arms agreement and undermine all existing agreements. How they are resolved will help determine the future of arms control.

LEGISLATION PROVIDING AN ADDITIONAL EXEMPTION FOR THE DEAF

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to provide an additional exemption from income for tax purposes for deaf individuals. The exemption would apply generally to deaf taxpayers, a deaf spouse of a taxpayer, or a deaf dependent of a taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker, under present law, each taxpayer is allowed certain exemptions from income. In general, each taxpayer is allowed a personal exemption and an exemption for a spouse, and an exemption for dependents. For tax year 1986, the exemption is $1,080, and is increased every year by a cost of living allowance generally equal to the increase in inflation.

In addition, elderly taxpayers or their elderly spouses are entitled to an elderly exemption, and blind individuals or their blind spouses are entitled to a blindness exemption. The elderly and blindness exemption amounts are also equal to $1,080 for tax year 1986.

Both the House and Senate tax reform bills make numerous changes to the personal exemption. Under the House bill, the personal exemption for each individual, individual's spouse and dependent is increased to $2,000, and indexed for inflation beginning in 1987. The House bill also repeals the elderly and blindness exemption. The House bill does, however, increase the standard deduction by $600 for each elderly individual and each blind individual. Under the Senate bill, the personal exemption is increased to $1,900 in 1987 and $2,000 in 1988. The exemption is also indexed for inflation beginning in 1988. Like the House bill, the Senate bill repeals the elderly and blindness exemption, but raises the standard deduction by $600.

Mr. Speaker, the additional needs of deaf individuals and the families of deaf individuals should be obvious. These individuals often have large medical bills, require special and expensive schooling or training, and need special medical devices, An additional exemption for deaf individuals is justifiable and necessary.

My legislation recognizes this need and would amend the Internal Revenue Code to provide an additional exemption for a deaf taxpayer, a deaf spouse of a taxpayer and for a deaf dependent of a taxpayer. The exemption amount would be $600, in line with the general principles of the House and Senate bill. As under present law, the exemption would be indexed for inflation.

The bill defines "deafness" as the inability of an individual to hear or receive spoken language except through other sense organs by means such as lip reading, sign language, finger spelling or reading.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this legislation is necessary and meritorious. Although I am particularly aware of the needs of the deaf because one of the finest institutions for education of the deaf is in my district, I believe that my colleagues share my concern and I urge them to cosponsor this legislation. Although some may argue that this season on tax reform is an inappropriate time to be considering additional revenue losses in the tax laws, I would argue that there is no more appropriate time. One of the main reasons for tax reform is equity in our tax laws. My bill provides equity for an important and, sadly, often neglected segment of our society: the deaf. I urge support for the bill.

A TRIBUTE TO CAPT. GRAYSON "PAPA BEAR" KENNEY

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in tribute to a man whose courage and contributions during the turbulent civil right's movement of the 1960's did much to improve race relations on Maryland's Eastern Shore. I speak of Capt. Grayson "Papa Bear" Kenney, the first black ever hired by the Salisbury Police Department who has retired after 24 years of outstanding and much decorated service.

Indeed, Captain Kenney's fierce determination in the face of widespread, institutionalized bigotry stands as a symbol of a Nation unwilling to tolerate continued injustices imposed on the basis of color. It took a person with a cast-iron will to withstand the constant and sometimes overwhelming prejudice faced by blacks breaking into exclusively white vocations in the early 1960's. Clearly, Captain Kenney deserves much credit for the restructuring of black-white relations in a police department that Kenney claims now protects people's rights more and better than ever.

At a time when prejudice was more the rule than the exception, Captain Kenney had to cope with a white public that often refused to accept and respect a black police officer. For Kenney, however, he says "it got to be a challenge. I just kept on doing my job and didn't create any problems." In fact, Captain Kenney has long since forgiven many of the prejudicial acts committed against him as simple misunderstanding between the races. By surviving those early years, he eventually won the respect and friendship of some of the older officers he described as most prejudiced. And, despite differences over the years, Kenney said that his superiors always backed up his arrests and judgments as a police officer.

"I would do it over," said Kenney. "I just hope that in some way I contributed something to the city," He clearly contributed to the image of Salisbury, MD, in the summer of 1963 when, after race riots had ripped through nearby Cambridge, Life magazine ran a story titled "Thirty Miles Divide Folly and Reason." Included was a picture of the young black officer directing traffic, supposedly showing better race relations there.

Kenney, who is also the proud bearer of the Bronze Star for service as a medic during the Korean war, has been asked to serve with the Wicomico County Chapter of the NAACP, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

So, Mr. Speaker, I proudly salute Capt. Grayson "Papa Bear" Kenney for his remarkable contributions to the civil rights movement and for his 24 years of outstanding service as a police officer on the distinguished Salisbury Police Force.

RETIREMENT OF MISS MARY R. McGRATH FROM THE SPRINGFIELD PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM

HON. EDWARD P. BOLAND

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, today it is with mixed emotions I recognize the recent retirement of one of the finest educators in the history of the city of Springfield and State of Massachusetts, Miss Mary R. McGrath. June 30, 1986, marked her last day of service to the people of Springfield after 39 years in the Springfield Public School System.

Mary McGrath began her teaching career in September 1947 at Elias Brookings School where she remained until September 1959, when she was transferred to Washington School. She was named principal of Samuel Bowles Elementary School in April 1961, and remained in that position until her retirement. In 1986, she received the Thomas Passios Outstanding Principal Award for Massachusetts, and will be the recipient of the State's National Distinguished Principal Award. When her retirement was announced, Springfield School Superintendent Thomas Donahoe paid tribute to her as "one of the finest professionals I've ever encountered in my career. I have heard nothing but praise from parents, the community, teachers, and students about the way she performs all the tasks of a principalship. She works with grace, love, understanding, and competence. We'll miss her very much."

Congress join me in wishing him the best of luck in his endeavors.

and memories of elementary school can have the greatest impact on a young life. It is in elemetary school that one is introduced to English, math, and the proper way to interact with other children. Future performance in school and in life can be profoundly influenced by this early experience. The caring, compassion, and understanding that an elementary schoolteacher must bring to her profession is considerable, but necessary, if her students are to feel good about education and themselves. For 39 years, Mary McGrath gave of herself to thousands of children, and helped them discover the learning process, and the world available to them because of it. Her impact on their lives has been, and will continue to be, immeasurable.

I would like to join with every citizen of the city of Springfield, and the educational community in Massachusetts, in congratulating Mary McGrath upon her retirement, and wishing her the best of luck in her future endeavors. We will miss her very much.

EAGLE SCOUT RICHARD E. LISAK

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I call to the attention of my colleagues an exemplary young citizen, Richard E. Lisak. Richard will be recognized this August for achieving the highest rank in Scouting, the "Eagle Scout."

In becoming an Eagle Scout, Richard will join the ranks of quite a select group. The individual tasks which he had to complete are impressive alone. They include acts which challenged him on every facet of his personality—mental, physical, psychological, and more. Yet this accomplishment becomes even more notable when it is looked at cumulatively. That is, the entire sum of achievements and the perseverance of character they demanded illustrate just what a high caliber of a young man Richard is.

In today's society, our youth are truly bombarded with a variety of lifepaths to choose from. While the freedom of choice is in itself good, too often we hear of young people who are led astray by the ignorance of their years to a lifestyle they do not deserve. It is always refreshing to recognize a young man who has not only chosen a constructive way of life but excels at it too. Though some credit should be given to his family and Scout leaders for providing support, Richard today knows that he can participate in society in a manner that will benefit himself as well as his community.

The achievement of attaining the rank of Eagle Scout lays an excellent base for a productive future. I'm sure my fellow Members of

Mr. Speaker, perhaps more than at any other level of formal education, the lessons

MICHIGAN NINTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT QUESTIONNAIRE RESULTS

HON. GUY VANDER JAGT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity to share with you and my colleagues the results of the annual legislative questionnaire from the Ninth District of Michigan.

The results of the survey indicate a strong support for the President's strategic defense initiative program and tax reform proposal. Additionally, the majority of the Ninth District respondents believe America is stronger and more respected in the world today than it was 5 years ago.

My special thanks are sent to the nearly 10,000 constituents who completed the surveys. Such an overwhelming response was greatly appreciated.

1986 CONGRESSIONAL QUESTIONNAIRE RESULTS

1. Do you favor a constitutional amendment to avoid future deficits (except in wartime) once the budget is balanced? Yes, 88%; No, 12%.

2. If you think the budget should be balanced, how should Congress eliminate the deficit? Reduce Spending, 73%; Freeze Spending, 14%; Raise Taxes, 5%; Other, 8%.

3. This year defense spending will comprise about 29% of the Federal budget. For next year, President Reagan has asked Congress to increase defense spending while others want to reduce it. What should Congress do about defense spending? Increase, 16%; Decrease, 33%; Maintain, 51%.

4. Should it be an objective of Federal farm policy to help family farmers remain in operation? Yes, 58%; No, 42%.

5. Do you think the U.S. should help nations in Central America which are under attack from Soviet-backed internal military forces? Yes, 71%; No, 29%.

6. Do you think America is stronger and more respected in the world today than it was five years ago? Yes, 58%; No, 42%.

7. Do you believe that the United States should impose the same restrictions on imports from its foreign trading partners that they impose on U.S. exports? Yes, 90%; No, 10%.

8. Do you support the President's Strategic Defense Initiative (Star Wars)? Yes, 62%; No, 38%.

9. In general, do you approve of the President's tax reform proposal? Yes, 67%; No, 33%.

11. Should the government be concerned about present liability insurance rates? Yes, 88%; No, 12%.

12. Do you favor the total deregulation of the natural gas industry? Yes, 46%; No, 54%.

A TRIBUTE TO DAVID KAPLAN—"MR. CENSUS"

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, during recess those of us familiar with our Nation's census were deeply saddened by the recent passing of Mr. David Kaplan. Mr. Kaplan spent nearly 40 years as a loyal and dedicated employee of the Census Bureau contributing much of his efforts to census taking and turning statistics into history. To his former coworkers and to the statistical community he was know as "Mr. Census."

As you are aware, every 10 years our Nation undertakes a major Federal project known as the census. The census is mandated by the Constitution to determine the number of seats a State ought to have in the House of Representatives. The census also serves as the statistical foundation for our Nation's public policymaking and for proper distribution of Federal funds.

Much of Mr. Kaplan's career was devoted to our national census. His career with the Census Bureau began in 1940 as clerk. He worked his way up to become head of the Occupation Statistics Division for the 1950 census and in the early 1960's he became Assistant Chief of Population Division. By the time he was appointed coordinator for the 1970 census, Mr. Kaplan had worked throughout the Bureau developing questionnaires, organizing research programs, balancing budgets, and tabulating responses. He was awarded the Department of Commerce Gold Medal, the Department's highest award, for his work, on the 1970 census. He also took part in the preparations for the 1980 census, but in 1979 he decided to retire. Mr. Kaplan gave a sense of continuity in the management of the census, and according to a former coworker, he gave the census personality and animation.

Those who worked with him at the Census Bureau as well as the statistical community felt a great loss on June 30 when Mr. Kaplan passed away. Mr. Kaplan will be sorely missed by us all.

UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. PAUL B. HENRY

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Ukrainian people on the occasion of the 45th anniversary of the restoration of their independence on June 30, 1941. Though this proud nation is now under Soviet domination, her history goes back many years.

When the 1917 revolution broke out in the Tsarist Russian Empire, the Ukrainians at once set up their own government and proclaimed the Ukranine an independent state in a solemn declaration by the Ukrainian Parliament on January 22, 1918. Ukrainia's independence was recognized de jure by the Central Powers and de facto by Britain, France, and many other nations. All the Ukrainian people wanted was to live in freedom and peace as equals with their neighbors.

However, the new totalitarian Russian Empire, restored by the Communist [Bolshevik] Russian Party, launched an aggressive war against Ukrainia. After a 3-year war for independence, the Ukrainian armies were defeated. The Ukrainians, however, did not give up their fight, and resistance groups continued to wage an underground struggle against the foreign occupation powers. The most famous of these underground freedom fighters were members of the Organization of Ukrainian Nationalists [OUN], led by Stepan Bandera.

When the Russo-German war broke out in June 1941, the OUN utilized the unsettled conditions of the war between Hitler and Stalin to make a bid for Ukrainia's independence. On June 30, 1941, Ukrainian underground fighters occupied strategic points in the capital of the West Ukraine, Lviw. A representative assembly of the most prominent Ukrainian leaders from all walks of life issued a Proclamation of the Restoration of Ukrainia's Independence. A provisional government was appointed from representatives of various political parties. A prominent OUN leader, Mr. Yaroslav Stetsko, became Prime Minister in the provisional government. The proclamation received enthusiastic support of the Ukrainian people.

The Germans refused to recognize Ukrainia's independence, and issued an ultimatum demanding immediate cancellation of the Proclamation of Ukrainia's Independence and the disbandment of the government. When the Ukrainians refused to comply, Gestapo reprisals ensued. Government members, including Mr. Stetsko, were arrested and thrown into concentration camps.

With the collapse of the German war machine in the East, the Ukrainians were forced to escalate their struggle in a new war against Soviet Russia, on into the 1950's. The resistance forces were never defeated on the field of battle, but decentralized and melted away into the underground, where they continue their struggle for freedom. As Americans, we must never forget the importance of freedom and human rights for all people, as we join with the proud Ukrainians in commemoration of the restoration of their independence.

A CIVIL WAR SAGA—DELANO MOREY, OF KENTON, OHIO

HON. MICHAEL G. OXLEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, we have just experienced a very patriotic time in our Nation's history with the July 4th celebration of the 100th birthday of the Statue of Liberty. People throughout my congressional district in Ohio and nationwide felt a great urge of pride in our country and gratitude for the many freedoms we enjoy.

In the aftermath of this memorable experience, I would like to share with my colleagues the story of a man from Hardin County in my district who compiled a most impressive military career during the Civil War. Delano Morey was a brave Ohioan, a soldier who suffered and survived to preserve our great Nation for future generations.

Following is the account of Delano Morey's life which appeared in 1911 in the "Kenton News Republican":

REMARKABLE WAR RECORD

Delano Morey, who died at his home in the city yesterday morning, had a most remarkable war record. He served in the Federal Army during the Civil War and underwent hardship after hardship for the glory and honor of his flag and country. His most remarkable experience was on the field of Bull Run.

In this bloody and stubbornly fought battle, Mr. Morey was twice badly wounded and was left on the field for dead. He was reported on the company's records as killed, as all thought he had been. His wounds were very bad ones, and he suffered intense pain both from them and from exposure as he remained on the battlefield. Mr. Morey was left lying on the field for 10 days without attendance and he was in a most famished condition when assistance finally came. His wounds were dressed, and he was returned to his regiment, where the records and books were changed regarding his death.

HEART RENDING SCENES

Mr. Morey in speaking of the terrible scenes and surroundings following this fierce battle, during the ten days in which he remained among the dead, the dying and near dead, said that the pitiful and most painful conditions were far from being describable as no human tongue could tell of the terrible suffering that was endured, of the moans of the dying men scattered about, the prayers being uttered asking that the sufferers be relieved of their suffering, the cries of the wounded, and the patient waiting of those seriously wounded, waiting for help which it seemed would never come.

The nights were cold and chilly, the days were made very hot by the scorching sun, and the wounded men were forced to endure these two extremes for days, while many were dying about them all the time.

HELP ARRIVED JUST IN TIME

On the tenth day, Mr. Morey saw at a distance of a quarter of a mile a wagon with men gathering up those who were still alive. He was almost too weak to raise his hand, but mustered enough strength to lift his hat, and held it up until it was noticed by those bringing relief. He was picked up, placed in a wagon with five other wounded soldiers and hauled over a rough road to Washington, a distance of eighteen miles. Two of the men died on the road, and two more died a few minutes after reaching Washington.

Mr. Morey's wounds were attended to, and he soon regained enough strength to be sent to the front again, where he joined his regiment and fought in several more important engagements.

PRISONER AT LIBBY

At the battle of Chancellorsville, he was taken prisoner and placed in Libby Prison, Richmond, where he was held for eighteen days, at the end of which time he was paroled and returned to City Point, an exchange of prisoners between the Unionists and Confederates, placing him back again in the Union lines. He participated in the battles of Lookout Mountain and Mission Ridge, besides minor engagements. Later at Chattanooga he reinlisted for another period of three years. Soon after he was granted a furlough of thirty days which he spent in the North, returning to the front at the expiration of that time.

He was with General Hooker and General Sherman on the famous march through Georgia to the sea, taking part in about three months of continual and sharp fighting during the campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta. Mr. Morey was at Raleigh, North Carolina, when General Jackson surrendered to General Sherman. In speaking at the end of this wonderful campaign, he stated that the Union soldiers divided their hard tack with the thirty thousand Rebels and then told them to go home and be good citizens.

After the return of the troops to the North at the close of the war, Mr. Morey took part in the grand review in Washington of the Union Armies, and was soon after given his honorable discharge and he returned to his home in the Buckeye State.

Mr. Morey's experience in the war were among the most thrilling that are recorded. He was a true soldier, one who was not afraid to do his duty and to suffer for a good cause. In his death, Kenton is deprived of one of its highly respected citizens and a man of excellent worth. His death brings deep sorrow to his innumerable friends.

The funeral will be held Thursday afternoon at the home at 1:30, with Rev. Ira Richards in charge of the services. The G.A.R.'s of which Mr. Morey was a member, will attend the funeral in a body.

DAIRY PROMOTION BOARD RESULTS ARE SUPER

HON. VIN WEBER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, throughout our Nation last month the dairy industry observed the 50th anniversary of June Dairy Month.

As most of my colleagues would realize, the dairy industry is vitally important to my district and to our State. But, it is far more than of parochial interest.

If you will stop and think about it for a minute, with the exception of the air we breathe, milk is the one thing all of us have right from the start. In one form or the other dairy products become one of the major food groups that help provide healthy growth throughout our lives. According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Americans get more than 70 percent of their calcium requirements from dairy products. And, for most of us there is nothing in the world as refreshing as a cold glass of milk, a big scoop of our favorite flavor of ice cream, or a serving of one of the many cheeses we can buy in any store.

In 1983, Congress established the National Dairy Promotion and Research Board to give added emphasis to getting Americans to consume more dairy products.

While many of us take milk and other dairy products for granted and enjoy all the wholesomeness they offer, the truth is that dairy products have their very major detractors.

Dairy products are good and I am pleased that the efforts of the National Dairy Board, which are paid for by the dairy farmers themselves, are beginning to produce positive results.

I am submitting for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a news release issued by the National Dairy Board on the occasion of its second anniversary of operation.

DAIRY BOARD REPORTS BIGGEST GAIN IN COMMERCIAL DAIRY PRODUCTS USE IN MORE THAN 20 YEARS

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Top officials of the National Dairy Promotion and Research Board reported today that dairy product commercial use has increased significantly since the industry's expanded national promotional program began two years ago.

"This is the first time in more than twenty years we have seen a major upturn in dairy products use," said Ivan K. Strickler of Iola, Kansas, Board chairman.

Strickler reported that commercial use of total milk has increased seven percent since 1983. He added that cheese use was up 12 percent and butter use increased 5.7 percent.

"Of all the dairy products available to the consumer," Strickler said, "only non-fat dry milk use did not make significant gains.

"We believe the Board's promotional efforts, combined with those of other dairy promotion groups around the country, have made the difference."

The Board's advertising and sales promotion budget for fiscal 1986, the first full year of its promotional program, was $66.4 million with audiences targeted for use of fluid milk, cheese, butter, ice cream, and dairy calcium.

A major part of the advertising budget promotes dairy products as a major source of calcium. According to U.S. Dept. of Agriculture figures, about 75 percent of the U.S. population gets its calcium from this source.

Joseph J. Westwater, Board chief executive officer, said the group's research projects also are beginning to produce promising results.

"We have 51 nutrition projects underway studying calcium's role throughout the life cycle," Westwater said. "The researchers are among the best in the country, and we think they soon will have some positive new results about calcium's role in controlling or preventing hypertension, osteoporosis, and colon cancer."

Westwater said the Board also is proud of its national osteoporosis awareness campaign which in the last year has reached millions of people from coast to coast.

The Board is holding its annual meeting May 21-23 at the Arlington Hyatt Hotel.

Established by Congress through the Dairy and Tobacco Adjustment Act of 1983, the Board began operating in May 1984. It is financed by a mandatory 15 cents per hundredweight assessment on all milk produced in the contiguous 48 states and marketed commercially by dairy farmers.

THE BUDGET COMPROMISE

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the Budget Committees of the House and Senate have worked long and hard to reach a compromise on the budget and I commend them.

But I fear that the result of their efforts is simply a mirror of what we've seen in past years.

Under this budget, we will almost certainly end the next fiscal year with a deficit of about $150 billion.

Why? Because the Congress and the President cannot agree that the only approach to really bring these deficits under control is one that includes both spending restraint and additional revenues. The President calls for increased defense spending and continues to threaten to veto any bill that contains new revenue.

That is why a budget with a deficit that will probably reach $150 billion is called a success. But the deficit is too high—we know that.

This budget puzzle cannot be solved by Congress if the President will not compromise on revenues.

Mr. President, why can't revenues from closing tax loopholes be used in part to reduce the deficit? Wouldn't that strengthen the country? Mr. President, without your willingness to work seriously with us on both spending restraint and additional revenue, we will add another one-half trillion dollars to the Federal debt in the next several years. It is irresponsible for us to saddle the American people with another one-half trillion dollars in debt above the current $2 trillion debt.

So my colleagues, I know this budget is the product of a lot of hard work, but the deficit is still far too high. The fiscal policy stemming from the President's intransigence is still irresponsible.

A TRIBUTE TO KHYL S. SMEBY, COMMUNITY LEADER

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize a gentleman who is very involved in the growing communities of southern California, Mr. Khyl S. Smeby. Mr. Smeby is the executive vice president in Bank of America's administrative-executive group, headquartered in Los Angeles. In this capacity he supervises the bank's community relations efforts with numerous civic, educational, cultural, and political organizations throughout southern California. He also is an administrative officer in the bank's southern division. Mr. Smeby joined the bank in 1939. His dedication and service to the banking community is reflected by his many achievements.

In addition to Mr. Smeby's professional success, he is very active in the community. He serves as director of the California Museum of Science and Industry, Golden State Minority Foundation, and Independent Colleges of Southern California. He also is past president and currently serves as chief financial officer of the Greater Los Angeles Visitors and Convention Bureau. Mr. Smeby also participates in the Community Television of Southern California [KCET], the Directors Council of Orthopedic Hospital, Hollywood Presbyterian Medical Center, the Pasadena Foundation, the Performing Arts Council of the Music Center, the USC School of Pharmacy, and the Weingart Center Foundation.

In 1980, he was elected to be the chairman of the board of trustees for the University of La Verne, where he received a bachelor of arts degree in economics. He also graduated from the Graduate School of Credit and Financial Management at Stanford University and the Executive Management Program at the Claremont Graduate School. He also holds a doctorate in humanities.

Mr. Smeby's involvement in these and many other activities benefits the community enormously. In February 1986, he had the honor of receiving the first Humanitarian Award presented by the Alcoholism Information Center. Indeed, this is a reflection of his faithful support to the community.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my fellow colleagues to extend their best wishes to Mr. Smeby's outstanding contribution to a better future for southern California.

IRA FEINBERG CELEBRATED THE FOURTH IN A SPECIAL WAY

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Mr. Ira Feinberg of Lyndhurst, NJ. On July 6, Ira Feinberg gave away 700 free car washes. Ira has made this generous donation on the Fourth of July weekend for many years at his Tip Top Deluxe Brushless Car Wash in North Arlington, NJ.

Ira began his annual celebration of the Fourth hoping to inspire other businesses to do the same, thereby stimulating business throughout northern New Jersey. He felt that free car washes would be a patriotic and joyous way to repay the citizens or Bergen County for their business and support over the years.

An example or Ira's belief in this great country is the case of Franco Saavedra. Ira sponsored Franco to come to the United States 6½ years ago. Ira's assistance to Franco signifies the true meaning of the Fourth of July and the Declaration of Independence it commemorates.

On July 3, Franco Saavedra will be nationalized in Morristown, NJ as part of this Nation's celebration of the Fourth of July. He will realize his dream of being an American and living with all of it's freedoms. Ira has opened up our great Nation to another eager contributor in Franco.

Ira epitomizes the energy and charisma of America. He is the kind of citizen that has made our country so successful for over 200 years. The United States needs people like Ira Feinberg if we are to remain at the helm of the world. His spirit and dedication deserve to be recorded in history as part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

It is with great honor and pleasure that I pay tribute to Ira Feinberg and wish him many more productive years in the future.

CHILE, THE UNITED STATES, AND NICARAGUA

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, a confidential letter to the Secretary of State from the American Minister in Santiago, Chile, was recently brought to my attention:

FEBRUARY 7, 1910.

[Confidential]

The Honorable,
The Secretary of State,
Washington, DC.

SIR: In a very informal conversation with the Minister of Foreign Affairs on the subject Central America, I gathered that in the main he sympathizes to a certain extent with the action of the United States in regard to Nicaragua; that he considers the Central American Republics, with the exception of Costa Rica, a worthless lot, and that it is in the interests of humanity to control them.

MICHIGAN HIGH SCHOOL BASEBALL CHAMPIONS

HON. DENNIS M. HERTEL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 14, 1986

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the accomplishments of the Harper Woods High School baseball team of Harper Woods, MI, the Class D State Championship Team of 1986.

It has been quite a year for the Harper Woods team. Completing the season with an outstanding record of 19 wins and 9 losses, the team won their first State championship in its 35-year history. In fact, the entire athletics program at Harper Woods High has risen to a new level of excellence this year with the football and basketball teams achieving the best records in their history as well.

Leading the baseball team to victory were Head Coach Ron Smith and his brother, Assistant Coach Roger Smith, both of whom had graduated from Harper Woods High and had played on the school's baseball team themselves. Although this was Ron's first year as head coach and Roger's first year with the team, they have both earned special recognition for their coaching ability and dedication. They helped to inspire a fine team of spirited young men.

The talented and hard-working players of the team were as follows: Frank Lucido, Don Cataldo, Brian Martin, Eric Reitzloff, Jeff Patterson, Darrin Hopp, John Dimic, Derek Schafran, Chris Hild, Dave Nystrom, Jeff Anderman, Ken Lord, Tom Weiss, Keith Keuning, Vince Brinker, and Bob Rach.

Ron Western, the team's statistician, also deserves recognition for his contributions to the success of the team.

A number of the team members won special recognition for their outstanding efforts. John Dimic and Ken Lord were honored by being selected for the All State team; Dave Nystrom and Tom Weiss made the All Regional team; and Bob Rach made the All District team. Ken Lord was also selected for the All State "Dream" team.

Tonight the Harper Woods Community Center will be holding a banquet to honor the Harper Woods High School Championship Baseball Team, an honor which they truly deserve. I congratulate these young men for their accomplishments, and I wish them success in all of their future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO STEVE PFISTER

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 26, 1986

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my fellow colleague, Mr. MYERS from Indiana, in wishing Steve Pfister all the best in his new position with the private sector. Steve has given great service to Congress over the years and his reputation is well known on the Hill. I would like to take this time to personally thank him for the attention and assistance he has given to both me and my staff. I feel confident that Steve will succeed in any endeavor he may wish to pursue.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, July 15, 1986, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.
